2. That the article be strengthened by protecting the natives from exploitation by the alienation of lands or the destruction of custom which secures the economic liberty of the people.

Should such amendments as those be adopted and their provisions observed in letter and spirit, none of the sacrifices of the war would have been in vain, for the new world order would have been born. For generations great English patriots of liberal thought have urged both the high obligations and the practical advantage of a complete renunciation of colonial policies based upon the principle of exploitation, but all in vain, for reactionary ministries have successfully resisted their most eloquent pleas for such beneficent reforms. These same reactionaries at Paris were in the saddle, but their victory there will be turned into a defeat, for there has now arisen in England this great liberal party of the masses of the people representing that world-wide movement which must result in the ascendancy of those principles which are consistent with the great process of world evolution through which all men everywhere must at last be uplifted.

As further expressing the views of the British Labor Party toward the treaty—and I would remind you that the British Labor Party is made up not alone of manual laborers and mechanics but of professional and intellectual workers as well—I desire to offer for the RECORD two manifestos recently issued by the leaders of the British Labor Party. I ask that they may be incorporated in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

LABOR AND THE TREATY.

To the EDITOR OF THE MANCHESTER GUARDIAN:

SIR: We, the undersigned, declare our most emphatic repudiation of the action by which Germany has been forced to put her signature to what all sane men know is destined to be a scrap of paper. Germany has been forced to sign a peace pledging herself to hand over enormous indemnities and at the same time to give up those mineral and agricultural resources which alone would have made possible not only the payment of indemnities but the barest sustenance of millions of her own people.

Germany has, in fact, been forced to promise the impossible. Had she not done so, the food supply on which the lives of her people depended would have been ruthlessly cut off. In other words, we put the women and children into the firing line, and the Germans had to give in. One hundred thousand persons, mostly women and children, have already perished since the armistice as a result of the blockade. Our Government was and is prepared to sacrifice countless more, to treat the German or any other recalcitrant nation as one vast Lusitania. In any event one of the first fruits of the peace treaty will be the massacre of babies, who by the cession of cows are to be deprived of their milk. Thousands of others will perish as their fathers find themselves deprived of the means of earning a living.

Labor has had no part in the making of the treaty. It is a settlement opposed to every ideal for which labor stands. Even the league of nations is a league of governments and not of peoples. It must be labor's task to democratize it. Labor all over the world is familiar with the hunger weapon, which for centuries has been used against it by the government classes. For the enforcement of the terms it is to-day being used against the women and innocent children of working people. Labor, with all its power, can, and must, once and for all, put an end to this crime.

Yours, etc.,

ROBERT SMILLIE.
ROBERT WILLIAMS.
C. T. CRAMP.
J. BROMBLEY.
GEORGE LANSBURY.

JUNE 27.

[From the Manchester Guardian, weekly edition, Friday, July 4, 1919.]

BRITISH LABOR LEADERS ON THE PEACE TREATY.

We, the undersigned, desire to emphatically protest against the conditions of the peace treaty submitted to the German Republic. Though we sign this statement in our personal capacity, we are confident that we represent the overwhelming opinion of the labor movement of Great Britain.

In our opinion the proposed treaty of peace is open to the gravest objections from the point of view of labor. As labor, notwithstanding the definite promises given by Mr. Lloyd-George, was not consulted in the framing of its provisions, labor can not be expected to accept responsibility for them.

The treaty was elaborated in secret by an inner ring composed of ministers of a few great powers. It follows the lines of the old secret diplomacy, whose methods have been universally condemned by the democracies.

It violates the pledges given to labor by the statesmen of this country, particularly those given by Mr. Lloyd-George in his speech to the trade-unions on January 5, 1918. We call attention in this regard to the handing over of large populations in the Saar district, in the new Poland, and in other areas to alien governments without consulting their wishes; to the economic ruin planned by commercial rivals against the German people; to their exclusion from the league of nations; to the seizure of all German colonies and stations by the allied and associated Governments; and to the disarmament on the side of the Allies. In all these respects the treaty is a breach of faith with labor.

Further the treaty violates the definite agreement on the basis of which Germany laid down her arms. The Allies agreed to make peace on the basis of the 14 points of President Wilson and the principles contained in his speeches of July 4 and September 27, 1918. This agreement has been treated as a scrap of paper. The treaty constitutes, therefore, a breach of faith with Germany and a serious blow to international morality.

It violates the principles of a peace settlement laid down in the memorandum on war aims adopted by the Labor Party in December, 1917, and confirmed by the resolutions of the international conference at Berne in February, 1919. It is thus a direct defiance of labor opinion throughout the world.

It shows no recognition of the change brought about by the German revolution and the advent of social democracy to power in that country. The German people are compelled by it for a long and indefinite period to do slave labor for foreign capitalistic governments.

So far from making all wars impossible, the treaty contains within it the germs of new conflicts arising out of the grievances of people ruled by alien governments and penalized economically. It thus makes future wars almost inevitable. It creates a condition of unrest and injustice which must make the league of nations, if it survives at all, merely the instrument of imperialist domination. The germ of good which the league undoubtedly contains would thus be rendered sterile.

The treaty, in short, restores the old conditions of the balance of power, and thereby necessitates the maintenance of conscription and of great armaments generally, and in particular it requires an army of occupation for an indefinite period.

We consider it to be the duty of labor to work for the revision of the treaty at the earliest possible moment in order that it may be brought into harmony with the ideals for which the working classes of this country have made such colossal sacrifices.

W. Barber, Bradford Trades Council; Margaret G. Bonfield, National Federation of Women Workers; Fred Bramley, Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen; D. Carmichael, London Trades Council; C. T. Cramp, National Union of Railway Men; Margaret Llewellyn Davies, secretary, Women's Cooperative Guild; T. Gavan Duffy, Cumberland Iron Ore Miners; Joseph F. Duncan, secretary, Scottish Farms Servants' Union; Allen Gee, General Union of Textile Workers; Alex Gossop, National Amalgamated Furnishing Trades Association; Duncan M. Graham, M. P., Hamilton; John Hill, United Society of Boilermakers, Iron and Steel Shipbuilders; George Lansbury, editor, Daily Herald; William Lunn, M. P., Rothwell; Neil Maclean, M. P., Govan; R. Morley, Workers' Union; T. C. Morris, National Union of Railway Men; J. W. Ogden, past president, Trades Union Congress; W. Shaw, Glasgow Trades Council; Robert Smillie, president Miners' Federation of Great Britain; Alf. Smith, secretary, London and Provincial Licensed Vehicle Workers; Philip Snowden, chairman, I. L. P.; Ben C. Spoor, M. P., Bishop Auckland; Robert Williams, secretary, National Transport Workers' Federation; James Winstone, South Wales Miners' Federation.

THE MEANING OF THE WAR.

Mr. FRANCE. We can not hope to solve the large and complex problems of the reconstruction period; we can not formulate any rational plan for the amelioration of present conditions, for the rapid progress of the world toward that state which would warrant some hope of a permanent peace, until we have seriously sought to comprehend the true significance of this war. We face to-day a situation to meet which narrow and materialistic creeds looking to immediate party ends and policies of mere expediency directed to separate and selfish national interests are not enough. We must invoke a profounder political philosophy and seek, as we grope through a veritable world chaos, to lay hold upon a faith which shall disclose the direction of the movement of the everlasting and resistless forces underneath the world. If we seek to interpret the revelation as it is written, not on the imprinted sacred parchments alone, but within the glowing retorts of science, in the ancient tomes of historic and philosophic lore, and on that brilliant-colored, gorgeous, fire-and-sun-illumined manuscript of nature, which, as a ceaselessly unwinding scroll, lies vast expansed before the gaze of all, we can not escape the conviction that if human reason is in harmony with reality, if the human intuitions are capable of catching any vision of the infinite plan, then the purpose of the whole world process must be a steady evolution of all men toward a larger freedom, toward political liberty, making possible intellectual emancipation through education, toward the liberation of the spirits of all men from bondage by the establishment everywhere of conditions conducive to the utmost development and realization of the highest capacities and possibilities of every race and of every individual, toward that civilization which shall comprehend the world, and to which each of all the uplifted and enlightened peoples shall make that rich contribution which shall be the highest product of its own peculiar temperament and genius.

We called this a war of democracy against autocracy. It was a pleasing platitude, but it told at once too little and too much. This has been no war between mere governmental forms. Not governments and nations only, but ideas and ideals have contended. This has been the most violent of all of the manifestations of that age-long conflict between reaction and reform, between the rusty, bloody, iron-bound past and the golden future, between the old ruthless rule and repression by the sword and scepter and that new kingdom of the spirit which shall bring the abundant life and liberty to all men everywhere.

This war has not been what it was designed by the malignant reactionaries of the Old World to be. It was designed to be a security war. It was purposed to make monarchy, aristocracy, dukedoms, feudal estates, colonial expansion, and profitable human exploitation both safe and permanent. It was planned by a few rulers who hated liberty. Emperors dreamed of extending imperial dominions. For example, Nicholas Romanoff, Czar of all the Russias, the mightiest and most cruel of monarchs, cold, heartless, absolute despot of the most despicable government with which the toiling sons of men were ever cursed, seated in all his splendor upon a throne of gold, surrounded by sycophantic courtiers, did not foresee the end. Czar he was, but yet the weak and contemptible tool of cruel, corrupt, and worse than swinish bureaucrats, whose palaces were sties and whose depravities shaped their policies.

Nicholas Romanoff, clothed with all the pomp and circumstance of royalty, "and all the large effects that troop with majesty," dreaming of yet greater power and vaster empire, little thought that from that soil, steeped through the centuries with the blood of innocent men, tortured and slain by the decrees of absolutism, there would so soon spring forth the fragrant flowers and blessed fruits of liberty, and that autocracy in his most sacred and royal person was to drink to the dregs the bitter cup of Siberian exile and of death, which he and his tyrant sires had pressed so remorselessly to the lips of youth and maiden, old men and children, martyred for their love of liberty. The great empires fought to realize imperialistic ambitions, and they struggled until two of the mightiest of them all—Russia and Germany—blinded and bloody, staggered and fell to ruin, while two hundreds of millions of men long enslaved found freedom. But for what did the masses of the people, in the war, contend, and what is it which they now demand?

I invite no controversy on the point, but yet I must believe that of all the millions of the sons of men who offered up their lives upon those crimsoned fields there were but very few who did not feel that they were making holy sacrifice to promote a wider spread of liberty throughout the world. I can not be convinced that there was in the nineteen hundred and fourteenth year after Christ a government or a ministry in all the world which would have marched its armies into battle if within those valiant soldiers' hearts there had not throbbed the faith that they did fight for a larger liberation of mankind.

I grant you that the Russian serfs, little children of centuries of darkness and oppression, enslaved by ignorance and superstition, as they stood in serried ranks gazing up at the shining, sacred icons of their faith held aloft by holy priests before the regiments, did not comprehend it all, but they believed and died, more than a million of them, for conscience and for freedom.

I grant you that the soldiers of the German armies, the only armies in all the history of the world which ever took the field without illiterates in them, were blinded with fanaticism and made a frightful blunder, as they advanced, following for so many months the victorious eagles of the Kaiser, firm in the faith that by their bloody bayonets and dripping sabres and their Kultur salvation to the world must come.

We know the spirit of our men and how they sacrificed for greater liberty and for the whole world's larger opportunity. This has been, to the people, a liberty war, and as men have fought for liberty from governmental oppression, so now in every part of the world they are demanding self-determination and a larger liberation from the compression of such confining and unhappy conditions and circumstances as prevent their true growth and expansion.

This scheme seems to have been designed to prevent the realization of these aspirations.

The two greatest surviving Empires—France, republic in form, imperial in policy and tradition, and Great Britain, shaken, weakened, exhausted, bled white—clutch frantically to save the old order from destruction. France and Great Britain, their rulers and not their peoples being represented at Paris, have devised this plan with which, by appealing to the dire necessity and not to the mere cupidity of Japan, her population crowded to suffocation, by bribing her with the rich Province of Shantung, and by appealing to the lofty idealism of the American people, they now hope to form a new armed coalition of empires of which this Republic will be a member, which coalition will not only be pledged to preserve the old order, the territorial integrity of the empires as they did exist, but also the vast added territory and peoples taken as the spoils of war. Great Britain, France, and now Japan, under the leadership of their present reactionary rulers, desire this imperialistic peace and this coalition, which they will dominate, for the protection of all their vast dominions.

TERRITORIES WHICH WE GUARANTEE.

Under article 10 of the covenant, we undertake to respect and guarantee the title of these great Empires to all their territory, regardless of the character of the title and whether it be justly or unjustly held. It would be well for us before we sign this guarantee to briefly survey the huge holdings of lands and peoples which we take upon ourselves the obligation of preserving. I submit herewith tables showing the principal possessions of the Japanese Empire, of France, and of Great Britain, which I ask to have incorporated in the RECORD as part of my remarks. The tables are well worthy of study.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Japanese Empire.

	Area.	Population.
	Square miles.
Japan, principal islands (1916)	148,756	55,965,291
Korea, deprived of independence (1907)	84,738	16,913,224
Formosa, taken from China (1895)	13,944	3,710,848
Karafuto, taken from Russia (1905)	13,253	95,194
	260,691	76,684,557

Interests in Shantung taken 1919.
Interests in Manchuria, Kwangtung, 1905.
All islands formerly owned by Germany situated north of Equator.

France.

	Acquired.	Area.	Population.
		Square miles.
France		207,054	39,602,258
Andorra		191	5,231
Colonies in Africa:
Algeria	1830–1902	184,474	5,563,828
Sahara		1,544,000	800,000

France—Continued.

	Acquired.	Area.	Population.
		Square miles.
Colonies in Africa—Continued.
Tunis	1881	50,000	1,953,000
Senegal	1637–1889		1,247,000
Upper Senegal and Niger	1893		5,593,000
Guiana	1843	1,478,000	1,812,000
Ivory Coast	1843		1,417,000
Dahomey	1893		911,000
Mauritania	1893		600,000
Congo	1884	669,000	9,000,000
Reunion	1649	970	174,000
Madagascar	1643–1896	228,000	3,512,690
Mayotte	1843	790	97,000
Somali Coast	1864	5,790	208,000
In Asia:
India	1679	196	268,499
Annam	1884
Cambodia	1862
Cochin-China	1861	256,000	16,990,223
Tonking	1854
Laos	1894
In America:
St. Pierre and Miquelon	1635	93	4,652
Guadeloupe	1634	722	212,430
Martinique	1635	385	193,000
Guiana	1626	32,000	49,000
In Oceania:
New Caledonia	1854–1887	7,650	50,600
Tahiti, etc	1841–1881	1,544	30,600
Total colonies		3,449,614	40,702,523
Total controlled by France		3,656,859	80,310,017
Summary:
Asia		256,196	17,268,723
Africa		3,151,024	32,893,513
America		33,200	459,082
Oceania		9,194	81,200

The British Empire.

	Acquired.	Area.	Population.	Character.
		Square miles.
United Kingdom		121,633	46,089,000
Europe:
Gibraltar	1704	2	16,000
Malta	1800	118	224,000
India:
British	1639–1876	1,093,074	244,267,000	Illiterates number about 294,877,000
Feudatory States		709,555	70,889,000
Asia:
Cyprus	1878	3,584	299,000	Mohammedans—56,400.
Aden, Perim, Socotra	1876–1905	10,387	60,000
Ceylon	1795	25,332	4,547,000	Educational system defective.
Straits Settlements	1786–1824	1,600	813,000	Chinese and Malays predominate.
Federated Malay States	1874–1895	27,506	1,150,000
Other Malay States	1885	23,486	970,000
Borneo, Brunei, and Sarawak	1881	77,103	700,000	Savages of low type
Hongkong and Territory	1841	391	529,000	English instruction in schools.
Wei-hai-wei	1898	285	150,000
Australasia:
Australian Commonwealth	1803	2,974,581	4,896,000
Papua	1887	90,540	200,000	Only mission schools.
New Zealand	1840	104,751	1,100,000
Fiji	1874	7,083	166,000	Uncivilized natives.
Tonga, Solomon, and Gilbert Islands	1899	15,000	205,000	Many natives are Christians.
Africa:
Ascension	1815	34	200	European population.
St. Helena	1651	47	3,600
West Africa:
Nigeria	1884–1886	336,080	17,500,000	Still have slaves in southern part.
Gold Coast and Protectorate	1650	80,235	1,500,000	Only about 2,000 Europeans.
Sierra Leone and Protectorate	1787	31,000	1,400,000	Only about 700 whites.
Gambia and Protectorate	1618	4,500	146,000	About 1,500 enrolled pupils in schools.
Mauritius and dependencies	1810	809	384,000	Mostly Indians.
Seychelles	1806	156	24,000	Fairly good educational facilities.
Somaliland	1884–1886	68,000	300,000	Nomadic Mohammedan people.
East Africa Protectorate	1888	246,800	4,040,000	Paganism prevails.

The British Empire—Continued.

	Acquired.	Area.	Population.	Character.
		Square miles.
West Africa—Continued.
Uganda Protectorate..	1888	109,119	2,955,000	Natives about 2,950,000, one-fifth of whom are Christian.
Zanzibar and Pemba.	1890	1,020	200,000	Natives mostly Mohammedan.
Nyasaland	1891	39,573	1,140,000	Mostly Europeans.
Union of South Africa.	1806-1909	473,100	5,973,000	Over 3,000,000 profess no religion.
Rhodesia	1888-1893	440,000	1,650,000	Natives number about 1,620,000.
Swaziland	1890	6,536	100,000	Only about 1,100 whites.
Basutoland	1868	11,716	406,000	Very few Europeans.
Bechuanaland	1885-1891	275,000	125,000	Natives barely civilized.
Egypt	1870	350,000	12,569,000	Moslems form 91.8 per cent of population.
Anglo-Egyptian Sudan.	1899	1,014,000	3,400,000	About 5,000 scholars.
America:
Canada	1583	3,729,665	8,361,000
Newfoundland and Labrador.	1583	162,734	257,000
British Honduras	1638	8,598	42,000
British Guiana	1803	89,500	314,000
Bermuda	1609	19	20,000
Bahamas	1666	4,404	58,000
Turks and Caicos Islands.	1665	224	6,000
Falkland Islands	1865	7,500	3,220
Jamaica	1655	4,207	906,000
Cayman Islands	1655	89	6,000
Barbados	1605-1625	166	184,000
Windward Islands	1638	527	176,000
Leeward Islands	1623	715	128,000
Trinidad and Tobago.	1797	1,868	372,000
Total for British Empire		12,784,755	441,919,000
Summary:
United Kingdom		121,633	46,089,000
Europe		120	240,000
India		1,802,629	315,156,000
Asia (except India)		169,677	9,218,000
Australia and Pacific Islands		3,192,755	6,567,000
Africa		3,487,725	53,816,000
America		4,010,216	10,833,000
		12,784,755	441,919,000

Mr. FRANCE. As a result of the war the British Empire will probably add to her territory, through the all too transparent sham of mandatories, the following principal areas:

	Square miles.
German East Africa	384,180
German Southwest Africa	322,450
German Samoa	1,000
German islands south of Equator	95,450
	803,080

An area almost one-third of the area of the United States.

In addition to this, she has strengthened her influence over Tibet, and she has more recently taken control of Persia, where in all probability the history of her acquisition of Egypt will be repeated; and if this occurs, 628,000 square miles and nine and one-half millions more of people will thus be added to the Empire. Under article 10 we guarantee, as will be apparent from an examination of the titles to the territories of these empires, the perpetuation of many an injustice. We guarantee Korea, Shantung and Manchurian Kwantung to Japan, Hongkong to Great Britain, and French Indo-China to France against the manifest rights of China. I mention these merely by way of illustration.

These are some of the territorial boundaries which we pledge blood of American youth and our treasure to maintain, wholly in the interests of foreign empires, and in violation in many instances of the principles of justice and of right. Have we forgotten that the material questions as to the new boundaries of the world's countries are not the vital ones for the new diplomacy? It was because it used the formulæ of an outworn and discredited diplomacy, boundaries, spheres of influence, the subjection of weaker peoples to the strong, that the peace conference failed so utterly. The members of that conference forgot they needed to direct their policies so that they would run parallel with the trend of great events. They needed only to seek the best means by which there might be achieved the speediest liberation, elevation, and preparation for self-determination of all peoples. It makes no difference whether yonder map of Africa shall largely carry the pink tint of Britain, the brown of Germany, the purple of France, the yellow of Portugal, or the green of Belgium, if there shall be justice done the natives there, and if all those peoples earn is used for their own good, if the taxes levied upon them are for their own advancement, and not for the enrichment of imperial treasuries or parasitic absent landlords.

Has the rule of these great empires whose territory America is asked to guarantee been so successful and humane that we are justified, while these imperial powers control, in becoming helpless cotrustees and equally responsible with them, as we pledge our blood and treasure for the perpetuation of that rule? Has the sway of Great Britain been so benevolent in India that we can with confidence promise that we would serve the cause of justice if we did conscript our youth to fight with any power which might threaten to disturb it? What also of the rule of the British Empire in Egypt and in Africa? Has France uplifted the natives of the Senegal and Niger Colonies? Has Belgium carried the best ideals of civilization into the Belgian Kongo? I have never contended that it was the duty of America to correct by force of arms all the abuses of the world, to wage an open war against the unspeakable inhumanities of the imperialistic systems; but, sirs, now we are asked to pledge ourselves to perpetuate cruel wrongs which are revolting not only to the principles of our Government but to the best sentiments of the English race.

BRITISH RULE IN INDIA.

Sirs, do you feel justified in the ratification of a treaty under which this Republic guarantees to perpetuate the rule of the British aristocracy in India, a rule out of harmony with all of the best traditions of the English people, one characterized by a ruthless exploitation which has received for generations the condemnation of the liberal statesmen of England?

You can not convince the American people that the rule of Britain in India has been benevolent. The American youth of several generations have learned at their mothers' knees, in their churches, and at their schools the tragic story of India's poverty and agony as she lies helpless and prostrate in error's chains. They have seen the ghastly pictures of those weak, emaciated, poverty-stricken Hindus, human specters, living skeletons, 50,000,000 of whom suffer the unceasing torture of hunger gnawing at their vitals as they live ever in the deep gloom of ignorance and sorrow and under the ever-haunting shadow of death by slow starvation. They have heard the tragic, awful history of her cholera, plagues, and famines, and have given generously for her relief. India, one of the earliest homes of our Aryan race, was in some respects the greatest of all the empires. Her civilization reaches back beyond the dawn of history. Three thousand years before the Christian era she carried on an extended commerce with mighty Babylon. Two thousand years before Christ the Egyptian monarchs wore her exquisitely woven fabrics and used her fine muslins for the winding sheets of their sacred dead. Six centuries before our era on the banks of the Indus our Aryan ancestors had builded a civilization, with customs, arts, architecture, and literature of peculiar dignity and beauty. They worked with marvelous skill in iron, copper, brass, and the precious metals. In their sculpture they emulated and approached the matchless purity and beauty of the Grecian marbles. In their philosophy they surpassed the Egyptians and anticipated the Greeks. The Brahman priests of India advanced the astronomy of China and Egypt. Her science, agriculture, and industry flourished through wonderful centuries and she grew in wealth and power, her fabulous riches at last making her the treasure house of the world. In the fifteenth century the tales of her marvelous resources became known to the western peoples. The Portuguese came, then the Dutch and the French, but after the Battle of Plassy, in 1757, England's supremacy was established and she assumed responsibility for India's destiny. Judged by the ancient standards, Britain's rule might find something to commend it, but measured by the best traditions and ideals of the English people, no man can successfully defend it. India was rich. The British exploitation, which has exalted and enriched England, has stricken India down into the depths of desperate poverty.

INDIA'S POVERTY.

Edmund Burke said, in 1783:

> There is nothing before the eyes of the natives [of India] but an endless, hopeless prospect of new flights of birds of prey and passage, with their appetites continually renewing for food that is continually wasting.

The Rev. Abbe J. A. Dubois—1820—English missionary of Mysore, said:

> Alas, it is not Bibles the poor Hindus want or ask for; it is food and raiment. When the belly is empty and the back bare, the best disposed, even among the Christians, feel themselves but very little inclined to peruse the Bible.

Sir W. W. Hunter—1880—said:

There remain 40,000,000 of people who go through life on insufficient food.

Sir Charles Elliot—1888—chief commissioner of Assam, said:

Half the agricultural population do not know from one year's end to another what it is to have a full meal.

Sir William Digby—1900—in Prosperous British India, states:

In 1900 the agricultural population increased by 60,000,000. If the same income remains in 1900 as in 188-, it follows that 40,000,000 (according to Sir W. W. Hunter) plus 50,000,000 make 90,000,000, who are continuously hungry in British India at the beginning of the twentieth century.

R. C. Dutt—1902—an English authority, states:

The extreme poverty of the people is becoming patent every day. * * * It is estimated from official records that one-fifth of the Indian rural population, or between forty or fifty million people, are insufficiently fed, even in years of good harvest. * * * India alone sends us a tragic tale of poverty, famine, and death.

Rev. J. T. Sunderland—1905—American missionary in India, states:

The poverty of India is something you can have little conception of. * * * The extreme, abject, the awful poverty of the people.

Hon. Samuel Edwin Montagu, state secretary for India in 1917, stated:

But it (India) is still a country of poverty. The majority of the people live on a few rupees a month, and it takes three rupees to make an American dollar. Their country has vast resources awaiting development, but the people are still very poor.

R. C. Dutt, in his Economic History of India, 1900, states:

The appalling poverty and joylessness of his life under such conditions can not be easily pictured. His hut is seldom rethatched and affords little shelter from cold and rain; his wife is clothed in rags; his little children go without clothing. Of furniture he has none; an old blanket is quite a luxury in the cold weather, and if his children can tend cattle or his wife can do home work to eke out his income he considers himself happy. It is literally a fact and not a figure of speech that agricultural laborers and their families in India generally suffer from insufficient food from year's end to year's end.

Mrs. Annie Besant, June, 1919, in the London Daily Herald, states:

About half the people of India get only one meal a day and that is not a sufficient meal. The average life of an individual is only 23 years; in England it is 40 years and in New Zealand 60 years. The real danger is a hunger revolution.

Sir Frederick Treves, 1904, then the most distinguished surgeon in England, stated, after a visit to India:

Possibly the first impression of India which succeeds the realization of the strangeness of all things is an impression of teeming life—of the unwonted numbers of living beings, human and animal, who crowd the land. The country would seem to be overrun by a multitude of men, women, and children, all of about the same degree, a little below the most meager comfort and a little above the nearest reach of starvation. These are some of the great hordes who provide in their lean bodies victims for the yearly sacrifice to cholera, famine, and plague. Plague will slay 20,000 in a week, cholera ten times that number in a year, and the famine of one well-remembered time accounted for five and a quarter millions of dead people.

The extreme poverty of India is indicated by the following figures giving the comparative per capita wealth and income for several of the countries:

Comparative table.

	National wealth per capita.	National income per capita.
United States	$2,154.00	$372.00
Great Britain	1,913.00	232.00
France	1,238.00	182.00
Germany	1,512.00	156.00
Austria-Hungary	1,121.00	112.00
Italy	555.00	111.00
India	70.00	9.75

These figures are compiled from the World Almanac.

There is abundant evidence in the testimony of Englishmen that poverty in India has been for years increasing. S. S. Thorburn, financial commissioner of the Punjab, said that "seventy millions of Indians are in such a condition of hopeless poverty that nothing can relieve them." This poverty has been brought about by the vast and continuous drain by England on India's resources. After the battle of Plassy this drain began. Brooks Adams, in his "Law of Civilization and Decay," page 305, states:

The savings of millions of human beings for centuries, the English seized and took to London, as the Romans had taken the spoils of Greece and Pontus to Italy. What the value of the treasure was no man can estimate, but it must have been many millions of pounds—a vast sum in proportion to the stock of precious metals then owned in Europe.

This plunder and exploitation has continued in various forms. F. J. Shore, a retired Bengal administrator, states:

The fundamental principle of the English has been to make the whole Indian nation subservient, in every possible way, to the interests and benefits of themselves. They have taxed to the utmost limit; every successive Province, as it has fallen into our possession, has been made a field for higher exaction, and it has always been our boast how greatly we have raised the revenue above that which the native rulers were able to extort. The Indians have been excluded from every honor, dignity, or office which the lowest Englishman could be prevailed on to accept.

A. J. Wilson, in The Fortnightly Review, March, 1884, states:

In one form or another, we draw fully thirty millions of pounds a year from that unhappy country (India), and then the average wage of the natives is about £2 per annum, less, rather than more, in many parts. Our Indian tribute, therefore, represents the entire earnings of upward of six million heads of families, say of thirty millions of people. It means the abstraction of more than one-tenth of the entire sustenance of India every year.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FRANCE. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire from whom the Senator is reading?

Mr. FRANCE. A. J. Wilson, an Englishman, in the Fortnightly Review. These are nearly all extracts from the writings of Englishmen. I have not quoted anything from the writings of any other than the English, except in one instance, where I quote from J. T. Sunderland, an American ex-missionary, a profound and sympathetic student of Indian affairs. I have purposely not chosen any criticisms which were not written by Englishmen themselves.

This statement would seem to be almost incredible but for the supporting evidence we find on every hand of the continual drain on India by England in the form of interest, of official salaries, and of land taxation. In his work on "Famines in India," page 17, R. C. Dutt, also an Englishman, shows clearly that "the intensity and frequency of recent famines are greatly due to the resourceless condition and chronic poverty of the cultivators, caused by the overassessment of the soil on which they depend for a living."

In this work Mr. Dutt pleads for tax reforms and asks that the tax "rate may not exceed one-fifth of the gross produce of the soil in any case"—preface 15—and states, "the principle was adopted in the settlement of the central Provinces that one-half the net product of the soil should be paid." "Virtually, therefore, the rent fixed was one-third of the gross produce," and cesses for improvements are levied in addition to this.

Keir Hardie stated:

The amount of taxes raised direct from the peasant is from 50 per cent to 75 per cent of the value of the yield of the land, in addition to which they have to pay local cesses, and various other small items, so that probably not less than 75 per cent of the harvest goes in taxes. * * * It is this fact which keeps the people of India in a condition of hopeless grinding poverty.

The burden of such taxation can be better understood when we recall that the Indian income is about $10 per capita per year, and that even very light taxes must oppress those who are so poor.

Of course, the people have the poorest and scantiest of clothing and the utmost insufficiency of fare. Quoting from another Englishman: "It is unusual to find a village woman who has any wraps at all. Most of them have to pass the night as best they can in their day clothes, a petticoat, wrapper, and bodice. As a rule they and their children sleep, in the cold weather, during the warm afternoons and in the early hours of the night."

The people can exist, if existence it can be called, on almost nothing. "The most instructive fact brought out by inquiries into the condition of five families of the laborer class was the extraordinary cheapness of a bare subsistence. A Baiga basket maker, whose family consisted of his wife and two small children, made on an average 12 baskets a week, which he sold for 2 pounds of unhusked rice or millet each. His monthly earnings were thus about 100 pounds of unhusked rice, worth rather less than a rupee. The family not only managed to live on this, supplemented with jungle fruits and roots, but saved annually about a rupee's worth of grain, wherewith they purchased the scanty clothing which sufficed for them." This should be, as it probably is, the world's record in cheap living. The average works out thus:

	s.
Total earnings in food per annum	16
Less saving for clothing	1
Leaving for food	15

This was to be divided among four persons. (Digby "Prosperous British India," p. 499.)

A native peasant of India is fortunate to have for a meal one handful of rice once a day. Truly, it is a land of hunger. Hardie said:

The real rat plague in India is poverty, and the flea which spreads the disease is the Government. The emaciated, bloodless bodies of the ryot has not plague-resisting powers, and so the fell disease finds him an easy victim.

The Rev. J. T. Sunderland, formerly missionary from America, a deep and sympathetic student of India, in the New England Magazine, September, 1900, said:

The fact that at the end of 200 years of commercial dominance, and more than 40 years of absolute political sway, we are confronted with such indescribable poverty of the people, and with famine after famine of such magnitude and severity as to make the world stand aghast, seems to prove beyond answer that England * * * has not made the welfare of India the first aim, but has subordinated India's good to her own enrichment. We have the hideous business that Rome and Spain were engaged in so long, and for which in the end they paid so dear. Called by its right name: What is the treatment of India by England? It is national parasitism; it is the stronger nation sucking the blood of the weaker. It is imperialism.

The deaths from famine, from 1854 to 1901, are estimated at 28,825,000, and during the last 10 years of that period the average was 1,000,000 deaths each year, or on the average, as has been calculated—

Two British subjects passed away from starvation or starvation induced diseases every minute of every day and every night from January 1, 1899, to September 30, 1901. (Digby, "Prosperous British India," page 130.)

The people live in miserable, dark, unventilated huts, with thatched roofs often out of repair, and Johns Scurr, in the London Herald, of May 4, 1919, describing the living conditions of the millhand, said:

The vast masses of the millhands are housed under the most indescribable, filthy conditions, and one is not surprised to learn that the people die of famines, plague, and cholera like fleas.

One of the further causes of this poverty, in addition to the drain by official salaries, interest and high taxation, has been the virtual destruction by discriminatory tariffs against India and in favor of England, designed to exclude Indian fabrics from the English and European markets, of the cotton-weaving industry of India. Owing to the unjust and oppressive tariffs the distaffs of India disappeared before the power looms of Manchester. The manufacturers of England cruelly crushed out their helpless Indian competitors.

ILLITERACY.

Propose this test to any colonial policy. Does it seek to educate the colonial peoples? If it does, its aim is elevation and liberation. If it does not, it is directed to that heartless exploitation which ends in the degradation of the native people. By this test England has failed. India had an educational system. The English destroyed it. The sums spent by England for education in India are pitifully small, $0.015 per annum per capita, as against the $4 per capita which we have expended in the Philippines. Only 6,780,721 out of about 75,000,000 children in India attend school, and the illiteracy among these people, who are of the very highest intellectual capacity, is 93 per cent, whereas during our 20 years of rule in the Philippines we have reduced the illiteracy there to 56 per cent. Seven per cent of the Hindus of the Aryan race, after 140 years of British rule, are literate, as against 44 per cent of the Filipinos after 20 years of our rule there. England's national policy, for so long dictated by a reactionary aristocracy, has never been favorable to the education of the masses at home, and it has opposed comprehensive plans for the education of the colonial people. Against this reactionary policy the liberals of England have for years protested. With reference to colonial peoples the British ruling class has said:

We do not want generals, statesmen, and legislators; we want industrious husbandmen.

In July of 1833, during a memorable debate upon the question of education in India, particularly with reference to the education of Hindus for public office, Lord Ellenborough said:

We had won the Empire of India by the sword, and we must preserve it by the same means, doing at the same time everything that is consistent with our existence there for the good of the people.

On July 10, 1833, Macaulay, speaking in opposition to Lord Ellenborough and in favor of the bill, which was to prevent the exclusion of Hindus from office in India, enunciated in a few great, burning, and immortal sentences the principles upon which a sound and upbuilding colonial policy should be based:

We are told that the time can never come when the natives of India can be admitted to high civil and military office. We are told that this is the condition on which we hold our power. We are told that we are bound to confer on our subjects—every benefit which they are capable of enjoying? No. Which it is in our power to confer on them? No. But which we can confer on them without hazard to our own domination. Against that proposition I solemnly protest as inconsistent alike with sound policy and sound morality. * * * It is the most childish ambition to covet dominion which adds to no man's comfort or security. To the great trading nation, to the great manufacturing nation, no progress which any portion of the human race can make in knowledge, in taste for the conveniences of life, or in the wealth by which those conveniences are produced, can be a matter of indifference. It is scarcely possible to calculate the benefits which we might derive from the diffusion of European civilization among the vast population of the East. It would be on the most selfish view of the case, far better for us that the people of India were well governed and independent of us than ill governed and subject to us—that they were ruled by their own kings, but wearing our broadcloth and working with our cutlery, than that they were performing their salaams to English collectors and English magistrates, but were too ignorant to value or too poor to buy English manufactures. To trade with civilized men is infinitely more profitable than to govern savages. That would indeed be a doting wisdom which, in order that India might remain a dependency, would keep it a useless and costly dependency, which would keep a hundred millions of men from being our customers in order that they might continue to be our slaves. It was, as Bernier tells us, the practice of the miserable tyrants whom he found in India, when they dreaded the capacity and spirit of some distinguished subject, and yet could not venture to murder him, to administer to him a daily dose of the pousta, a preparation of opium, the effect of which was in a few months to destroy all the bodily and mental powers of the wretch who was drugged with it, and to turn him into a helpless idiot. That detestable artifice, more horrible than assassination itself, was worthy of those who employed it. It is no model for the English nation. We shall never consent to administer the pousta to a whole community, to stupefy and paralyze a great people whom God has committed to our charge for the wretched purpose of rendering them more amenable to our control. What is that power worth which is founded on vice, on ignorance, on misery, which we can hold only by violating the most sacred duties, which as governors we owe to the governed, which as a people blessed with far more than an ordinary measure of political liberty and of intellectual light, we owe to a race debased by 3,000 years of despotism and priestcraft? We are free, we are civilized to little purpose if we grudge to any portion of the human race an equal measure of freedom and civilization.

Are we to keep the people of India ignorant in order that we may keep them submissive, or do we think that we can give them knowledge without awakening ambition, or do we mean to awaken ambition and to provide it with no legitimate vent? Who will answer any of these questions in the affirmative? Yet, one of them must be answered in the affirmative by every person who maintains that we ought permanently to exclude the natives from high office. I have no fears. The path of duty is plain before us, and it is also the path of wisdom, of national prosperity, of national honor.

The destinies of our Indian Empire are covered with thick darkness. It is difficult to form any conjecture as to the fate reserved for a state which resembles no other in history and which forms by itself a separate class of political phenomena. The laws which regulate its growth and its decay are still unknown to us. It may be that the public mind of India may expand under our system till it has outgrown that system; that by good government we may educate our subjects into a capacity for better government; that, having become instructed in European knowledge, they may, in some future age, demand European institutions. Whether such a day will ever come I know not, but never will I attempt to avert or to retard it. Whenever it comes it will be the proudest day in English history. To have found a great people sunk in the lowest depths of slavery and superstition, to have so ruled them as to have made them desirous and capable of all the privileges of citizens, would indeed be a title to glory all our own. The scepter may pass away from us. Unforeseen accidents may derange our most profound schemes of policy. Victory may be inconstant to our arms, but there are triumphs which are followed by no reverses. There is an empire exempt from all national causes of decay. These triumphs are the pacific triumphs of reason over barbarism; that empire is the imperishable empire of our arts and our morals, our literature and our law. (Vol. 19 (3d ser.), p. 536.)

What a great colonial policy is outlined in these most eloquent words. Would that England might have followed the vision of that imperishable empire declared by this gifted and devoted champion of the oppressed. But it was not to be. Bourbonism never yields. It must be broken, crushed beneath the tires of time and progress. Great Englishmen have seen the vision, but the iron clutch of the reactionaries could not be loosed.

And so, at the conclusion of this war, when the millions of India, whose sons had fought for England and for us on the strength of our promises of self-determination and freedom for all peoples, demanded that right of self-determination, the infamous Rowlatt act was passed, making the discussion of those demands a crime punishable with penalties of utmost severity. And then occurred one of the most impressive spectacles of our generation. Millions of the people of India, on a given day, without respect to the creeds which had divided them, forsook their tasks and went into each other's temples and mosques to pray for liberation. Unarmed, they undertook a passive resistance. They threw themselves before moving cars and were killed as a protest against their slavery. Yet these unarmed, helpless, protesting people were ruthlessly mowed down by the British machine guns and slaughtered by bombs from the air. Thus did England answer their plea for the self-determination which she and we had promised would be the fruit of this war. And at this very moment, I am informed, Indian troops are being used to crush that same plea for the fulfillment of our promises in Egypt and in Ireland, the sons of a poor and crushed people being employed to keep other oppressed peoples in subjection.

The yellow grain comes only from the flail and purified gold only from the fire. England needed to be chastened, and she has now passed through the furnaces of trial and agony.

Her reactionary representatives and colonial administrators at Paris tried to play the old diplomacy and wrote this despicable document; but, sirs, retribution, slow-footed, but inevitable, has overtaken them. At last the fires of liberty which Washington, Hamilton, Jefferson, and Lincoln kindled here upon this Western Continent have illuminated the world and are consuming the old order. They have now warmed the hearts and are now shining in the faces of the 20,000,000 of members of this great new liberal party in England, who in the increasing light have themselves seen and have sworn to achieve what our common ancestors foresaw.

England has failed in India, failed in Egypt, failed in all of Africa, because of the successful resistance by her reactionary leaders of this great colonial policy which has been urged by Macaulay and a long line of illustrious English liberals, and which now, under the liberal leadership which has been all but established in England as a result of the war, will become her permanent national policy. But in spite of what we hope from that liberal leadership in England, and however much we may desire to cooperate with it, we can not justify ourselves in signing and sealing an international contract which gives and guarantees to England nearly 931,000 additional square miles, a territory in area of approximately one-third of the United States, in Africa, and places in her charge more than 11,000,000 additional helpless African natives, in view of her past policy in the Dark Continent, which policy has been characterized by heartless exploitation, with practically no attempt to benevolently and intelligently elevate the peoples there.

THE AFRICAN PROBLEM.

The African problem is a stupendous one, and, sirs, in it are involved momentous issues affecting the whole future history of the world. This vast continent, with its nearly eleven and one-half millions of square miles of territory, embraces almost one-fourth of the land surface of the earth, and must, perhaps, become in time the great basin into which shall overflow the populations from the congested countries. Take continental Europe, with its 3,795,788 square miles; India, with its 1,766,642 square miles; China, with its 1,532,420 square miles; the United States, with its 3,092,679 square miles, and lay them all down on Africa, and there will still be room to spare; add Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, and even then Africa's great stretches will not be covered. Of this territory, England now holds, including Egypt and the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, about 3,701,411 square miles, an area much greater than the total area of the United States, while the addition of the German colonies would increase her holdings to about 4,632,411 square miles, embracing the most desirable portions of the continent. There on that continent are uncomputed resources of coal, minerals, water powers, and agricultural lands. There can be found every variety of climate, the hot, dry air of the desert, the damp and dangerous miasmas of the jungle and swamps, many of which await reclamation, and the cold, invigorating air of plateau and mountain. One-fourth of the world's gold and 80 per cent of the world's diamonds come from Africa.

Consider the gold produced in Africa and taken for the benefit and enrichment of the white races:

West Africa (since 1880)	£17,099,000
Transvaal (since 1884)	514,700,000
Rhodesia (since 1898)	36,580,000
	£568,379,000
	or
	$2,841,895,000

In 1915 the gold production of South Africa alone was £38,639,043. The value of the diamonds from South Africa had reached up to 1914 the huge sum of £169,342,868. Fabulous values in ivory, minerals, agricultural and natural products, and in heavy taxes and rents levied upon the natives have been taken by the English from Africa, while many millions of native inhabitants to whom belonged this great wealth still live under the same conditions of darkness, heathenism, and savagery as those which prevailed when the kings of the first dynasty ruled in Egypt 40 centuries ago.

Under the system of colonial administration and exploitation which has existed for so many years it has seemed perfectly natural and entirely proper for Englishmen to go to Africa and take up the land, forcing the native owners to become their tenants and to pay henceforth to them rentals for the lands upon which they and their ancestors had dwelt for countless generations. The native Africans now pay for the huts which they themselves have builded, have owned, and in which they reside, rentals to Englishmen of £2, £6, or £7 per year, and often, not content with the mere demanding of rental, the new owners often eject the native from the lands which have been taken from him, issuing to him summary commands to move on, to forsake forever the pleasant valleys or the hillsides to which his simple native heart has been devoted.

Maurice S. Evans, an English authority on Africa, states in this connection:

> One does not need a vivid imagination to picture the utter dismay brought to these people, living on ground familiar to their fathers, on getting such notice without warning. Just lately, since attention was called to the matter by the native affairs commission, it has received some thought from the Government, but they are placed in a dilemma by their own action. A large block of land in the upland districts has been bought by the Government from private owners for European closer settlement. This area at present carries a large native population; it is their ancestral home. Notice has been served on kraal heads, representing 5,000 souls, that the land has been transferred and they are liable to eviction. What will be done with them or where they will find new homes no man can say. Two outstanding features of native character complicate the problem. The first is the intense local attraction to his home and neighborhood, often the home of his fathers before him. The second is the childlike procastination of an awkward or troublesome question. * * * Rather than leave the old kraal site, with all its associations, he will promise any rent or undertake any obligation to furnish labor, only realizing the onerous or impossible nature of the contract he has undertaken when due fulfillment is demanded. (Black and White in Southeast Africa.)

In spite of the vast expanse of African territory and the comparative sparseness of its population, yet because of the huge holdings of land by Europeans, "the native question is the land question," and the one great need of the black man is land, while the demand of the white man is for labor.

In Africa as elsewhere the European colonists are generally opposed to the education of the natives. The European in Africa says, as Mr. Evans states, "An educated nigger is a spoiled nigger," and, further, as bearing upon the attitude of the colonists toward education, Mr. Evans states:

> Many of those who are hostile or apathetic to the work now undertaken by the missionaries are willing to tolerate some teaching of religion but are opposed to giving the natives education.

He continues:

> It will come as a surprise to many to learn that missionary effort is the only force which has yet, in any direct way, attempted the education and uplifting of the Abantu people over a large portion of Southeast Africa. Governments have given grants in aid to the work, only amounting in all to a niggardly percentage of the direct taxes paid by the natives; but there are no Government schools or a single institution in the whole country run solely by the Government for the training of the natives in arts or industry.
>
> So that the missionary stands to the native for religion, education, for all help he may get to make his life cleaner, more moral, and more in keeping with the ideals of the white man at his best. And as it is in the position of this single altruistic force that we have to regard the missionary, we can surely hardly overestimate his importance as a factor in our inquiry.

Mr. President, for myself I can not feel otherwise than that this Republic is under peculiar and heavy obligations to insist now upon some form of international cooperation which will inaugurate a policy for the elevation, education, and civilization of the oppressed peoples of Africa. The countless wrongs which have been committed by the better circumstanced men of the white races against the less fortunate dark-skinned people call for expiatory sacrifices, and shall we now, as we face the task of world reconstruction, refuse it? I believe that the German African colonies present an opportunity and a grave responsibility which this Nation must squarely face. I believe that the men of this Republic should be willing and eager to share the white man's burden in Africa, that we should not hesitate to go there to work side by side with our English and French brothers for a greater, better Africa, for the ultimate establishment there of a civilization compatible with the rich and distinctive genius of the African races. It would be a great and noble enterprise, and one well worthy of our best traditions, and in it I believe the Americans of African descent would gladly perform a large and important part. Our party, sirs, the party of Lincoln, is pledged to the furnishing of fair opportunities and the best educational facilities to the colored people of America. For myself, although I am a southern man, believing firmly in their capacity for growth and large achievement, I would extend to our colored people here every opportunity in their own schools for education which the whites enjoy in theirs. I would build for the colored people schools, colleges, and universities, throw open to them agricultural, technical, medical, and engineering courses, training them in large numbers in practical, industrial, and theoretical knowledge, each to the limit of his capacities, and then point out to those who had enjoyed these inestimable advantages of civilization their duty and responsibility for sharing in the work of upbuilding the civilization and promoting the welfare of Africa.

Under such a sound American policy it might well be, by another of those strange, mysterious processes of Providence, which are never comprehended until they reach their fulfillment, that the dark-skinned peoples brought here from the vast reaches of African plateau and tropical forest, as it appeared for so long to the material eye, only for exploitation, for toil without recompense, were in reality called as a chosen people that in their servile bondage here they, like the ancient Israelites in Egypt, might be prepared to sense the higher service; called that they might be uplifted to the light, to the appreciation and assimilation of our civilization, instructed in our morals, in our laws, in our faith; that they might be touched and nurtured by the spirit, dedicated by the benediction of our great Lincoln, and emancipated in truth; that they might have lighted in their souls with us at our common altars the sacred flame of liberty; that they might in large numbers voluntarily go back to the great country of their origin as missionaries, teachers, torch bearers, to carry and place that flame on new altars of liberty and enlightenment which white and colored Americans might together labor to erect there; that into the darkness of that continent might through them be poured a flood of light; that through them the wastes might be reclaimed, the degraded redeemed, the vast resources developed until, with the 150,000,000 of Africans uplifted and liberated under the inspiration and by the help of their American brothers, there should be founded upon that now dark and unhappy continent a new great sister republic, which, with its material achievements and moral triumphs, would surpass the glories of the Golden Age of the ancient Egyptian dynasties.

[At this point Mr. FRANCE yielded the floor for the day.]

Thursday, October 9, 1919.

DISMEMBERMENT OF CHINA.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I desire now to refer to the subject of the dismemberment of China.

Sirs, Africa has been the helpless victim of European ambition. For decades the great empires, like a pack of hungry lions, have been growling and snarling over her bleeding carcass, each battling for a larger share, while at many a critical time this contest of greed has brought the whole world to the brink of war. Some of the roots of this World War reach to the soil of Africa, and its most bitter fruits took some flavor from that destructive, corroding acid of hatred which was generated in the tropic, humid atmosphere of Africa, on the desolate shores of Lake Tanganyika, and northward, where the Belgian Kongo, closely joining the frontiers of the German East Africa colonies, made impossible the realization of Britain's dream of a railway from Cairo to the Cape, without a concession from one of these two powers. Germany refused a right of way, and Belgium, later granting it, was compelled to rescind the action because of German protestation and intimidation. But, sirs, the path has now been opened, blasted by machine guns and cut with gleaming swords.

The notorious open partitioning of Africa, to which the United States, although represented at the Berlin conference of 1885, has never given any sanction by its ratification of the General Act of that conference, is now being brought to its completion.

Article VI of Chapter 1 of the General Act reads as follows:

Provisions relative to protection of the natives, of missionaries, and travelers, as well as relative to religious liberty.

VI. All the powers exercising sovereign rights or influence in the aforesaid territories bind themselves to watch over the preservation of the native tribes, and to care for the improvement of the conditions of their moral and material well-being, and to help in suppressing slavery, and especially the slave trade. They shall, without distinction of creed or nation, protect and favor all religious, scientific, or charitable institutions and undertakings created and organized for the above ends, or which aim at instructing the natives and bringing home to them the blessings of civilization.

Christian missionaries, scientists, and explorers, with their followers, property, and collections, shall likewise be the objects of especial protection.

Freedom of conscience and religious toleration are expressly guaranteed to the natives, no less than to subjects and to foreigners. The free and public exercise of all forms of Divine worship, and the right to build edifices for religious purposes, and to organize religious missions belonging to all creeds, shall not be limited or fettered in any way whatsoever.

In the hot competition between the powers for greater territory and larger spheres of influence the high obligations recognized in this article have not been met. Spoliation, exploitation, and oppression have characterized the administration of the nations which have profited so richly by this division of the Continent of Africa.

The partitioning of Africa finds its parallel in the more stealthy but persistent, and no less effective, efforts for the division of China among the powers, all of which partitioning and spoliation of Africa and Asia, in the past, and that now contemplated in the present and in the immediate future, the United States is asked by this treaty to approve, to undertake to "respect and preserve," to guarantee the title of the despoilers to the territory taken even against the claims of the rightful owners. England, in order to continue her profitable opium trade through India, with the Chinese smugglers, in violation of Chinese law, a trade most destructive to the Chinese, but highly profitable to the English, engaged in 1840 in the unrighteous and, to our western civilization, disgraceful "opium war" and emerged, although a victor with unclean hands, demanding a heavy indemnity from China and the cession of Hongkong. This was the beginning of China's dismemberment, and since that time the extension of European and Japanese spheres of influence in China has gone on rapidly. England has surveyed this process with complacency, for a strong, free Chinese Republic would constitute a dangerous precedent, which might further arouse the ambitions of other eastern peoples, and thus sooner or later menace England's sway in India, Ceylon, and the East Indies, where, some time in the near future, England undoubtedly designs to increase her power. This treaty carries forward the policy of partition in China, strengthens the hold of the European powers there, and makes the United States particeps criminis in the nefarious plan. We do not know what may be the secret agreements between England, France, and Japan with reference to the Far East, but certainly we can not participate profitably in the spoils while probably England will control and hold Palestine, Arabia, Persia, Tibet, Burma, Western Siam, and Kwantung, in addition to Hongkong, Weihaiwei, and her other eastern possessions. France may secure permanently Yunnan, Kwansi, Indo China, and Tonkin and Eastern Siam, while Japan, no doubt, in addition to her present possessions, will seek to extend her power into Siberia. Japan now has a strangle hold on China. With Korea, Manchuria, Port Arthur, a portion of the Liaotung Peninsula, Kiaochow, and Shantung, not considering Formosa, she controls Peking, thus dominating the northern as England at Honkong and in Tibet holds the southern gateway to China. These territorial acquisitions, together with railway and mining concessions, the presence of foreign troops and police, post office and customs agencies, render China, so long as she assents, subject to foreign domination. The day will certainly come, if this treaty is signed, when China, perhaps aided by Germany, Russia, and India, will rise in her might to demand her freedom and the return of her ancestral territory, and then, under the provisions of this treaty, we shall be expected to call the American youth to fight perhaps by the side of Japan, on the side of injustice, oppression, exploitation, for the perpetuation of the cruel wrongs which have been done China, a great, though helpless because hitherto pacifist, nation. Japan furnishes, however, a striking example of the ease and rapidity with which the oriental peoples can adopt the customs, the civilization, and that dangerous militarism which has been developed in the West, and it would not be impossible for China to secretly and swiftly emulate the island empire, and as a huge militaristic nation assume the leadership of the East.

INJUSTICE TO KOREA.

We can not sign this treaty without an utter disregard of our moral and treaty obligations to the Korean people. Article 1 of our treaty with Korea, of May 22, 1882, provides:

If other powers deal unjustly or oppressively with either Government, the other will exert their good offices, on being informed of the case, to bring about an amicable arrangement, thus showing their friendly feelings.

At the time when Japan was making the first move toward depriving Korea of her independence, when she was undoubtedly dealing unjustly and oppressively with Korea, the Emperor of Korea did appeal to the United States for assistance, but the good offices of the United States, pledged under the treaty, were not exerted, in accordance with the treaty provisions, in Korea's behalf, as the communication from Horace M. Allen, then American minister to Korea, to the Secretary of State of the United States, herewith submitted, will indicate:

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Seoul, Korea, April 14, 1904.

SIRS: * * * All these matters [diplomatic pressure in regard to various concessions] are naturally of serious concern to the Korean Emperor. He falls back in his extremity upon his old friendship with America. It is my endeavor to soothe him all I can, at the same time pointing out to him how the course of his Government during the past few years could not well lead to any other result than something like the alliance of February 23. I have not encouraged him to send a high official as minister to Washington in order to invoke the good offices of the United States, as it seems to me that would only be an embarrassment.

At the same time I may as well inform you that the Emperor confidently expects that America will do something for him at the close of this war, or when opportunity offers, to retain for him as much of his independence as is possible. He is inclined to give a very free and favorable translation to article 1 of our treaty of Jenchuan of 1882. I trust to be able to prevent a direct invocation of this treaty, however, though I am obliged to assure His Majesty that the condition of Korea is borne in mind by the United States Government, who will use their good offices when occasion occurs.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant.

HORACE M. ALLEN.

At the beginning of the war between Japan and Russia, Japan stated that she had entered upon the war to preserve the political independence and territorial integrity of Korea, and (article 3 of her treaty with Korea, Feb. 23, 1904) that—

The Imperial Government of Japan definitely guarantee the independence and territorial integrity of the Korean Empire. * * *

But on November 17, 1905, another treaty was forced by Japan, at the point of the sword, upon Korea, which placed in the hands of the Japanese Government the control and direction of the foreign affairs of Korea, practically depriving her of independence. On July 24, 1907, all administrative measures were made subject to the Japanese resident general, and on August 22, 1910, Korea was formally annexed by Japan, and more than 17,000,000 people of Chosen, the beautiful "Land of the Morning Calm," a people with an illustrious history of independence dating back to the distant centuries, became the subjects of an alien power, which since that time has not ceased to exploit and oppress them, while America, keeping silence, in violation of her treaty obligation to tender her good offices in such a case, is now expected by the ratification of this treaty to guarantee, respect, and preserve the territorial integrity of Japan, and thus to rivet for all time the shackles upon the proud, noble, and liberty-loving people who appealed to us in vain in their hour of need. I shall not attempt to recount the long story of the cruel wrongs inflicted upon this helpless people, of oppression, insult, violence, outrage, suppression of free speech, arrest and torture of Christian leaders and teachers, the suppression of learning, the indignities to Korean women, the marching of modest Christian girls naked through the streets, the iniquitous spy system, the insolence to American missionaries, and the murder and crucifixion of Christian Korean men, since reports containing most of these facts have aready been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The story of Korea's subjugation and oppression constitutes one of the most tragic and moving chapters in all the history of the ancient Orient. The Korean appeal can scarcely be disregarded as we consider this treaty which would forge forever the chains of bondage upon her. I quote from this appeal, adopted by the Korean congress, held on April 14, 1919, at Philadelphia:

For 4,000 years our country enjoyed an absolute autonomy. We have our own history, our own language, our own literature, and our own civilization. We have made treaties with the leading nations of the world; all of them recognized our independence, including Japan.

In 1904, at the beginning of the Russo-Japanese War, Japan made a treaty of alliance with Korea guaranteeing territorial integrity and political independence of Korea to cooperate in the war against Russia. Korea was opened to Japan for military purposes and Korea assisted Japan in many ways. After the war was over Japan discarded the treaty of alliance as a "scrap of paper" and annexed Korea as a conquered territory. Ever since she has been ruling Korea with the autocratic militarism whose prototype has been well illustrated by Germany in Belgium and northern France.

The Korean people patiently suffered under the iron heel of Japan for the last decade or more, but now they have reached the point where they are no longer able to endure it. * * *

We appeal to you for support and sympathy because we know you love justice; you also fought for liberty and democracy, and you stand for Christianity and humanity. Our cause is a just one before the laws of God and man. Our aim is freedom from militaristic autocracy; our object is democracy for Asia; our hope is universal Christianity. Therefore we feel that our appeal merits your consideration.

You have already championed the cause of the oppressed and held out your helping hand to the weak of the earth's races. Your Nation is the hope of mankind, so we come to you.

TREATY IMPERILS MISSIONS.

Mr. President, this brings me to a discussion of a subject of vital interest to the American people, and one to which I believe their attention has not been called in connection with this treaty; I refer to the great cause of the missionary movement throughout the world. Sirs, in a peculiar sense, this Republic is a missionary country, for not only have we been intrusted with the establishment here of institutions for the promotion of political and religious liberty, which would arouse the emulation of other nations, but we have also considered ourselves charged with the specific duty of giving of our treasure and sending forth our sons and daughters into the most benighted lands in order that in all places of darkness there might be lighted the flame of the true monotheistic religion and of that civilization which we seek here to bring to its first complete manifestation.

In view of the fact that many of the great treaties in the past have contained clauses specifically guaranteeing religious freedom and the rights of citizens, without molestation, to preach and practice their religion, which guaranties have gone far toward making possible systematic missionary work, it is most significant that the peace conference at Paris declined, although I believe urged by the representatives of certain great missionary bodies to do so, to include in the treaty or in the covenant general clauses specifically safeguarding these fundamentally important rights. To comprehend that state of mind which led the reactionary and imperialistic ministers who dominated the Paris peace conference deliberately to refuse to incorporate in this document provisions for protecting the missionaries in their work, it is necessary for us to grasp the profound importance and significance of the great missionary movement, for then only can we appreciate the almost instinctive opposition to it, particularly at this time, on the part of those imperialists who are seeking to compose a restless world, to stay revolution, and to reduce again to stagnant acquiescence in the old imperial system of subjugation and exploitation the millions of now aroused and rebellious peoples of the world.

During the war the imperialists yielded to the suspicion that Christian missionaries might become political propagandists, and this suspicion has guided their policies with reference to the missionaries in the various countries. By the establishment of the precedent under which missionaries from some countries will be excluded from the territories of others, by the obstinate refusal to definitely safeguard missionary interests in the treaty, as well as by conditions which have naturally grown out of the war, the whole missionary movement would seem to be now placed in extreme danger. The British are now excluding, with some possible justification, German missionaries from India and Africa; the Japanese are suspicious of and openly hostile to Christian missionaries in Korea; the British certainly would exclude from India any American missionary who preached the doctrine of political self-determination, which is founded upon the principles of true religion, or who was sympathetic with the laudable aspirations of the people of India for education and liberation, while China, if done the harsh injustice which has been planned against her by this treaty might well ratalliate by excluding the missionaries who might desire to come from the countries which will have so grievously wronged her. This war after the war, this determination of the imperialists to maintain the old order of holding peoples against their will, in subjection for exploitation, may result in making it necessary for the man whose conscience compels him to obey the missionary mandate to violate the laws of country, the decrees of empires, and the dictatorial regulations of the imperialistic supergovernment, which this covenant creates.

In a large sense the great missionary movement may be considered to be an organized voluntary attempt on the part of generous, liberal-minded, and beneficently motived men to correct the delinquencies, soften the asperities, and counteract the inhumanities of the imperial governments, the dominating purposes of which are those of exploitation. The missionary goes not alone as a religious proselyte; he goes as a teacher, as the exemplar, as the bearer of the torch of civilization. He teaches toleration, liberation, and universal brotherhood. He is the courageous explorer of unknown lands, the hardy and heroic pioneer who, with most limited means and often in the face of insuperable difficulties and dangers, battles on the extreme frontiers of the world for those great principles upon which alone can be based the better order. His churches, hospitals, religious and industrial schools are the outposts from which radiate those influences which alone can stimulate and accelerate the forward, upward movement of the backward peoples of the earth. One eminent authority states:

Missions are, however, a far greater thing, after all, than simple proselytism. It would require many a volume to tell of what they have done for civilization, freedom, the exploration of unknown regions, the bringing to light of ancient literatures, the founding of the science of comparative religion, the broadening of the horizon of Christian thought in the homeland, and the bringing of distant peoples into the brotherhood of nations. These are results that can not be put into figures. While it is true that very diverse opinions are held concerning missions, it is indisputable that the most favorable testimonies come from those who have really taken the most pains to examine and understand their work. The one discouraging feature from the Christian point of view is the backwardness of Christendom in its great enterprise.

When we consider the importance of this work, not only from the standpoint of religious interests but with a view to its social and political significance, as bearing upon the future peace of the world, it is appalling to consider how vast is the field and how comparatively little has already been accomplished. I am submitting herewith two most important tables which are well worthy of careful examination, since in a general way they furnish a survey of what has been achieved, the great work which remains to be done, and the most inadequate voluntary agencies with which at present we are seeking to accomplish it.

Statistics of the great religions of the world.

[From the Blue Book of Missions, 1907.]

	Christians.			Jews.	Mohammedans.	Buddhists.	Hindus.	Confucianists and Taoists.	Shintoists.	Animists, Fetishists, etc.	Unclassed.	Totals.
	Protestants.	Roman Catholics.	Eastern churches.
Africa	2,665,000	2,493,000	3,799,000	381,000	50,910,000	11,000	277,000	31,000	.....	97,179,500	125,500	157,722,000
America, North	64,488,000	36,693,000	1,000,000	1,069,000	15,000	5,000	94,000	85,000	.....	20,000	8,002,000	111,651,000
America, South	362,000	36,125,000	.....	22,000	10,000	.....	108,000	4,000	.....	1,262,000	63,000	37,956,000
Asia	1,542,000	5,385,000	17,144,000	482,000	141,456,000	137,900,000	209,152,000	291,030,000	24,900,000	41,436,000	5,693,000	876,120,000
Australasia	3,424,000	964,000	1,000	17,000	3,000	4,000	1,000	31,000	.....	40,000	70,000	4,555,000
Europe	92,922,000	183,754,000	98,213,000	9,247,000	3,575,000	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,319,000	389,031,000
Mavlasia	416,500	7,095,500	.....	3,000	20,860,000	.....	27,000	570,000	.....	16,445,000	62,000	45,379,000
Oceania	247,000	129,000	.....	1,000	.....	15,000	.....	65,000	.....	507,000	18,000	982,000
Aggregate	166,066,500	272,638,500	120,157,000	11,222,000	216,630,000	137,935,000	209,659,000	291,816,000	24,900,000	157,069,500	15,352,500	1,623,446,000
	558,862,000

Summary of protestant missionary work.

	American.	British.	German.	Other societies, viz, Paris Society, Swiss Romande, Netherlands societies, Scandinavian societies, etc.	Totals for Christendom.	Totals for 1895 (showing growth between 1895 and 1907).
Ordained missionaries	1,911	1,980	932	912	5,735	4,028
Laymen	535	1,738	168	361	2,802	1,477
Unmarried women	1,527	2,332	150	378	4,387	2,578
Ordained natives	2,312	2,141	197	623	5,273	4,295
Communicants (full members)	545,180	565,179	240,883	466,208	1,817,450	995,793
Numbers added in 1906	63,916	38,614	25,983	12,336	140,849	63,081
Adherents	1,286,259	1,398,306	540,073	1,136,500	4,361,138	2,770,801
Schools	8,855	11,789	2,878	5,346	28,868	19,384
Scholars	344,213	619,399	139,891	199,402	1,302,905	786,002

Protestant Missionary Income.

1895	£2,724,194
1900	3,095,915
1905	3,932,377
1906	4,256,029
1907	4,473,933

The Statistical Atlas (1910) puts it at £5,071,225, of which British and American societies each find about £2,000 and German societies £427,455.

The chief missionary countries have been Great Britain, the United States, and Germany. Great Britain and America have jointly and about equally carried on approximately four-sixths of the missionary activities; Germany, one-sixth; and the French, Swiss, Netherlands, and Scandinavian societies about one-sixth; and, therefore, with the closing of the German missions much heavier obligations will be thrown upon those other countries, particularly upon America and England.

When we consider that, according to these tables, there are in the world only about 558,862,000 Christians and but 11,222,000 Jews, there remaining over 1,000,000,000 of people who are without education and the true faith of monotheism, in the absence of which genuine civilization is impossible, and that, it is estimated, all of the missionary activities of the past have secured but about 10,000.000 of converts, it becomes apparent how inadequate have been the means hitherto employed, how heavy is the obligation resting upon the enlightened countries for the performance of this vitally important work, and how disastrous it would be to ratify a treaty which does not safeguard its continuance and provide positively for its extension.

Every church, Protestant and Catholic, should protest against the omission from this treaty of such safeguarding clauses. Attention has already been called to the fact that pagan influences must have prevailed at Paris, since the name of Almighty God is not mentioned in the treaty, but here is additional evidence, since sinister influences must have prevented the protection by clear definition and specific provisions of the great fundamental rights of religious liberty, the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience, which implies the right to obey the missionary command.

In article 22 of the covenant provision is made that in Central Africa the "Mandatory must be responsible for the administration of the territory under conditions which will guarantee freedom of conscience and religion." In article 86 the Czecho-Slovaks and in article 93 the Poles accept and agree "to embody in a treaty with the principal allied and associated powers such provisions as may be deemed necessary by the said powers to protect the interests of inhabitants of that State who differ from the majority of the population in race, language, or religion," and in article 438 "The allied and associated powers agree that where Christian religious missions were being maintained by German societies or persons in territory belonging to them * * * the property which these missions possessed shall continue to be devoted to missionary purposes, and the allied and associated governments while continuing to maintain full control * * * will safeguard these missions."

Thus only in connection with Czechoslovakia, Poland, Central Africa, and former German territory is there any safeguarding of religious rights, and this apparently only for commercial and political purposes. I fail to find any other mention of religion or religious freedom in the treaty, and there is no positive affirmation, as I have indicated, of guaranties of those rights to hold, practice, preach, and disseminate religious faith which are so essential.

Other great peace treaties have safeguarded these rights. I quote from several treaties as examples:

[1713. Utrecht, treaty of (general), between Great Britain and France, March 31–April 11, 1713.]

ART. 21. The most Christian King will, in consideration of the friendship of the Queen of Great Britain, grant, that in making the treaty with the empire, all things concerning the state of religion in the aforesaid treaties of Westphalia, so that it shall plainly appear that the most Christian King neither will have nor would have had any alteration made in the said treaties. (In Chalmers, George. A collection of treaties between Great Britain and other powers. London, 1790, vol. 1, p. 384.)

[1713. Utrecht, treaty of (general), between Great Britain and France, March 31–April 11, 1713.]

ART. 5. * * * In the business of religion there shall be an entire liberty allowed to the subjects of each of the confederates, as also, if they are married to their wives and children; neither shall they be compelled to go to the churches or to be present at the religious worship in any other place. On the contrary, they may, without any kind of molestation, perform their religious exercises after their own way, although it be forbid by the laws of the kingdom, privately and within their own walls, and without the admittance of any other persons whatsoever. * * * (In Chalmers. Collection, etc., vol. 50, p. 395.)

[1763. Paris, treaty of.]

ART. 4 (covering Nova Scotia, Canada, and Cape Breton Island). * * * His Britannic Majesty * * * agrees to grant the liberty of the Catholic religion to the inhabitants of Canada. He will in consequence give the most precise and most effectual orders that his new Roman Catholic subjects may profess the worship of their religion, according to the rites of the Romish Church, as far as the laws of Great Britain permit * * *. (In Chalmers. Collection, etc., vol. 1, p. 472.)

ART. 20 (repeats the above for Florida, as well as for all the Spanish possessions in North America to the east or to the southeast of the river Mississippi). (In Chalmers. Collection, etc., vol. 1, p. 497.)

[1878. Berlin, treaty of.]

ART. 5. (Bulgaria.) The freedom and outward exercise of all forms of worship are assured to all persons belonging to Bulgaria, as well as to foreigners, and no hindrance shall be offered either to the hierarchical organization of the different communions or to their relations with their spiritual chiefs.

ART. 27. (Montenegro.) In Montenegro the difference of religious creeds and confessions shall not be alleged against any person as a ground of exclusion or incapacity in matters relating to the enjoyment of civil and political rights * * *.

(Freedom of religious worship worded in the same way as article 5 above.)

ART. 35. (Serbia.) (Same wording as article 5 above.)

ART 44. (Roumania.) (Same wording as article 5 above.)

ART. 62 (deals with religious liberty in general for Turkey): In no part of the Ottoman Empire shall difference of religion be alleged against any person as a ground for exclusion or incapacity as regards the discharge of civil and political rights, admission to the public employments, functions, and honors, or the exercise of the various professions and industries.

All persons shall be admitted, without distinction of religion, to give evidence before the tribunals.

The freedom and outward exercise of all forms of worship are assured to all, and no hindrance shall be offered either to the hierarchical organization of the various communions or to their relations with their spiritual chiefs.

Ecclesiastics, pilgrims, and monks of all nationalities traveling in Turkey in Europe or in Turkey in Asia shall enjoy the same rights, advantages, and privileges.

The right of official protection by the diplomatic and consular agents of the powers in Turkey is recognized both as regards the above-mentioned persons and their religious, charitable, and other establishments in the holy places and elsewhere.

The rights possessed by France are expressly reserved, and it is well understood that no alterations can be made in the status quo in the holy places.

The monks of Mount Athos, of whatever country they may be natives, shall be maintained in their former possessions and advantages, and shall enjoy, without any exception, complete equality of rights and prerogatives.

(Sir A. Oakes and R. B. Mowatt, Great European Treaties of the Nineteenth Century. Oxford, 1918.)

[1815, Vienna, treaty of.]

Article 21 (property of religious establishments to remain in statu quo).

ART. 46 (covering the free town of Frankfort). * * * Its institutions shall be founded upon the principle of a perfect equality of rights for the different sects of the Christian religion * * *.

ART. 77 (covering the rights of the inhabitants of the Canton of Berne). * * * shall enjoy in every respect, without any distinction of religion * * * the same political and civil rights * * *.

(Sir A. Oakes and R. B. Mowat, Great European Treaties of the Nineteenth Century. Oxford, 1918.)

On yesterday an attempt was made on the other side of the Chamber to convey the impression that all the churches of America were for this treaty unamended. Such an impression, if conveyed, is absolutely erroneous. I have in my hand a copy of a letter from the Federal Council of Churches, in which that council asks for amendments safeguarding these religious rights. I ask to have it inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, National Office, 612 United Charities Building, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York, Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, general secretary.]

MAY 23, 1919.

To the MEMBERS OF CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.

SIRS: I take pleasure in conveying to you the following action taken by the Federal Council at its special meeting held in Cleveland, Ohio, May 6–8, 1919: It was—

"Resolved, That we express our gratitude for the establishment of the league of nations as agreed upon by the Paris peace conference and pledge our support in securing its ratification by the Senate of the United States and our devotion to make it a success.

"Resolved, That we urge the incorporation at an early date into the covenant of the league of nations of a clause guaranteeing freedom of religious belief.

"Resolved, That we urge the incorporation at an early date into the covenant of the league of nations of a clause guaranteeing equality of race treatment, understanding by this the equal treatment in respect of the law and its administration in the case of aliens lawfully within the territory of the Government concerned."

Faithfully, yours,

(Signed) CHARLES S. MACFARLAND,
General Secretary.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, much as I desire to see a new and better international order, I am not one of those who can indulge in the seductive dream that by the swift stroke of a few score of pens on parchment, through the instrumentality of a mere treaty, without further toil and sacrifice, by seer, saint, and martyr, without the further heroic march and struggle of missionary through the forest and the jungle, over the marshes and across the desolate plains where men live like the wild beasts with which they contend, without further teaching and enlightenment, without the further education and elevation of peoples and the elimination of those false and pagan philosophies which keep the souls of so many millions in degradation and desolation, all of the sons of men of every race, tribe, condition, and nation can be united into a universal brotherhood which shall be dominated henceforth and forever by charity, by the two great golden, royal commandments, and that throughout the widest confines of the earth the eternal words of the spirit shall become the accepted law of mankind.

Sirs, so great a good can not come to man in such an unearned manner. Not through the promulgation of a statute, but by the regeneration of men, by the spirit, must such a millennium come. Unscrupulous men are playing now upon the highest human hopes to accomplish their own base ends, but there can be no excuse for those who would vote to ratify a treaty which fails to safeguard only those processes by which this unspeakable good may be at last accomplished. I appeal to the people of the churches of America. I appeal to the great church missionary leaders, some of whom, I believe, know the circumstances under which the machinators of this treaty at Paris refused to safeguard missionary interests, to demand in terms which may not be disregarded the rejection of this scheme which imperils the great educational missionary movement throughout the world.

I can not now even attempt to detail all of the wrongs which this treaty either creates or perpetuates. I hope at some future date to speak along this line on Ireland and the relation of the treaty to the cause of Irish freedom, which must be close to the hearts of America. If I were to attempt to state the case of Egypt, of Persia, of Russia, of Hungary, of Syria, and of all of the other lands whose hopes of self-determination and freedom this infamous instrument would condemn to perpetual defeat, I would trespass too far upon your time and still my point would not be made more clear. It is because I believe in the principles for which we fought that I can not believe in this treaty, which is the complete negation of all of those great principles. It is the adoption and not the rejection of this treaty which will break the heart of the world.

CONCLUSION.

Sirs, for too long have I trespassed upon your patience and with an argument so discursive that I must most briefly summarize it.

1. This Nation may not join or become part of any international government or supergovernment formed to achieve aims other than those to which our Government is dedicated—to establish justice, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to all.

2. There need be no narrow limitation placed upon the extent of the sphere which may be embraced in a republican federation if the well-known principles of federation are applied, which principles this covenant violates.

3. This covenant forms a new coalition of 358,000,000 of people as against a possible second coalition, as I have shown, of more than 1,000,000,000 of people, most of whom the smaller coalition plans to control if not to exploit.

4. The plan is condemned by an overwhelming majority of mankind and by nearly all men of liberal thought in the countries most deeply concerned.

5. The British Labor Party demands amendments of a vital character, looking to a true society of nations, and the end of colonial exploitation.

6. That the war has been a liberty war to usher in a new order, while this treaty is designed to preserve the old.

7. By article 10 we would guarantee title to much territory illegally gained and unrighteously held, and become responsible for intolerable conditions in all parts of the world, particularly in India, Africa, and Korea.

8. I indicated, through a quotation from Macaulay, the proper principles which should guide a wiser colonial policy.

9. I indicated our obligations to Africa, and how they might be met.

10. I have shown that this plan imperils the cause of missions and indicated, in the tables which I have submitted, the scope and significance of missions.

Sirs, we have a peculiar national destiny, that of demonstrating to the world the transcendent excellency and the universal applicability of free republican government and of persuading all other peoples to the adoption of those institutions and ideals which will assure to them the blessings of an ordered liberty. We may not adapt ourselves to the governmental forms or accept the purposes of other nations in place of those to which we owe such high and holy allegiance. We may not move backward, retreating to join the empires where they stand. We may not work out the pattern of our destiny by the plan which guides us, if we interweave the golden strands of our ideals of universal liberation with the coarse material and disintegrating fibers of their lust and greeds for exploitation. We may not stand with them under banners of lesser significance or service than our own. We may not follow their flags to the unceasing drum beat of empire round the world. We may not conscript American freemen, nourished with the milk of liberty at parental breasts, to keep step with the march of mercenary armies bent on the ancient errands of subjugation and exploitation. We may not carry our "banners of the dawn" back into the night. To do so would be to destroy our fair Republic, to extinguish the illuminating fires of liberty flaming on our altars, and to plunge the world into the blackness of despair. We must rather resolutely plant our own incomparable standard high, advance forward toward the future, and, swearing a fresh devotion to its great and best traditions, call the other nations to our colors. Let us rest serene in the faith of our fathers, that under the reign of everlasting and immutable law there can be no national security which is not founded upon right, no true victory which is not a moral victory, no permanent peace which is not established upon justice.

This being forever true, we might set our hands as proud victors to the ratification of this despicable document, deceiving ourselves into the fatuous belief that a permanent peace has been secured. But, sirs, within the shadow, unseen by mortal eyes, is fixed a Power which has ordained that men shall move forever on toward perfect justice and toward a larger liberty, and to Him through the unresting, turbulent, warring years which will follow this treaty's ratification, all the evils, the cruelties, the inhumanities sealed within it will cry out; to Him will still arise the supplications of many peoples held in bondage; to Him be uplifted the wasting, shackled arms of the oppressed; to Him will ascend the resistless pleas of centuries of unrequited wrongs; from Africa, where the heartless greed of the white man has been a withering curse to the black; where the slave trader buys from the native the wife he loves for the liquor which in his abject misery he craves; where tonight unnumbered thousands sweat through the wretchedness of unending hours, in filth and physical agony, which we have not sent our science to relieve; from plague, cholera, poverty, and hunger stricken India, where millions of our noble Aryan race are born to misery, live in dark illiteracy and heathenism, to be murdered at the last by the inhumanity of their more happy circumstanced brothers across the western seas; from beautiful Ireland, soul sickened at hope too long deferred, yet yearning with all the unquenchable passion of her youth for freedom and for the restoration of her national life; from Christian Korea, crying to be rescued from the ruthless clutch of her cruel pagan master and tormentor; from China, despoiled, ravished, and disillusioned as she was awakening from her centuries of slumber to a clearer conception of freedom and the ideals of our western civilization; from Russia, somewhat delirious and helpless with her new-found freedom, but receiving from us calumny, abuse, and the murder of her sons in an illegal, bloody war, when she had pled for succor, peace, and healing; from all the more than five hundred millions of the sons of men who, because of their exploitation, lie down to-night in cheerless huts, in the blackness of heathenism, upon floors of dirt, their souls dumbly, blindly as the inarticulate beasts, in their utmost wretchedness appealing to the Power which they themselves have not been taught to know. And, sirs, this Republic, if she should desert her purposes and her standards by the ratification of this treaty, must be arraigned at the last before that eternal Power of justice to answer why to all these cries for vindication and for liberation she turned deaf ears, and to her must come, if she shall participate in all these wrongs, the certain punishment and destruction which has been measured out through the past years to all those nations which could not hear the call of duty and refused to obey the mandates of the higher law.

I must believe that there can be no permanent peace until there shall be an end of imperialistic exploitation, until national and international purposes shall run in harmony with those underlying forces which forever move on to ethical ends. Of the Civil War, Lincoln said what may be equally said of this war:

> This is essentially a people's contest. On the side of the Union it is a struggle for the maintaining of that form and substance of government whose leading object is to elevate the condition of men, to lift artificial weights from all shoulders, to clear the paths of laudable pursuit to all, to afford an unfettered start and a fair chance in the race of life.

This "leading" object of our domestic policy must also be the determining purpose of our foreign policy. We must not seek a negative and passive peace to preserve the status quo, but an affirmative upbuilding peace which shall give birth to the new world order.

Washington, Hamilton, Jefferson, Adams, Lincoln, Cleveland, McKinley, and the immortal Roosevelt cherished international amity and peace. Propose to their philosophy a league of nations, and back the answer most certainly must come, "What kind of nations? Will they be of the 'form and substance of the republic,' and shall each be dedicated wholly to the elevation and emancipation of mankind?" Propose to their philosophy a league of peace. I think I hear the answer, "What kind of peace?" Shall this unceasing and increasing tide of human events, which we have believed moved on to distant and divinely appointed ends, find at last a mechanical termination in one vast stagnant pool of passivity and of universal pacificism, which, static, stale, foul, motionless, and scummed, shall mark the death of all this forward surge and struggle of the world? Can you have doubt that they would say: "Peace, sirs, in itself may be a miserable aim. Peace must be made an incident in a larger, effective, reformative, and upbuilding plan."

Have you a doubt of this? Then call upon the ashes of these mighty men to answer from their urns or let their spirits speak and tell if it were better had they not bared their breasts to battle for the right and for the rights of men, or call them with the long glory roll of America's immortal martyrs. I think you hear the answer pealing and re-pealing down the corridors of the years, ever swelling, now rising with the ringing voices of our last honored, heroic dead, whose sacred dust lies beneath the simple crosses on the silent fields of France or in our most peaceful churchyards:

"There is a price which, by the eternal law of God, the sons of men dare not to pay for peace."

The victory of this war was an American victory, and it is for this Senate, by declining to compromise with injustice, by refusing to lower or carry back our standards to see that the peace is made an American peace.

I know that there are some of these new promiscuous internationalists who, extolling the achievements of other nations, decline to admit the distinctive glory of their own. I wish that all such might be made to remember the story of that battle which raged between Chateau-Thierry and Dormans, beginning on that eventful Saturday night, the 14th day of July, 1918. The Americans had waited through the long day in their trenches, expectant that at any moment the German hordes, supported by artillery, machine guns, and armed tanks, would come plunging, crushing like thunderbolts of iron and steel through our lines. Evening came, and slowly over the miles of winding trenches was thrown the soft mantle of the silent night—silent but so full of portent. At Paris, but 47 miles away, sweet-toned cathedral bells tolled forth the solemn hour of midnight, while pure, brave women and helpless children slumbered in peace and confidence that their defenders would stand like walls of steel and everlasting granite between them and those who would so ruthlessly ravish and destroy.

It was a half hour after midnight when suddenly from beyond the woodland, far off in the distance, there shot up tongues of flame, and then came the muffled thunder of artillery, the ominous opening of the second Battle of the Marne, destined to be remembered through future generations as the greatest of the decisive battles of all time. From that half hour after midnight there was no rest. All through the night our troops suffered the incessant roar of a terrific cannonade, while bursting bombs split the air and hissing shells plowed with giant furrows the scarred ground over against and all about them.

When the first dawn painted the eastern sky with red and gold, the Germans, behind a hellish barrage, launched a mighty, furious charge. It struck and shook the American lines; all was chaos, din, and confusion; an inferno of noise; the wild, crashing thunder of reeking guns; deafening explosions; the mad onrush of thousands of men. Men fell groaning. Men grappled with men, and bayonets sank home in quivering flesh. Our men resisted to the utmost. Yet on they came, division after division, the best shock troops of the Kaiser's hosts. On they came, bronzed, lean, hungry, muscular, their sunken eyes burning with the deep fires of hellish hate. On, on they came in such a flood that human flesh could not withstand the onslaught. It was a terrible, a desperate, a magnificent charge. Backward and forward surged and seethed the waves of living, panting, desperately struggling men, until finally, now fighting calmly and heroically, now resisting with the fury of madmen, the American troops yielded, step by step, and the Stars and Stripes were forced to give ground, slowly, haltingly, retiring. It was the supreme hour of battle. The Germans were over the Marne, marching on like infernal machines against the crumbling French and American lines—and Paris 47 short miles away.

The communication wires were crackling, electric with warning signals, while excited messengers in breathless haste panted out to the assembled staff officers at the French headquarters the fateful information that the Germans were smashing on resistlessly and that our lines had broken. What was to be done? The consultation was brief, the decision prompt, the order was issued from the French headquarters to the French divisions and to the Americans, struggling with determination, to fall back to safer positions. You will recall the deathless words of the American officer who received this command:

> We regret being unable on this occasion to follow the counsels of our masters, the French, but the American flag has been forced to retire. This is unendurable and none of our soldiers would understand their not being asked to do whatever is necessary to reestablish a situation which is humiliating to us and unacceptable to our country's honor. We are going to counterattack.

Shall I say that this was the decisive event of the battle? I can say more, for it was the turning point of the war, a critical, a supreme moment in the history of civilization. For many weary months the Allies had been on the defensive. Now all was changed. "We are going to counterattack." The order was given to Americans, to company, to battalion, to regiment, that whole magnificent division; and, oh, how gallantly, how madly the Americans charged with a courage and a desperation which were to thrill a waiting world. On, on they charged, down into the valley of the Marne, driving the Germans into the river. On, on over the Marne, up, up those bloody slopes to St. Germaine, to Jaulgonne, to Goussancourt, on to the historic Fere en Tardenois. On, on through the Bois de Dole, which should now no longer be called the "Woods of Sorrow," but the "Woods of Glory"; on, on to the River Vesle and to an immortal victory. The dangerous German salient, which like a monstrous serpent's deadly fang had threatened Paris, was destroyed. Paris was saved.

For swift as a flame their heroism spread northward through all the serried ranks of the French and British hosts, and within a few hours the allied lines, not to be outdone in valor, had launched another magnificent attack between Albert and Montdidier, and within a few brief, glorious, and victorious days, days of tremendous and terrific combat, the menacing salient at Moreuil was also broken and the strategic and historic city of Amiens, which had for months lain helpless in imminent peril beneath the frowning and threatening guns of the enemy, was relieved.

You know the rest of the story—of the fall of Rosieres, of Chaulnes, of Roye, of Noyon, of Lens, of the breaking of the Hindenburg line. The American counterattack had inaugurated and developed a mighty allied offensive, and the carefully laid plans and the stupendous efforts of the German generals and of the German hosts for their rush to the sea, for their capture of Paris, for victory, and conquest, were shattered. America had led to victory.

Sirs, in the making of this treaty European purposes and aims prevailed, and we deeply regret that on this occasion once more we are unable to follow the counsels of our French and British brothers, but to do so would be to permit our American principles and ideals to go down to a disastrous defeat. The ratification of this treaty by the Senate would again create a situation "humiliating to us and unacceptable to our country's honor."

We must refuse all compromise with injustice and dishonor, and standing firmly our ground demand such drastic changes in this covenant as would make it conform to the great purposes and ideals not only of this Nation, but of the new leaders of Great Britain as well, as expressed in the amendments suggested by the British Labor Party, and, failing to secure such radical amendments, reject the whole treaty and summon the world again into a council, which shall, without prejudice, passion, or hatred, formulate plans for an upbuilding peace, a peace of purpose and of progress, a peace consistent with our best traditions, and with the highest aspirations of the English race. In all that I have said in condemnation of the colonial policies which have been dictated by the British reactionaries, I have intended no unkindness to the noble English people, and, indeed, the most severe criticisms which I have made were embodied in words written by Englishmen themselves. A reactionary administration here joined with the reactionary ministers of England and France in the formulation of this plan, which has received the criticism and condemnation of the masses of France and England, as it will receive the same from the liberal-minded millions of America, when they shall understand the scheme. Never were the masses of England and America closer together, never were hands clasped across the seas in firmer friendship. We are bound now to our English brothers by ties stronger than language and blood, for in this war there has been created a new kinship between the liberty-loving men of England and those of America, a new and more intimate community of purpose and ideals, a new shared sense of responsibility to the backward peoples, a new conception as to the meaning of "the white man's burden."

Some one has said that when the cup of human abominations becomes filled the Almighty generally interposes. In 1917 the world's cup of wrongs, agonies, and abominations was overflowing, and there came an unmistakable summons to this Republic, which she heard, interpreted, and at once obeyed. She called her sons to her armies, to her shops, to her factories, to flaming forges, glowing ingots, and to ringing anvils, and placed herself in splendid shining armor, putting upon her mighty limbs all of the habiliments of war, to stand forth the invincible champion and vindicator of human rights. This Republic must now move forward beneath the incomparable flag which, new baptized in war, has taken on a fresh beauty and significance, to a peace which may be permanent because broad based upon the principles of eternal justice and the inalienable rights of men, and as the leader she must call to her exalted standards and ideals that vast procession of mankind whose so eager eatward-looking faces now begin to shine with the first crimsoned glance of radiant sun rising in splendor on a better age.

Mr. NELSON obtained the floor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator yield to me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no; let us go on; I do not care.

Mr. President, I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate for only a few moments, and I shall occupy the time in stating some general propositions which I think may be of interest.

> Night wanes—the vapours round the mountains curl'd
> Melt into morn, and light awakes the world.

Mr. President, a spark from a small Balkan State kindled the great conflagration of war in Europe, for which Germany had long prepared the combustible material. It spread like a whirlwind from the banks of the Danube across the Rhine into innocent and neutral Belgium and thence into trembling and agonized France. Most of us had at the beginning no idea that the conflagration would spread to the hither side of the Atlantic and involve our country in the vortex, though to a few of us this seemed from the start inevitable. Three thousand miles of ocean were, as it turned out, to give us no immunity. It became in time a great World War; the greatest of all known in history. All Europe, except a few small neutral nations on the outer fringes, was involved, and even these did not escape some of the tragic and sad incidents of the war.

For two years and eight months the war dragged its horrid, barbaric, and uncertain course before our country was impelled to enter the struggle. The German submarines were attempting and threatening to exclude and isolate America from all commercial intercourse with Europe. This was the apparent spark which aroused the spirit of our people to the striking point. But the heart and soul of America was not enlisted in the great conflict because of the submarine nor for the purpose of transplanting democracy to Europe. The inspiration came from a deeper and more profound source. The trend of events, before and during the war, clearly indicated that Germany aspired to world dominion and world control and that France, Belgium, and England stood in her pathway as obstacles, to be first vanquished and overcome. Could she succeed in this, all Europe would be at her mercy and under her control, and her system of autocracy and ruthless militarism would be paramount throughout the Continent, and the subjugated States, as well as the small neutral States, would be to a greater or lesser extent mere vassals of her Empire.

The German menace was twofold. It was not only one of mere brute force, but the sinister and ruthless character of its system and methods was even more to be dreaded. Had complete success crowned the efforts of Germany in the war, as she had planned it, America would have been regarded by her as an open and free field for her exploitation, and the Monroe doctrine would have been regarded as a "mere scrap of paper."

With this view of the case, as I have briefly outlined it, it seemed to me and to many others that it was our war from the very beginning, even before we formally entered therein, and that the Allies were in fact fighting our battles on the plains of Belgium and France, where we subsequently came to their relief, and where, by so doing, we made it our war as much as theirs. It was not until our people had become fully awake and alive to the character of the German menace that the heart and soul of America entered the Great War—a World War—with a few small neutral nations as spectators. It was a menace from Europe that threatened us, and we had to meet and overcome that menace on the battle fields of Europe, more than 3,000 miles from our shores.

One supreme lesson comes to us from this war, and that is this: Our country can no longer isolate itself on the Western Hemisphere in peace or in war, or occupy an attitude such as that of Japan prior to the advent of Commodore Perry. Neither commercially, industrially, nor politically can we isolate ourselves from Europe. Any menace from that source which vitally affects our commerce and trade, our political well-being, or national existence must always concern us. The avenues to Europe and to all her people must always be open to us. Chaos and anarchy there react on us here to a greater or lesser extent. We can not carry on intercourse with any country given over to lawlessness or to any form of anarchy or mob rule. Neither can we afford to allow any nation to become a power which inherently and by its very nature and methods aims at world dominion and world control. Such a power may at any time, as in the recent war, become a continuing menace to the safety, peace, and prosperity of our country. More danger to America lurks in the East than in the West, in Europe than in Asia.

Any nation seeking to dominate and control all of Europe will, if successful in its purpose, be a standing menace to the welfare, the prosperity, and the independence of America. Overcrowded Germany, if England, France, and Italy were rendered helpless, would soon flood South America with her emigrants; and Argentina, Uruguay, and Brazil, and other States of South America would in the near future become German colonies, for the Monroe doctrine would not prove much, if any, obstacle to the all-conquering Teuton with his relentless war machine.

It was a world's war in which our Nation engaged, and it was an enemy seeking world power and dominion that we fought and vanquished; yes, fought and vanquished on the plains of Europe. The war has not settled the use of the submarine—the ostensible, but not real, cause of the war. The most that can be said is that for the time being, and perhaps for some years to come, the fangs of war have been extracted from the enemy; but to what extent and for how long none of us can easily foretell.

Germany is likely to turn her face to the east and seek to exploit Russia, as she aimed to exploit Belgium and France. She owes much of her growth in the past to aggressions against her neighbors. Austria was her victim on the southeast, Poland on the east, Denmark on the north, and France on the west. These conquests were the boast and the pride of her statesmen and generals. Not content with despoiling Denmark in 1864 and thus getting control of the Baltic and the North Sea, in this war she aimed to secure a footing on the coast of Belgium and northern France for the purpose of controlling the British Channel and securing access to the Atlantic by that route.

Who can doubt, if he has studied the facts, that Germany, with her allies—Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria, and Turkey—bred and fostered a world's war, and that this war was on their part a menace to the remainder of the civilized world, including our own country?

Such a war manifestly entails upon the countries who were successful in the war the duty for their own future protection, if for nothing else, to secure and establish a world peace, a peace that will cover the entire field of combustion.

The field of peace is as broad as the field of war. As the welfare and safety of America impelled us to make war in Europe, why should not the future welfare and safety of our country impel us, in conjunction with our allies, to prevent the recurrence of such a war? A spark from petty Serbia kindled the flames of a war which involved practically the entire civilized world, our own country included. A spark from some other source in Europe may easily start a conflagration resulting in another great world war into which our country will be as likely to be drawn as into the late war; for such a war would, no doubt, involve blockades and stoppage of intercourse by submarines and other methods.

Modern medical science has devoted its skill fully as much to the prevention as to the cure of disease, with wonderful results and blessings for the entire human race. Sound statesmanship should act on the same principle.

It seems to me that that statesmanship which is oblivious to the importance of providing by all reasonable methods against the recurrence of war in the future, and insists on standing still until war actually occurs, is short-sighted, lives in the past, lacks world vision, and overlooks the fact that a world's war should result in a world's peace, and that such a peace should, as far as possible, be of a permanent character.

It will not do for such narrow and selfish views to hide themselves behind a "holier than thou" cry of patriotism, or, as they choose to call it, "Americanism." Patriotism and Americanism are not confined to those who thus shout. The Bible tells us that—

> Not everyone that saith unto me Lord, Lord shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.

I can not sympathize with that sentiment which would have our country crawl into a closed shell with no other label than the Monroe doctrine.

There should be and is a conscience of nations as there is of individuals. The Poles, the Czechs, and the Slavs rendered us and our Allies considerable assistance in the war, and they were in one form or another encouraged, led to believe, and promised that they would secure their independence if the enemy was defeated. The treaty has carried out this promise. Provision is made for an independent Poland and an independent Czechoslovakia. And now the question is, Shall we treat these provisions of the treaty as "mere scraps of paper"? Shall we now utterly abandon these new States and give ourselves no concern whatsoever about their future welfare? Shall we become to them a mere national mummy, wrapped in the folds of the Monroe doctrine? I do not believe the American conscience will stand for this or suffer it to be called "Americanism." This is counterfeit "Americanism." The people of our great Republic occupy a higher moral level than this. They have a conscience that brooks no national injustice; they are above and beyond the supreme selfishness that such conduct implies. Peace will come to Europe when oppressed peoples and suppressed nations come into their own.

Our country can be of great service to them without resorting to war. There is no need to obligate ourselves, nor should we obligate ourselves to make war in their behalf. But let it be understood that the United States is vitally interested in their existence and will look with extreme disfavor on any tampering with their independence. Such a course will greatly tend to stabilize the situation in Europe.

The recent war demonstrated to the world that our country was a veritable Samson among the war-making nations of the Old World. The heavy hand of Uncle Sam throttled the German monster of war more thoroughly than it had ever been throttled before. With this experience fresh in mind, it strikes me that the frown of Uncle Sam will be more effective and go farther than ever before, and these new nations are certainly entitled to his frown in their behalf.

But there is another view of the situation that is palpable to me. The danger of future war lurks in Germany more than anywhere else in Europe. A rejuvenated and restored France on her west, a vigorous Czechoslovakia on her southeast, and an organized and well-established Poland on her east will serve to show the German people that free and independent self-governing nations are not a myth, and that military autocracy is a monster of the most hideous mien, from which they will in due time seek to be relieved. Such free governments, if successful, as I feel and hope they will be, can not be otherwise than a great object lesson to the German people who are entitled to a free and liberal government.

These new States will also be of great help to stabilize conditions in Russia and relieve the poor people of that country from the terrors of Bolshevism, which has not only been a curse to them but has reached out its poisonous fangs to other parts of the world—our own country with the rest. Bolshevik emissaries in considerable number have been sent to us, and as a by-product of their activity we have with us the so-called parlor Bolshevik—the slimiest and most dangerous specimen of the entire nefarious brood.

There can be no real peace of the world with the Bolsheviki rampant in Russia. They are not only a menace there but they are spreading their activity and nefarious propaganda not only in the rest of Europe but also in America. The gospel and propaganda of Bolshevism is a serious disturbing element in our own midst at this very time, to which we ought not to close our eyes or be entirely oblivious. The cure lies in extinguishing the Bolshevik terror in Russia and in aiding that country to establish a free and liberal government of law and order. Dry up the fountainhead of Bolshevism over there and the rest of the world, our own country included, will secure some relief from this terrible moral pest that seeks to undermine and destroy all stable governments the world over.

Neither should we be oblivious or indifferent to the conditions in the Balkan States and Turkey, both a breeding ground for wars, past and future. The peace of Europe has often been broken and war engendered from these sources. If these five or six petty Balkan States, under the leadership of Serbia, can be welded into a confederacy, after the plan of Canada, Australia, and South Africa, it would tend more than anything else to stabilize conditions there and remove the incentive for war, and they would cease to be a football for Austria.

A spark from Serbia ignited the train which brought on this Great War. The wise course is to smother the embers and combustible materials found in these regions in the manner I have indicated.

And are we not interested in opening the Bosporus and the Dardanelles to the commerce of the world, and ought we not to take an interest in American schools and missionaries in Turkey—and I was glad to hear my friend from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] call attention to that subject. Are we to treat these countries, these regions, as a "no man's land," devoted to chaos and anarchy? There was a time, long ago, when we sent our men-of-war to chastise the Barbary pirates without even a declaration of war; but now, when we are still technically at war, the treaty of peace being still unratified, we grow nervous over the landing of a few American marines and sailors in a small port of the Dalmatian coast, and this nervousness is of a piece with the greater nervousness manifested toward England and Japan. When all other arguments against the treaty fail, those who openly or covertly desire the defeat of the treaty resort to a scare about these countries, and paint in lurid colors the threatening dangers from Japan in the east and England in the west.

Their attacks are concentrated on countries that were our allies in the war rather than on the common enemy. These were favorite tactics during the war of those who were opposed to the war or who sympathized with the enemy. The letters I receive indicate that this class of men are now greatly in evidence against the treaty. But how those whose heart and soul were in the war can now assume such an attitude seems to me passing strange. They seem to forget how easily and swiftly France and Belgium would have been conquered if England had not entered the war as promptly as she did. They seem to forget that the Briton, the Australian, the New Zealander, and the Canadian soldier fought side by side and shoulder to shoulder with our brave boys on the fated fields of France. They seem to forget that they are of the same blood and the same language as our own people. They seem to forget that in all the elements of a free Government and personal liberty these countries stand on a par with ours. They seem to forget that aside from the peculiar Federal system of our Government, the fundamental principles of our constitutional liberty came from England and were established by the so-called English revolution of 1688. For over 100 years Canada, on our northern boundary extending from ocean to ocean, has, barring some Fenian raids from our country into theirs, been an open door to us and to them, barring only trade and tariff regulations. We have lived at peace with them and they with us, and it is difficult to see what danger threatens us from this source. Is it not more likely and more probable that the English-speaking nations will make common cause against a common enemy?

But the strangest thing of all is that those who are so nervous about England are also so very nervous about American soldiers rendering any assistance to the anti-Bolsheviki in Russia. They seem to be anxious that the Bolsheviki should have a free hand.

As to Shantung, while I am clear that it should be restored to China, and I believe it will be, let it be remembered that except for the war Germany would have retained her hold on Shantung, and as between her and Japan I can not see why any of us should prefer Germany. When Germany some years ago seized the Shantung Peninsula, I did not hear any patriots in this Chamber making a violent protest against it.

Since Commodore Perry opened the doors of Japan she has become the most progressive nation in the Orient, while China has in the meantime made little or no progress. Japan may be fairly called the Yankee of the Orient. But bright and energetic as the Japanese are, still we do not want them in our midst. Their proper place for expansion is the Orient, in the midst of the yellow race, where they may be able to extend their civilization and energy to their slovenly and nonprogressive neighbors. The population of Japan, within the narrow confines of its Island Empire, is congested and manifestly needs a field for expansion. We do not want the Japanese with us, nor for that matter are they wanted anywhere on the Western Hemisphere. Their proper field is the Far East, the Orient, where the white race can not be at home.

Hermit Korea, in spite of all that has been said to the contrary, is reaping the benefits of the progressive energy of Japan. Public buildings, railroads, highways, and bridges have been built where none existed before. Agriculture and trade have been developed, law and order established such as was never known before, and new life and new energy have been infused into the sodden, listless masses, some of whom have protested against being aroused from their state of lethargy and inertness; but they have protested without knowing what was for their own interest.

What Great Britain has done for South Africa, Japan will, no doubt in a measure, do for Korea, though on different lines. And as to only half-developed southeastern Manchuria, the seat of the Manchu dynasty, which proved of no great blessing to China, what harm can happen to our country or to any of the nations of the west from the further development of that country under the auspices of Japan? Only those capitalistic exploiters and promoters who hover for prey in backward and dormant countries will feel called upon to protest. A developed Orient, developed for production, commerce and trade, for law and order, can not but prove of advantage to our country and to the whole civilized world.

Mr. President, I have thus briefly called attention to some of the problems involved in a permanent peace of the world. Such a peace should succeed such a war, and our country is vitally interested in the one as much as we were in the other. We do not want another such war, and therefore our country should cooperate with our allies, as we did in the war, in securing the blessings of a permanent world's peace, as necessary and essential for the prosperity and well-being of our country as for any other country on the face of the earth.

In conclusion, Mr. President, permit me to say that I have not made these remarks under the idea that I am a statesman. I am further from that than any other man in this Chamber. Neither have I said it so much because of my being a Senator from Minnesota. It has rather been the spirit of old Corpl. NELSON, of the Fourth Wisconsin, that has made these remarks to you.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMOOT in the chair). The suggestion of the lack of a quorum is made, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Ball	Hale	New	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Harris	Newberry	Smoot
Borah	Harrison	Norris	Spencer
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Nugent	Stanley
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Sutherland
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Thomas
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Page	Townsend
Colt	Keyes	Phelan	Trammell
Curtis	King	Phipps	Underwood
Dial	Kirby	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Knox	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Fernald	Lenroot	Reed	Williams
Fletcher	Lodge	Robinson	Wolcott
France	McCormick	Sheppard
Gay	McNary	Shields
Gerry	Moses	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. DIAL. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] on account of illness in his family.

Mr. GERRY. I announce the absence of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], in attendance upon a meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] on official business.

Mr. PHELAN. I wish to state, in behalf of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], that he is detained by a session of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, to defeat the Germans and to destroy their great military machine was not the chief motive which induced the United States to enter the battle fields of Europe at a time when the fortunes of the Allies seemed darkest and almost hopeless.

To be sure, the defeat of the German armies was and had to be the immediate tangible objective. This, however, was to us only a means to bring about certain results. Victory has now come. For the past nine or ten months there has been in every section of our country a continuous procession of victorious home-coming American boys. The sacrifices in human life, the sufferings of the maimed and wounded in our Army and Navy, the struggles of our people at home in their efforts to support our armies abroad, we have declared time and again during the war, from the floor of Congress, from every platform and pulpit in the land, should not be in vain.

Are we keeping faith with the American people? What did we promise the 4,000,000 American boys whom this Government called into the military service of the country? To these men of the Army and Navy, and their fathers and mothers, yes, to all the people of this country, we made two solemn promises, which in their importance overshadow all other promises, all other objects we set out to attain.

We promised, first, that we would not consider this war won until we had liberated from bondage and oppression the enslaved peoples of Europe. It is true, Mr. President, that the American people can justly claim that they have had a part in winning independence and freedom for some of these races in Europe. But we have not fully kept our promise. Indeed, our failure has cast an added gloom over the hearts of all liberty-loving peoples who still remain in oppression.

We made another pledge. We have repeatedly assured the American people that they were fighting to make democracy safe for the world; that we entered the war to protect the rights of small nations; but important as these aims were, we promised above everything else to do our utmost to bring about, after the overthrow of the German military power, an organization or union of the civilized nations and peoples of the world in one great concerted movement to end wars and establish permanent peace.

Let us turn to the record of the peace conference at Versailles and see what has been done to fulfill the pledges made during the war. Let us see who were there representing—I was going to say the respective Governments—but let us say, in order that the solemnity of the scene may be before us, the millions of dead heroes, the crippled soldiers, the widowed mothers, and the orphans, upon whose shoulders very largely rested the sacrifices and burdens of this war. We know who were the leaders there—the representatives of Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Belgium—men whose Governments have again and again clashed with one another! Men whose countries' ambitions rivaled each other for centuries in their efforts to gain territorial, commercial, and financial supremacy. Men whose lifelong training in European politics and diplomacy prevented them from harmonizing their views on any single subject before the peace conference, except the necessity of making with their common enemy a treaty based on common interests.

What was in the minds of these men as they gathered around the peace table? Reparation? Yes. Indemnities? Yes. Punitive damages? Yes. But what was in their minds in regard to the redemption of the promise to end wars, to establish an enduring peace? What does the record of their deliberations show was in their minds, so far as that record has been disclosed?

Does it not show that with the exception of our own country, the allied countries applied the right of self-determination to their enemies only, whilst reserving to themselves the privilege of repression, subjugation, and exploitation as it suited their convenience or inured to their profit?

Is this language too severe? Not when you consider that they had not merely undertaken to make a treaty with the enemy, but were there to fulfill a promise made to their people that they would make a resurvey of the map of the world with the idea of removing all those evil influences and injustices that had promoted war in the past and would continue to promote it in the future. They did resurvey that part of the world over which their enemies had dominated, but they refused, as I shall point out later, to set up any machinery to provide for a resurvey of the rest of the world, and for the application among themselves of those principles of justice that make for lasting peace.

How much of altruism, how much justice, how much of the true spirit that must underlie an honorable league of nations was in their hearts?

Was it not the old order with its evil diplomacy, its accursed materialism, and its cynical disregard of human rights?

Into this peace conference, dominated in its majority by secret diplomacy, intrigues, jealousies, and national rivalries, entered the representatives of the United States, refusing to claim for ourselves one inch of territory or one dollar of reparation. Thank God, America refused to profit by the agony of the world! There was nothing that America desired that our allies had in their power to grant except cooperation in a world movement to end forever bloodshed, poverty, misery, famine, and all the unspeakable crimes and destruction that war entails.

For our sacrifices, for the financial obligations assumed for our allies, for the burdens of taxation that we must levy for years upon our people, for the heartaches and pains and suffering and the physically weakened manhood and womanhood of our Nation we asked only for the institution at that peace conference of a league of nations founded upon the principles of universal justice.

How has our altruism in this war been received by our allies? What is the character of the response they have made to our high hopes of a new world order?

America's great democratic leader, President Wilson, presented to the peace conference the ideals and purposes which should have formed the basis of a just settlement and the organization of world peace. However men here or elsewhere may criticize the details of this treaty and covenant, they can never take from him the credit that history will award for his vision, his singleness of purpose, and his persevering efforts to further at that conference the great movement for world peace through a league of nations.

No man has more clearly put into language the dreams of world democracy which the human race has longed to see come true. His words have awakened and lifted up the hopes of all the struggling of the earth and have brought hope to hearts and hearths where hope was dead. To try to perfect his work, to endeavor to strike out injustices contained in this momentous document, is not to rob him of one iota of the glory that is his for having represented the aspirations of liberty-loving masses of men everywhere.

I am irrevocably committed to the principle of a league of nations. Had the conference at Versailles really carried out the principles our President had clearly and courageously proclaimed to the world during the war, no Senator, I believe, would have dared to vote against such a new and healthy method of settling international disputes and preventing future wars. It is the complete absence of the high-minded sentiments we proclaimed during the war that has provoked the great opposition to this covenant and crushed the hopes of progressive, forward-looking men throughout the world.

I believe, however, that there is something here given us containing the framework of an international tribunal that may be made useful. I believe it to be our duty to approach this great question in a constructive rather than in a destructive state of mind. Let us find out what there is that is good—and there is much that is good in it—and let us retain and safeguard that in this covenant; let us find out what there is that is unjust and what it may be necessary to remove, just as a surgeon removes a malignant growth from the human body. Let us see what injustices are sanctioned. Let us see if it be possible for this Senate to make this a league founded upon principles of honor and fair dealing.

Surely, to object to this attitude is to deny Senators their constitutional rights. As a Member of this body, I consider it my duty to review this document to see whether it contains clauses dangerous to the existence and perpetuity of this Republic and seek to eliminate them.

But it is said, and forcibly, by many that this league is and of necessity must be a compromise—that the President was surrounded by circumstances and in an environment that made it necessary for him to "give and take." Whatever justification the President may have had for that position, and I do not claim that he pursued such a course, certainly the Senate, whose duty it is "to advise and consent" to treaties, must carefully determine whether what America is asked to surrender in this treaty may not be destructive of most valuable American rights. There are some things that can not be compromised, as, for instance, the violation of the fundamental conceptions of justice; the denial of the right to existence of small nationalities; the interference with the legitimate national aspirations of any people; and the perpetuation of oppression.

Future war is a terrible thought to contemplate. The loss and suffering to the human family of another war might even be more appalling than what we have just witnessed. But there are still more terrible things to contemplate than war, and a continued and permanent state of serfdom and oppression is one of them. If this be not true, then our forefathers were not justified in going to war to establish this Republic. If in the future submerged peoples are driven to the extremity of rebellion to obtain their freedom and to preserve their political liberty, it will be because this treaty of peace failed to provide for a real league of nations, which could and would apply the principle of self-determination to all peoples.

If this league is founded upon the theory that war can best be averted by each nation guaranteeing to the other members of the league their territorial integrity, it will fail to serve the world's purposes. To surrender the principle of justice in the hope to obtain peace is to be forgetful of the fact that to barter justice is to sell the soul of the nations of the world. With these fundamentals in mind let us proceed to discuss certain phases of the treaty and covenant which I believe contain provisions which should be modified or removed.

SHANTUNG.

The Shantung provision of this treaty is indefensible. To consent to and advise the ratification of this provision in its present form would be, as I view it, an act of national dishonor.

The Chinese, who were our allies in the recent war, had the right to have their interests fully and impartially considered at the peace conference. To sanction the secret agreements, entered into by nations which were assumed to be believers in the principle of self-determination, designing to despoil China of her control of an important part of her territory and population situated as strategically as Shantung is, can not be defended on any basis of justice or international honesty. Its inclusion in the treaty has resulted in casting distrust and discredit upon the whole plan of the league of nations proposed by the representatives of Governments who consented to this flagrant violation of the fundamental principles that make for universal peace. The only argument suggested to justify America's agreeing to this Shantung deal is that it will tend to smooth the delicate relations between Japan and ourselves and get her signature to the covenant for a league.

Compromise principle, accept dishonor, ratify robbery to cultivate the friendship of any nation—to secure the signature of any nation to a compact which undertakes to abolish wars! Could absurdity go further? When has America heretofore preached or practiced such unethical principles? Did we not go into the war for the purpose of preventing any people anywhere of their own arbitrary will endangering the peace of the world? If we are content to conclude a peace which, while preventing Germany from imposing its will by force upon Belgium or France, allows Japan to impose its will upon China, a friendly ally; and if, while we were waging war against Germany for this principle, we for any reason fail to maintain it against all the world, Japan included; we may confess to ourselves that we have lost the war.

If this was our battle, if these were our ends,
Which were our enemies, which were our friends?

Mr. President, I will lend my influence and cast my vote for every effort made to prevent the United States from sealing such a compact burdened with so much of national dishonor and of national perfidy. I can not subscribe to the casuistry, however plausible, that peace can be maintained by a provision which sanctions and legalizes the crime of Shantung, a compact which has a proper place only in secret treaties and under-the-table diplomacy. It smacks of spoils, land-grabbing, and sows the seed of tyranny and future wars.

ARTICLE 10.

The keynote of the doctrine incorporated in article 10 of the covenant is an open and complete reversal of the traditions of this Republic. It means, in my opinion, a departure from the major principle upon which America was founded and which the American people have long and tenaciously cherished. It means that our Republic would in all probability be to-day a colony of Great Britain had this league of nations, with article 10 inserted, existed previous to our Revolution.

Let us examine the wording of this article. It provides in the first clause:

The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and the existing political independence of all members of the league.

This dangerous provision may completely do away with the right of asylum in this country for persons charged with political offenses, for it may be held to be an act of external aggression to harbor a political refugee. This right of asylum to such persons has been the pride of all liberty-loving Americans since the Republic was founded. This provision, however, would make it impossible for the United States to offer a place of refuge to those whom any of the allied governments would be hounding for political reasons. This country might be obliged under this covenant to refuse admission to such men as were Carl Schurz, Dr. Jacobi, John Boyle O'Reilly, John Mitchel, and thousands of others who fortunately managed to escape the clutches of oppression. Under this covenant America might have been called upon to turn a cold shoulder to Kosciusko after he had fought for our independence if he had returned to America to plead for the freedom of the Poles, because he could have been charged with pleading for aid that might lead to external aggression or "threat or danger of such aggression." Men like Kossuth, who was received with acclaim by our people when he came here, would have to be excluded, or at least our right to receive them might be conditioned upon possible action by the league of nations.

To be sure, article 10 has "external aggression" provided for as a condition for the guaranty, but who is to decide what "external aggression" means? Who is to tell what are the limitations of this phraseology? What is involved in the phrase, "its existing political independence"? Is hatred of a king, a czar, a tyrant; is a desire to obtain a government based upon the consent of the governed, an interference with "existing political independence"? If the present attitude of certain of our allies toward subject peoples is any criterion, I fear it would be so considered.

It is provided that the jurisdiction of the league shall not extend to a matter which, according to the contention of one of the parties, is found by the council on settled principles of international law to be a matter of purely domestic concern. It should be noted that the council has jurisdiction not merely to decide the ultimate question, but also the preliminary question whether the question before the council is one that falls within its jurisdiction. Again, even assuming that such a visit as Kossuth's, De Valera's, and representatives of the Hindus and Boers who have visited this country soliciting the aid of our people—even, I say, if these visits could not be considered acts of "external aggression," it is still true that we could not exercise our right to admit them if any member of the league to whom such visits would be displeasing brought up the question, as under the provisions of article 11 it is possible to do by claiming that the United States in receiving these representatives would thereby be a party to "a circumstance which threatens to disturb the good understanding between nations."

There is no principle of international law laid down in the covenant to enable us to decide a question of fact such as what is and what is not a matter of domestic concern. In the very nature of things it is a question for the council in a particular case to determine whether or not a disputed question is one of purely domestic concern.

In the case of agitation, say, in the United States, against the alleged oppression and massacres of the Jews by the Poles and by the Roumanians, the repression and subjection of the Egyptians and Hindus by the English, the Koreans and Chinese by the Japanese, the Lithuanians by the Russians, it would seem to be a matter of domestic concern, but from the point of view of the Governments whose "existing political independence" is attacked, with the possibility of external aid, it is an international matter of great importance. Such activities as I have referred to might be construed to violate distinctly and specifically the provisions of article 10 and article 11, and the United States might then be obliged to suppress such agitation and expel such persons who sought aid for their weak and enslaved countrymen.

Have we forgotten the history of our own country's struggle for independence? Do we imagine that never again will an oppressed people be inspired to do what we did when the Continental Congress dispatched Franklin to France to obtain aid, which was given whole-heartedly, France sending La Fayette and Rochambeau with men and money? What was this but external aggression against the territorial integrity of Great Britain? Had this league, with article 10, been in force it might have been the solemn obligation of France to seize our philosopher-diplomat, Franklin, and deliver him in chains to England. Surely the United States should not take a position which would prevent our receiving from oppressed people missions such as Franklin carried to Europe. To accept article 10 as it stands is to do violence to our own history and to give the lie to our traditional policy of helpfulness to the downtrodden and the oppressed.

We can not rely on arguments that are Utopian or construe every interpretation of article 10 from the viewpoint of Americanism; we can not expect that peace and good will will be universal among human beings as soon as this covenant goes into effect. The provision of article 10, in my opinion, makes permanent the rule of force in every part of the world, and this, if we accept it, under the solemn sanction and guaranty of the United States Government.

The peace provisions, following upon the creation of the league in Part I of the treaty, constitute, as it were, an example of what might be expected from the league, and, what was far more serious, represent the status quo which the league, by article 10 of its covenant, is pledged to maintain. It is one thing for the United States to depart from its traditions of avoiding alliances with European powers where the interests of justice and world peace are closely involved, but it is quite another thing for the United States to pledge its economic policies and possibly its military forces to maintain a settlement which does violence to all accepted standards of public and private right.

The second sentence of article 10 provides:

> In case of any such aggression or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression the council shall advise upon means by which this obligation shall be fulfilled.

Who dares to predict the limitation of interpretations which may be placed by the council upon the words "any threat or danger of aggression"?

Who dares to assert that the council could not hold that the harboring of political refugees, the legitimate agitation in America or any other country of the just claims of oppressed peoples for freedom, or the protests in this country of minority peoples who have been persecuted by their Governments through racial or religious prejudices, may not be held to be a "threat or danger of external aggression" to a member of the league, and therefore a case for the council to advise as to the obligations of the alleged offending member of the league?

Who dares to place any limitations—political, military, or financial—upon the words "advise upon means"? These phrases clearly compel America to either consult the council or to be in constant fear of advice or action by the council upon her right to extend hospitality, comfort, and aid to that class of people the world over who have looked to us for sympathy and support.

This power of the council to "advise upon" the means to be employed in such contingencies imports the power to act. To be sure, it is not specifically stated. To me it seems that the explicit recital of such power was intentionally avoided, but any sound interpretation of this league provision and of its language and context must import such power to act.

President Wilson interpreted the second sentence of article 10—in his message transmitting the Franco-American alliance treaty—as follows: "After the league council's advice has been duly given, the league members will do precisely as they please about following it." The difficulty that arises is this: In the first sentence the members of the league solemnly agree to respect and protect each other as against external aggression. In the second sentence—according to the President's interpretation—a league member will act upon the league council's advice in a given case of aggression "only if its judgment justifies such action." Mr. Hughes said of article 10 that it was an "illusory engagement." The President actually says that it is no engagement at all. He says that the league council may advise, but that the league members may go in their respective ways without giving the slightest heed to the advice. If article 10 be interpreted to mean anything, it surely means that the United States engages to send armed forces whenever and wherever the league council orders them to be sent. If it be interpreted as the President interprets it, the United States agrees to follow or ignore the advice at the pleasure of the United States. One interpretation involves the ordering about of American troops by a supergovernment; the other interpretation practically eliminates the value of article 10 from the treaty.

In concluding for the present my analysis of article 10, may I not fairly argue that it is capable of so many interpretations, vague and visionary, that as it stands it is pregnant with the germs of disputes, misunderstandings, and possible wars for the United States?

The only solution, therefore, is to remove any possible doubt as to its application to the United States by a reservation specifically stating the position of our Government.

RIGHTS OF SUBJECT PEOPLES.

In approaching the question of the effect of this covenant upon the rights of submerged peoples seeking independence, such as the people of Ireland, I wish to emphasize that I am not actuated by any feeling of animosity or racial antipathy. I breathe no hate. I seek no vengeance. I voice no retribution. I am an American. I was born on soil made sacred by the blood of the heroes of the Revolution. America is my country and to her alone I owe my allegiance. I address you to-day, Mr. President, with a feeling of anxious concern for the safety of my country, for the perpetuity of her institutions, and for the preservation of constitutional liberty, of that ordered justice and freedom based on law which has secured for us nearly a century and a half of progress—industrial, political, and spiritual—such as has never before been witnessed in the history of mankind.

Surely no real American will deny to any element of our population which has kindred relationship to races in Europe still submerged the right to express its views as to the manner in which it believes this covenant may affect the future of subject races. The very fact that Senator after Senator, many of whom have no kinship with any of the subject peoples most affected, has dealt with the effect which this covenant might have upon the Irish problem is indicative of the desire on the part of all Americans that no step should be taken here that will make it more difficult for oppressed peoples anywhere to obtain their liberty in the very same manner, if need be, and with all the opportunities for outside aid which our forefathers possessed.

Mr. President, before attempting to discuss this subject to which so many of my able associates in this Chamber have repeatedly referred, I want to tell you, and I am confident I speak the innermost conviction of the people of Irish blood in this country—of the more than 500,000 soldiers of Irish extraction who enlisted in this Great War—that much as they yearn to see their kindred free, much as their hearts are torn by events in Ireland, by the harassing, dragooning, and repression of the people of that sad little island, as citizens of this Republic their first concern is for the safety, honor, and preservation of this country, the land of their birth or adoption.

Some wonder at the intensity of feeling on the part of the people in America of Irish blood to secure the application of the principle of self-determination to the land of their forbears. What, think you, must be the feeling of disappointment and of sadness experienced by the hundreds of thousands of American soldier boys of Celtic blood, justly proud of their work in liberating the enslaved peoples of Europe, when they hear a still voice in the depths of their heart saying, "I have helped to bring independence and freedom to many enslaved peoples; I have helped to remove the shackles of political oppression from many races; but the race from which I have sprung is still left, the only English-speaking race in the world to-day in political subjection"? Indeed, may he not also add, "Can it be that my Government, which I have had the honor to serve in liberating other races, is now negotiating, unconsciously perhaps, to make it more difficult for my kindred in Europe to obtain their long hoped and prayed for freedom?"

What think you must be the thoughts of American parents of Celtic blood, whose sons' bodies lie in Flanders Fields, when they learn that while their supreme sacrifice helped to bring independence and freedom to many races and peoples of whose existence they had never known, the Empire with whose soldiers their sons fought side by side continues to deny to their kindred across the sea the same measure of independence that America and her allies have bestowed upon the races who were our enemies in this war?

Words can not express the depths of anxiety of these people when they contemplate the possibility that this country—this country which welcomed their exiled forefathers and gave them their first realization of equality of opportunity and enjoyment of liberty as they fled from tyranny and oppression in Europe—may be about to join the country which has been their ancient enemy in a covenant which they believe may result in crushing out future means and opportunities of obtaining freedom for the land of their ancestors.

Just what is the attitude of Americans of Celtic blood and their sympathizers in regard to this covenant? As I understand it, and as I have been fully informed, they are not opposed to a just league of nations. Neither do they seek in any way to involve the United States of America in any controversy with Great Britain.

In a word, they ask—and they have a right to ask—the United States Senate not to ratify that part of this covenant which many sincerely believe puts an end once and for all time to America's ancient and historic attitude toward oppressed peoples. To accuse them of opposing this league merely for the purpose of humiliating or embarrassing England would be a grave injustice to the great rank and file of Americans of Celtic blood. It is, indeed, amazing to find intelligent men who, in discussing the Irish problem, allege that this element in America's population seeks to involve America in a war against Great Britain in order to bring about the freedom of Ireland. The man who makes such an accusation is grossly ignorant of the facts, or makes such contention in an effort on his part to justify opposition to their legitimate demands. It is adding insult to injury.

No section or element of our population has a right to ask America to incur the enmity of any nation because of prejudices resulting from grievances in other parts of the world; but it certainly has a right to ask America not to join with oppressors of its kin in Europe in restricting the opportunities to obtain their independence, or assist, directly or indirectly, in crushing out the legitimate aspirations of any people. As I understand the position of the people of Irish blood in America, they, as American citizens, ask the United States not to join in any league or make any agreement with other nations which may hinder or forever bar oppressed peoples from obtaining independence.

Millions of American men, women, and children who have sprung from races held for years, and in some cases centuries, in bondage and oppression, are now turning for help with outstretched hands to the Government of the United States—a Government which they love and to which they have always been loyal and faithful; a Government for which they have made every sacrifice and to the prosperity and progress of which they have contributed most substantially. It is this Government, the hope of the downtrodden and oppressed peoples of the world, that they hopefully petition and implore not to raise a single barrier against their kith and kin on the other side of the Atlantic, and ask it not to take any action which might prevent them, in their own way and in their own time, from obtaining liberty and freedom. They are simply asking us to keep "hands off." They implore us not to agree to join a league with other nations which will make it more difficult, if not impossible, for freedom to come to the country of their birth or descent. Could a request be more simple? Could such a prayer be more American?

I confess I have tried to find in the covenant—and I have studied it all the more carefully and intently because I realized the intensity and depth of feeling of these people—I have tried to discover on the basis of all information available to me whether they were not mistaken, whether they were not misinformed, whether they were not misled as to just what effect this covenant would have in the future handling of the problems of subject nations. I regret to say that I am convinced that there is no agency created or provision made in the covenant which gives the slightest hope of the league of nations ever amicably adjusting the problems of submerged peoples. I refuse to mislead them by suggesting possible opportunities for hearings or adjustments when no such provisions are contained in the document before us.

This covenant changes the present attitude of America toward peoples which have not as yet been fortunate enough to obtain an independent existence, at least in two very vital particulars. First, it prevents, through article 10, this Nation or any other nation from going to the assistance or aid of any oppressed race seeking independence; indeed, it has been again and again admitted in this Chamber that if an outside nation went to the assistance of any oppressed race it would be the duty of the United States to join with the oppressor in waging war upon the government offering aid. Certainly it can not be said that this will tend to multiply possibilities and opportunities for assistance in such cases. Second, this covenant makes no provision whereby even a hearing for any subject nation could be obtained.

Let us not deceive ourselves. Let no Senator vote for this covenant and justify his vote upon the pretense that he is helping subject peoples by setting up a world tribunal where hearings can be had for the application of the principle of self-determination. No Senator can point to any language that justifies the assertion that there ever can be a hearing given these peoples if the nation charged with oppression objects.

Article 11 apparently provides for such a hearing. There the following language is used: "Any war or threat of war is hereby declared a matter of concern to the whole league, and the league shall take any action," and so forth; and, further, "Any circumstance whatever affecting international relations which threatens to disturb either the peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends" any member of the league may bring to the attention of the council. But everybody agrees that there are questions or situations which can never be considered by the league, namely, domestic questions and internal disturbances of a revolutionary character. That the relationship, for instance, of Ireland to England is a domestic question has been repeatedly stated by British statesmen.

If the question of giving independence or self-government to Ireland may be heard by this league of nations, then it could be logically contended that the question of Japanese immigration into this country, considered by everybody a domestic question, could be heard by the league. If we have a right, and America demands that right, to define and decide for ourselves what questions properly come within the designation of domestic questions, Great Britain will and should have the same right; and certainly no Member here is so optimistic as to think that Great Britain will not avail herself of the claim that the Persian, the Hindu, the Egyptian, the Irish, and the South African questions are of a domestic character.

There are two ways by which a subject nation might have its case laid or presented before a league of nations: First, by having the subject nation itself present its case and, second, through a member of the league. Opportunity is not given in this covenant to subject nations or oppressed nationalities to present their own cases, not being members of the league itself, and not even prospective members of the league in view of the limitations of admission. Even if a subject people should succeed in getting a member of the league to present its case, all that the offending member holding that particular race in subjection needs to do is to say that the question is of domestic concern and the case would immediately be dropped.

The members of this body need not be told the elastic and varied meanings that can be given to the term "domestic concern," nor is it necessary to call to their attention the innumerable acts of injustice that have been perpetrated in the course of history, the slaughter of innocent men, women, and children, that have been committed against the laws of God and man without interference by any outside nation, merely because of the plea that the questions were of domestic concern. This plea has prevented many nations from interfering in behalf of subjected peoples. The words "domestic concern" undefined in this league of nations perpetuate and make permanent the oppressor's right to shield himself by submitting the plea of lack of jurisdiction because the question is of domestic concern. Indeed this league, in providing that the council must act unanimously, makes the oppressor sole judge and jury of any plea or objection which the oppressed may advance. It would be unnatural indeed for England not to resort to a defense so well provided for her in the covenant when the Irish question, for instance, is raised. The presentation of such a question is precluded by the very terms of the covenant itself.

But let us see if the case of a subject nation seeking self-determination could come up in any other way. Suppose there is armed resistance and a state of war exists; it is no concern of this league, and not a problem that this league can deliberate upon, because it is either a domestic question—a resistance by a people against a government imposed upon them—or a revolution. You can not take one clause out of this covenant and say that it provides thus and thus without considering the relationship of that clause to every other clause in the covenant. So when the words "any circumstance whatever affecting international relations" are used it means any circumstance except disputes within the domestic jurisdiction of any member of the league. No other interpretation of the context is possible.

Not merely does this covenant contain no provision whereby cases involving the principle of self-determination could peaceably be presented for consideration, but I also emphatically assert that provisions to give hearings and deal with problems affecting the rights of subject nations were intentionally and deliberately excluded from this covenant. Let me quote article 10 in its original form:

> The contracting powers unite in guaranteeing to each other political independence and territorial integrity against external aggression. But it is understood between them that such territorial readjustments, if any, as may in the future become necessary by reason of changes in present racial conditions and aspirations or present social and political relationships, pursuant to the principle of self-determination, and also such territorial readjustments as may in the judgment of three-fourths of the delegates be demanded by the welfare and manifest interests of the people concerned, may be effected, if agreeable to those people and to the States from which the territory is separated, or to which it is added, and that territorial changes may in equity involve material compensation. The contracting powers accept without reservation the principle that the peace of the world is superior in importance to every question whatever of political jurisdiction or boundary.

And now let us quote article 10 as it emerged from the peace conference at Versailles, and is laid before us for our ratification—

> The members of the league undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. In case of any such aggression or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the council shall advise upon the means by which the obligation shall be fulfilled.

The sentences omitted from the original draft, and particularly the last clause, "the contracting parties accept without reservation the principle that the peace of the world is superior in importance to every question of political jurisdiction or boundary," contained the declaration of principles which would have provided for the readjustment of boundaries and the application of the principle of self-determination. The present form of article 10 makes it impossible for any man standing for American ideals, as outlined in President Wilson's 14 points, to support that article. Why were these sentences, which provide the machinery for the submission of questions involving political jurisdiction or boundary for the possible evolution and development of small nations, struck from the original article 10? It is not difficult to answer. These sentences, which enunciated the most important principles embodied in the President's program of America's aims in the war, constituted a provision which would have given hope and new life to every people striving to obtain liberty. They were omitted either because the same principle was elsewhere expressed in this covenant—which no one for a moment contends—or because the representatives of some of the allied Governments at that peace conference refused to subscribe to them. The omission of these laudable provisions indicates that it was not the purpose of the framers of this covenant to provide for a peaceful revision of boundaries in the future or to permit the league to take political jurisdiction of any question involving the application of the principle of self-determination.

In brief, the original article 10 provided for revision and readjustment in the future. Article 10, before as now, obstructs revision, denies readjustment, and makes this a status quo league. It is a league of nations which seeks to preserve peace by maintaining the status quo of existing boundary lines. It is a scheme to autocratically preserve and maintain the political independence and the territorial integrity of existing nations. It is un-American. Most reluctantly am I forced to the conclusion that this article has not as its basic principle the idea so well expressed by Horace Greeley when he wrote in an autograph album now in the possession of a page in this Senate, the words "With faith that universal justice alone makes for universal peace."

INEQUALITY OF REPRESENTATION.

I can not subscribe to any provision in this covenant which will permit any government to have more votes or more influence in this league than the United States of America. The least that any American can accept is equal representation for our country with that of any other. I do not desire to deprive the self-governing dominions of Great Britain of representation in this assembly provided for in this covenant, but I do most strongly object to Great Britain, which includes England and its dominions, having 6 votes to our 1 vote. If, as has been claimed, the assembly is merely a "debating society," I would not, without a protest, consent to permit any government having six debaters to present its case against the one debater which the United States would have.

But this inequality of representation has a very serious possible consequence when we consider in this connection the provisions of article 4. Under that article it is very clear that the 6 votes of Great Britain in the assembly might be a very potent factor in selecting the four nonpermanent members of the council. It is not at all improbable that the 6 votes of Great Britain in the assembly, with such outside support as she could muster, would permit her to name and control at all times a majority in the council. Though unanimity of action is required in the council the present method of arrangement offers means of manipulation whereby the block of 4 votes thus secured would tend to increase the chances of obtaining a unanimous and favorable decision.

In connection with the statement that the assembly is little more than a debating society, it should be borne in mind that the assembly, in addition to all its other duties, elects new members to the league by a two-thirds majority of votes and also advises the council upon the reconsideration of inapplicable treaties. Further, the assembly can advise on international conditions dangerous to peace and can inquire into disputes referred to it by the council or the parties in dispute, and by a majority vote make recommendations which will be binding if concurred in by the votes of all the States represented in the council, exclusive of the parties to the dispute. Who will say that six votes to any one government will not prove to be a powerful influence in registering final judgment in all matters coming up for consideration before the assembly?

To say that this league is to be free of all political influences, prejudices, and jealousies is to ascribe attributes to human nature which heretofore have not existed.

TRUSTED BY THE WORLD.

I think one of the most inspiring sentences that has ever fallen from the lips of our President was that uttered by him in his speech in Boston on February 24 last, within a few hours after he had returned to American soil from a three months' absence at the peace conference. "The proudest thing I have to report," said he, "is that this great country of ours is trusted throughout the world." Trusted throughout the world? Surely not by the representatives of the British Empire! In all history I do not believe there is a more transparent act of diplomatic treachery and deception practiced by one nation upon another than that of Mr. Balfour in coming to America, after we had declared war and agreed to join with his country and the Allies in waging war upon Germany, and withholding all information about the secret treaties which he held concealed in his pocket—the secret treaties made with Japan and with other countries who were our cobelligerents as well as England's. Trusted by the world? Surely not by Great Britain, when she refused to accept during the war the principle enunciated by our President and later suppressed at the peace conference at her instance, namely, the question of the freedom of the seas. What motive could she have possibly had for this action except that she refused to trust us impartially to recognize and protect the legitimate right of every power to ply its commerce on the high seas without restraint?

Trusted by Japan? Surely not when she refused to yield to the importunities of our President and stubbornly insisted that the price of her assent to membership in the league of nations was to be our acquiescence in her subjection of the 30,000,000 helpless people of Shantung, whose only offense is that they are weak and defenseless.

Our President is quoted on another occasion as saying "that whenever it was desired that a small force of soldiers should be sent to occupy a piece of territory where it was thought nobody else would be welcome, they asked for American soldiers, and that where other soldiers would be looked upon with suspicion and perhaps be met with resistance the American soldier would be welcomed with acclaim." Does not this imply that we have been, and let us hope will continue to be, trusted by small, weak nations and to use the President's phrase by "downtrodden and fearful people"? What a wonderful tribute to our country! Mr. President, why have we won this tribute from the peoples of the world? We have won it because right rather than might has been our guiding influence in our relations with other nations, because we have refused to enter into partnerships or form alliances with nations which have lost the confidence and merited the distrust of their neighbors. For my part I greatly prefer that America should remain forever outside the league of nations if to enter it means that the peoples who heretofore have trusted us shall trust us no more. Our sacrifices, our moral and financial support, and every resource that we possess, must continue to be given without restraint to all nations of the earth who need a friend.

Can it be possible that, after all, we have reason to doubt whether we are trusted by the powerful and great nations with whom we were allied in the war? Before we enter into this solemn obligation, this binding partnership with these great nations whose sons have lived and fought and died with our sons in the trenches of France, we would do well to stop and consider just how much they do trust us. To argue that they will refuse to accept suggestions made to strengthen and protect this league by the representatives of the American people in their Congress is to give the lie to the claim that they do trust us.

DIFFERING WITH DEMOCRATIC ASSOCIATES.

It is not pleasant to differ from my colleagues on this side of the Chamber. Because of my high regard for their views I have steadily fought against the constantly growing conviction that I could not, without violence to my conscience, by voice or vote support some of the features of this covenant. In parting from them by supporting some reservations which I deem necessary, I believe I am not departing from my party principles. As I have understood its traditional policies, domestic and foreign, the Democratic Party has consistently stood for the redress of the grievances of the weak and oppressed. To vote for this covenant without protecting reservations is, in my opinion, to legalize international wrongs, to endanger the sovereignty of America, to deny the downtrodden and submerged races of the world the right to enjoy some day the blessing of liberty, the love of which the Almighty has planted in every human breast.

I love the Democratic Party. I have served it for 25 years. It has honored me beyond my humble deserts. But I am an American first, and I am not unmindful of the fact that I have taken a solemn oath to preserve the Constitution of my country. If choice must be made between a league of nations and the Constitution of the United States, I am first and last with the Constitution.

Mr. President, out of the far-reaching and exhaustive discussions in this Chamber on this most important question—perhaps the most important the United States Senate has ever passed upon—I have been striving to grasp the basic American ideals and principles by which I must be guided. The conclusion which I have reached is that he who is called to serve in such a crisis best serves America by responding to the unmistakable call of her people, at all hazards, to safeguard American institutions, preserve our self-government, respect and maintain our best traditions. This does not mean, however, that we should selfishly sit apart, secure in the possession of liberty and other bounteous gifts of nature and of nature's God, and watch without interest the struggles of less favored humanity nor offer a helping hand to calm, steady, and save a weak—yes, sick if you will—yet at heart a sound and virile civilization.

In so far as I believe the text of the treaty and covenant before us conflicts with these principles, I have raised, and shall continue to raise, my voice of protest. I may be misjudged, my motives may be questioned, as has been the lot of many Members of the Senate who have taken sides on this question; but whatever may be the judgment of my fellow men, I at least shall have the satisfaction of knowing that by protesting against the injustice of the Shantung provision and the dangers lurking in article 10 for America and the world I have not consciously done anything to make it difficult for any American or any citizen of the world to say as did Kossuth, when he turned to the American flag in Fanueil Hall, "A flag without a stain; a country without a crime." [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The officers of the Senate will remove from the galleries those who have violated the rules of the Senate. Let us see whether the Sergeant at Arms can carry out the order of the Senate. [After a pause.] Do not stand there scratching your heads. Take those out who violate the rules of the Senate.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. I want to see first whether the rules are going to be obeyed or not. [A pause.] The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr President, it had been my intention to submit a few remarks to-day on the subject of the league of nations and ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter which I received from the governor of Colorado and 19 other leading citizens, together with a copy of my reply thereto. However, on account of the lateness of the hour and the fact that we have just listened to a most eloquent speech from the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], I shall content myself with asking for unanimous consent for the printing of the letters in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters are as follows:

DENVER, COLO., October 4, 1919.

HON. LAWRENCE C. PHIPPS,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned Republicans of Colorado, knowing that you will be interested in the attitude taken by many of your constituents toward the peace treaty with Germany now before the Senate, and especially toward that part of it containing a covenant for a league of nations, respectfully urge that you vote for the ratification of the treaty without further delay, but with the reservations suggested below.

It is too obvious for comment that the only hope of averting international war, with its train of blood, destruction, costly armament, and taxation, is by organizing the nations for peace. Experience has proven all other methods to be failures. Our own national security, our business and industrial interests, the very security of civilization itself, require the prompt ratification of the treaty, including the covenant for the league of nations. That covenant may not be what all of us would have it, but as the foundation for a better international order it contains the great principles of mutual reduction of armament, of enforced investigation, and arbitration as a condition precedent to war, of what for many years at least will be much needed—a world of stabilized national boundaries, and, further, the machinery for the establishment of a great international court and for the development, codification, and enforcement of international law.

It remains, however, to make clear beyond all doubt or cavil the sense in which the United States understands and, therefore, assumes the obligations imposed by the treaty. Simple clarification of this kind will not require, as would amendments, the resubmission to and renegotiation with the many nations represented in the drafting of the covenant.

In the resolution of ratification, or in a separate resolution, we believe that the interpretation of the obligations assumed by the United States should be made clear to the following effect:

First. That where the covenant provides that a member may withdraw upon two years' notice, provided its obligations have been fulfilled, the provision should be construed as giving to every member of the league and, therefore, to the United States as one of the members, the exclusive right to determine whether its own obligations have been fulfilled.

Second. That where the covenant provides that nothing therein is to be considered as affecting the Monroe doctrine as defined by the United States is exempted from the jurisdiction of and consideration by the league.

Third. That where the covenant provides that the league shall not retain jurisdiction of the domestic questions of its various members, and, therefore, of the United States, the interpretation should be to the effect that the domestic questions are excepted from submission to and consideration by the league and that immigration, citizenship, coastwise trade, and the tariff are examples of what the United States considers domestic questions.

Fourth. Where the covenant contemplates that economic boycott or war may be declared by the members of the league against one of their number who has offended by violating the obligations imposed by the league the interpretation should be to the effect that, under our Constitution, Congress shall be the sole judge, when the occasion arises, as to whether the provisions of the covenant, according to their intent and meaning, as applied to the circumstances of the occasion, require or do not require the United States to declare or participate either in an economic boycott or in war.

We further assert that it is our emphatic belief that the majority of the Republicans of this State are in accord with the views as herein expressed.

Very truly, yours,

Oliver H. Shoup, Henry A. Buchtel, Herbert S. Hadley, James H. Pershing, L. Ward Bannister, J. W. Kelly, Halsted L. Ritter, George P. Steele, W. S. Iliff, C. C. Parks, Albert A. Reed, Rush Holland, J. J. Vick Roy, A. A. Lee, Carlos M. Cole, C. A. Kendrick, I. I. Boak, E. H. McLennahann, Henry McAllister, jr., John D. Fleming, Melancthon F. Libby.

—

OCTOBER 9, 1919.

Messrs. Oliver H. Shoup, Henry A. Buchtel, Herbert S. Hadley, James H. Pershing, L. Ward Bannister, J. W. Kelly, Halsted L. Ritter, George P. Steele, W. S. Iliff, C. C. Parks, Albert A. Reed, Rush Holland, J. J. Vick Roy, A. A. Lee, Carlos M. Cole, C. A. Kendrick, I. I. Boak, E. H. McLennahann, Henry McAllister, jr., John D. Fleming, Melancthon F. Libby.

DEAR SIRS: Your communication of October 1, which I understand has had wide circulation in the newspapers of Colorado, and which sets forth briefly your views as to proposed reservations to the league of nations contained in the draft of the pending treaty of peace with Germany, has had my attention. Permit me to thank you for this communication, as I am very anxious to have the opinion of citizens of Colorado on this vastly important question, especially when, as in this case, such opinion is presumably the result of careful study and deliberation.

You urge me to vote for ratification of the treaty without further delay, but with the reservations you suggest, thus implying that there has been unnecessary delay and possibly that my attitude is partly the cause. Allow me to call attention to the fact that the league included in the treaty, with which it has been entwined, did not officially reach the Committee on Foreign Relations until the 14th day of July, eight months after the signing of the armistice, and was reported out by that committee on September 4, notwithstanding the fact that it had not, nor has it yet, received the official copy of the treaty with Austria, which was signed by the peace commissioners on or before September 2, and which treaty has direct bearing on the treaty with Germany; and, further, that the committee was very much hampered by its inability to obtain official information relating to important features of the treaty in response to its numerous requests for such data.

As a matter of fact, the situation in regard to the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany is accurately stated by the New York Tribune in its issue of to-day, from which I quote:

"The peace treaty in the last article provides that it shall go into effect when ratified by Germany and any three of the principal allied and associated powers.

"The King of Italy yesterday ratified the treaty, but this is not ratification as Americans understand the word. It appears that the decree must be submitted to the Italian Parliament for approval. The British Empire is commonly rated as having ratified. It has, so far as Great Britain proper is concerned, but Australia has not yet acted, and so no instrument of ratification, it would seem, has been filed at Paris. France, Japan, and the United States not having yet acted, it follows that so far Germany is the only country which has completed ratification.

"Complaint has been made of the Senate for 'holding up' the peace. But it may turn out, if there is action, which now seems probable, and the ratification is accepted by the executive department in the form it is to have, that this country will be the first of the Allies to ratify. So far the Senate has not delayed the peace."

It should be generally conceded that the document now before the Senate, embracing the treaty and the league, is the most important one which any Senate of the United States has ever been called upon to consider, the questions involved being of vital importance to the welfare of our country. Members of the Senate have devoted much of their time since the present session opened, on May 19 last, to a careful study of all questions involved, many of them having read the treaty through from cover to cover at least a half dozen times and that part covering the proposed league of nations many times more; and those of you who have merely read through the entire treaty once will appreciate the task involved in not merely the reading but also an analysis of the points covered in the treaty.

You state that our business and industrial interests, together with our own national security and the very security of civilization, require the prompt ratification of the treaty, including the covenant. The record of exports and importations does not appear to give basis for these assertions. Even did such conditions as indicated by you exist, it is my opinion that Senators would still demand the much greater importance of modifying the treaty into such form as to properly protect and preserve the full sovereignty of the United States and the inherent rights of our people.

While it is true that the league covenant does provide for the formation of an international court, I fail to find any direct provision in either the league covenant or any other portion of the treaty that specifically provides for the development and codification of international law, although I have read through the former at least a dozen times and the latter three separate times. It seems to me that the machinery of The Hague tribunal could have been used, at least, as a foundation for the carrying on of this work, but it has not been made available.

There has been much propaganda spread broadcast over the country in which the supposed danger of making amendments that would require the treaty to be resubmitted to the signatories has been placed before our people at a great expense and with a view to influencing the action of the Senate. Such effort has apparently availed nothing, as Senators well know that the necessary amendments can be readily passed upon by the peace commissioners representing the signatories, who are still in session in Paris, including our own representatives who have been formulating the proposed treaties with Bulgaria and Turkey, against which countries the United States has never declared war, or by separate letters of acceptance exchanged between the powers interested.

You speak of a resolution of ratification or a separate resolution in order that the interpretation of the obligations we would assume be made clear, and in this connection I desire to state that my following of the debates which have occurred in the Senate Chamber has convinced me beyond question that mere interpretations or separate resolutions would be unavailing and of no force or effect whatever in case of a dispute arising between the parties to the treaty at some future time. Therefore, reservations included in the act of ratification or amendments to the treaty are the only effectual means of securing necessary changes in the language of the treaty.

1. Your first suggestion for a reservation would involve a direct amendment, as it would apply to all parties signatory to the league, whereas the reservation proposed by the Foreign Relations Committee would secure to the United States the unconditional right to withdraw upon the notice provided for, leaving it the sole judge as to whether or not its international obligations have been fulfilled. I do not believe that any one of the principal allied powers or any other signatory would object to this reservation.

2. I do not understand you to put forward the language of your paragraph marked "Second" as a substitute for that proposed by the Foreign Relations Committee, which I believe covers the situation properly as to the Monroe doctrine. As the suggestions made by that committee properly cover the reservation in question, I shall support that reservation.

3. A comparison of the language used by you and that suggested by the Committee on Foreign Relations discloses the fact that you have omitted the word "commerce." While it is true that commerce has international as well as domestic phases, the same may be said of both the tariff and immigration; and, in my opinion, it is quite as essential to reserve for our own determination the questions which relate to commerce as it is to take care of any other of our domestic affairs. Disputes growing out of commerce, tariff, and immigration have in the past been most fruitful causes of war. However, citizenship, which you suggest should be specifically named, can not be other than a domestic question at any time, and for that reason the language as suggested by the committee to the effect, "all domestic and political questions relating to its affairs," necessarily includes citizenship.

4. Your suggestion, as I understand it, is intended to apply not only to article 10 of the covenant but also to any other of the articles contained therein which import an obligation of the United States to join in measures of economic boycott or declaration of war. Under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, the only department of our Government authorized to act in either matter is the Congress of the United States, and its power to decide can not be delegated. The reservation proposed by the committee would retain in the Congress this full power and, as stated in the committee's report, "under no circumstances must there by any legal or moral obligation upon the United States to enter into war or to send its Army and Navy abroad or without the unfettered action of Congress to impose economic boycotts on other countries. * * * These constitutional rights of Congress must not be impaired by any agreements such as are presented in this treaty, nor can any opportunity of charging the United States with bad faith be permitted. No American soldiers or sailors must be sent to fight in other lands at the bidding of a league of nations. American lives must not be sacrificed except by the will and command of the American people, acting through their constitutional representatives in Congress." We should not lose sight of the fact that under our Constitution it is not possible to authorize our member of the council or members of the assembly to decide matters that would result in economic boycotts or acts of war on the part of the United States; nor do I believe it possible that the people of this Nation will at any time be willing to transfer those powers now vested in Congress to their representatives on either the council or the assembly created under the proposed covenant.

Repeating what I have said in reference to the first point raised by you, it does not seem possible that any one of the principal allied nations or any other signatory to the league will object to the reservations as proposed by the Foreign Relations Committee; in fact, the proponents of the league, who in the Senate have been arguing for the acceptance of the covenant without change, have tried to assure those who have been demanding reservations that the powers of the Congress are clearly understood by the representatives of the foreign countries, and that action in no case can be taken except with its approval.

Your communication is limited to four phases of the league of nations and you express no opinion as to important features of the treaty of peace, which has been tied with the covenant for the express purpose of making the two inseparable.

Allow me to direct your attention to the important matter of the proposed transfer of the Shantung Province to Japan and to express my opinion thereon, which is that it has not and can not be justified and that China should not be asked to assent to this despoliation merely because Japan has verbally expressed her intention to restore the territory at some indefinite future date, which intention she declines to formulate as a written promise. Nor should the United States permit itself to be placed in the position of condoning this act of oppression, which is nothing less than unwarranted robbery of a vast territory, comprising approximately 40,000,000 inhabitants. I shall not hesitate to vote for any reservation or amendment that will voice the protest of the United States against this transfer of territory, which in reality involves the transfer of property belonging to one of our allies to another ally in pursuance of secret agreements entered into between other powers at the time we were preparing to enter into the Great War.

Another important feature of the treaty is the matter of our voting power in the assembly, and on this issue I shall vote for the reservation or amendment providing that the United States shall have in the assembly at all times the same number of votes as that accorded to any other power.

There are other features of the treaty which have not as yet been fully discussed on the flor of the Senate, among them the clauses relating to the International Labor Bureau, which I believe are not acceptable to the United States in their present form; and I shall devote time and careful study to these questions.

With a view to relieving the United States of what is thought to be unnecessary activity through memberships on boundary commissions, for the taking of plebescites, which would involve the sending of United States troops to Europe, the government and control of the Saar Basin, and other matters in which the United States has no interest, certain amendments known as the Fall amendments were considered by the Senate. I voted for these amendments, and, while they were not adopted, these same subjects undoubtedly will be covered by reservations for which I shall vote and which I believe will be adopted.

While I do not believe we are very far apart on the four questions you have raised and do not understand that you would seriously oppose the adoption of the four reservations as presented by the Foreign Relations Committee, you have not stated what you would favor in case the reservations as suggested by you or those now before the Senate are defeated. Would you in such event favor the acceptance of the league in its present form or would you prefer to see the league defeated, thus involving rejection of the treaty and the negotiation of an independent treaty between the United States and Germany? I do not hesitate to state my attitude after months of conscientious study of this subject, which would be a vote against the ratification of the treaty.

Referring to the last paragraph of your communication, I beg to inquire as to the facts upon which you base your statement to the effect that the great majority of the Republican voters of Colorado are in favor of the reservations suggested by you. May I inquire if a canvass has been made? My chief source of communication with Colorado is, of course, through letters, telegrams, and personal interviews; and these indicate a strong sentiment in favor of proper modifications that will safeguard American interests. The estimates I have made show that over 80 per cent of our citizens are opposed to the acceptance of the league in its present form.

Very truly, yours, LAWRENCE C. PHIPPS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCORMICK (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I ask if the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have a general pair with that Senator and therefore I am not at liberty to vote.

The roll call having been concluded,

Mr. JONES of Washington (after having voted in the affirmative). The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I am paired with him during his absence. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. FERNALD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I observe that he has not voted. I transfer that pair to my colleague, the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. OWEN (after having voted in the negative). I wish to know if the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. OWEN. I have a pair with that Senator, and withdraw my vote.

Mr. MYERS. I have a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who is absent. I am unable to get a transfer of my pair. Therefore, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained from the Senate by illness in their families. If they were present, they would vote "nay" on this question. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] is detained from the Senate on public business. If he were present, he would vote "nay." The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is necessarily absent on official business, and if present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN];

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]; and

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—38.

Ball	Fernald	Lodge	Poindexter
Borah	France	McCormick	Reed
Brandegee	Frelinghuysen	Moses	Smoot
Calder	Gronna	Nelson	Spencer
Capper	Harding	New	Sutherland
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Townsend
Cummins	Keyes	Norris	Wadsworth
Curtis	Knox	Page	Warren
Dillingham	La Follette	Penrose
Fall	Lenroot	Phipps

NAYS—36.

Ashurst	Harris	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Harrison	Phelan	Smith, Md.
Beckham	Hitchcock	Pittman	Stanley
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Pomerene	Thomas
Dial	Kendrick	Ransdell	Trammell
Fletcher	King	Robinson	Underwood
Gay	Kirby	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
Gerry	McKellar	Shields	Walsh, Mont.
Gore	Nugent	Smith, Ariz.	Williams.

NOT VOTING—22.

Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Martin	Sterling
Edge	Kellogg	Myers	Swanson
Elkins	Kenyon	Owen	Watson
Hale	McCumber	Sherman	Wolcott
Henderson	McLean	Simmons
Johnson, Calif.	McNary	Smith, S. C.

So the motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate, as in legislative session, adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, October 10, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, October 9, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Almighty God our heavenly Father, for the uplifting influences which bring us day by day in thought, word, and deed nearer to Thee.

Teach us, we beseech Thee, amid the trials, sorrows, afflictions, and temptations of life to lean more closely upon Thee, that Thy will is good will, that we should seek to know it and strive diligently to do it.

Hold us close to Thee through the remaining hours of this day and through all time. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REREFERENCE OF A BILL.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to have the bill H. R. 6335, which was referred to the Committee on Claims, transferred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that H. R. 6335 be transferred from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. And, Mr. Speaker, I may add I have the written assent of the chairmen of the committees and of the majority and minority leaders of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6335) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to certify certain findings of facts, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1. An act authorizing the cutting of timber for mining purposes by corporations organized in one State and conducting mining operations in another; and

S. 2999. An act to amend section 97 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 1. An act authorizing the cutting of timber for mining purposes by corporations organized in one State and conducting mining operations in another; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 2999. An act to amend section 97 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7478. An act to amend sections 5200 and 5202 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by acts of June 22, 1906, and September 24, 1918.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 9. An act to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of Nevada, and for other purposes; and

S. 2100. An act authorizing the Union Pacific Railroad Co., or its successors, to convey for public-road purposes certain parts of its right of way.

REPEAL OF CANADIAN RECIPROCITY ACT.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7779, known as the Canadian reciprocity bill, and, pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I want to see about arranging time. There is great pressure to procure consideration of bills, and we desire to limit this time to just as short a time as possible.

Mr. KITCHIN. How much time has been asked for on that side in general debate?

Mr. FORDNEY. I want to limit the time to an hour and a half on both sides; that is three-quarters of an hour on each side for general debate.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am perfectly willing to limit the time to an hour or an hour and a half or two hours to accommodate the gentleman.

Mr. FORDNEY. There is a gentleman on this side who wants to talk on a matter in which perhaps the whole House is interested, not relating to the bill. If the gentleman will yield a portion of his time, I will yield 15 minutes of our time.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have 40 minutes asked for by gentlemen on this side for general debate, but I am willing to confine debate to the bill and cut those gentlemen off on this side.

Mr. FORDNEY. This gentleman has been waiting a long time to talk and has been appealing for time to address the House.

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, whatever time the gentleman thinks they ought to have; what does the gentleman say? I am agreeable to any time.

Mr. GARNER. Fifty minutes upon a side.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield 15 minutes of his time to this gentleman?

Mr. KITCHIN. If I have 40 minutes to yield to gentlemen on this side, which I have agreed, if we had any general debate not confined to the subject of the bill, I will only have 10 minutes left for myself. But I am willing to do anything to accommodate the gentleman.

Mr. FORDNEY. Make it an hour on each side, and I will yield 15 minutes to the gentleman, and the gentleman can yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will try to do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to an hour on each side, one-half of that time to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from North Carolina. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the House resolving itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Canadian reciprocity bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7779, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7779, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7779) to repeal the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, is repealed, to take effect on the day following the passage of this act. On and after such date there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the articles enumerated in such act, the growth, product, or manufacture of the Dominion of Canada, when imported therefrom into the United States or any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, and the islands of Guam and Tutuila) in lieu of the duties levied, collected, and paid under such act, the duties levied, collected, and paid under existing law upon the same articles when imported from other countries.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for one hour.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] 15 minutes, and I understand my colleague from North Carolina yields him 15 minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. That make 30 minutes equally divided between the two sides.

Mr. MORGAN. On June 11, 1919, I introduced in the House H. R. 5545, entitled "A bill to provide homes for soldiers, seamen, and marines, and for other purposes." The bill proposes to create a corporation controlled by the Government with $100,000,000 capital, subscribed by the United States. It is authorized to make a loan up to $4,000 to any honorably discharged soldier, seamen, or marine to be used exclusively in the purchase of a home, either in the country or a town or city. The soldier makes his own choice as to the locality where the home is to be purchased. The loan may run for a period not exceeding 60 years. Borrowers will pay annually on the face of their loans 4½ per cent, which includes 3½ per cent interest, one-half of 1 per cent amortization payment on the principal and one-half of 1 per cent into the guaranty fund. Loans are made in an amount equal to 100 per cent of the appraised value of the home purchased. This principle must be accepted as fundamental, as it is the only way to avoid discrimination against the poor in favor of the rich and well-to-do.

The plan which I present is all-embracing. Any honorably discharged soldier, seaman, or marine may take advantage of it. It is within the reach of all. It is just and fair to all the soldiers, regardless of whether they reside in the country or in the towns and cities. It offers the same advantages to those who toil on the farm and to those who labor in factories, mills, workshops, and other enterprises of our towns and cities. It can be utilized by the poor as well as by the rich and well-to-do. Its object is to reward honorable military service, and honorable military service is the only qualification required. There are no restrictions, limitations, or discriminations. No public officer will have authority to "approve applicants" before they are entitled to the benefits of the act. There will be practically no delay in putting the plan in operation. Soldiers will not have to wait three years while some great reclamation project is being completed. They will not have to break home ties, leave their friends, give up their present employment and businesses and go to a distant State to obtain the benefits of the act. They will not need to go from one section of a State to another to get a home. The benefits of the act will be equitably distributed to every State and community in the land. Whatever money the Government furnishes at the expense of taxpayers will go back to every State, section, and community. It proposes to take only $100,000,000 out of the Treasury to finance the whole proposition. The balance of the funds will be raised by the sale of bonds, issued not by the Government, but by the loan corporation. To insure the sale of these bonds at a low rate of interest, and in large quantities, the Government guarantees the payment of both the principal and interest of the bonds. The annual payments made by the soldiers will pay both the interest and principal of these bonds. Practically all the Government will do is to give the soldiers a suitable instrument—the corporation—and to supervise, direct, and administer this corporate instrument for the use and benefit of the soldier and for the glory of the country.

Mr. HERSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. I will yield.

Mr. HERSEY. I would like to inquire whether this is the same bill upon which the gentleman made some remarks some weeks ago?

Mr. MORGAN. It is the same bill.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. I will.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Has the gentleman introduced a bill upon this subject?

Mr. MORGAN. I have.

Mr. HUDSPETH. What is the status of it?

Mr. MORGAN. The status of it is that it is pending before the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. HUDSPETH. But it has not been reported?

Mr. MORGAN. It has not.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Has it been discussed, or have there been hearings on the bill?

Mr. MORGAN. There have not been any hearings except I might say in a general way. I made one speech before the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr HUDSPETH I would like to ask the gentleman why there has not been a hearing on the bill?

Mr. MORGAN. I can not answer that question. The Public Lands Committee has reported a bill. It has done its duty. It supported a bill which is pending before the House and did not report my bill. As I understand, the committee has not passed on the merits of my bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. I will.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What is the number of your bill?

Mr. MORGAN. It is H. R. 5545.

Mr. HULINGS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MORGAN. For a brief question.

Mr. HULINGS. Will the gentleman state what is the substantial difference between his bill and the Lane-Mondell bill?

Mr. MORGAN. They are altogether different. The gentleman, I think, has read both bills. My bill proposes to make loans for the purpose of purchasing homes. The home may be purchased in any village, town, or city, or in the country. It is a distinctly home-founding proposition.

Mr. HULINGS. It is something after the order of a building and loan association, to be carried on by the Government?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; by a corporation under the control of the Government.

Mr. HULINGS. What interest does your bill require the soldier to pay?

Mr. MORGAN. I just stated that a moment ago. It provides for an annuity of 4½ per cent; 3½ goes to interest, one-half of 1 per cent to amortization on the principal, and one-half of 1 per cent in the guaranty fund.

Mr. HULINGS. Does it include only the soldiers of the World War, or does it also include the Spanish War veterans?

Mr. MORGAN. It includes Spanish War veterans.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. I have so much I wish to say—but I will yield.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask one question.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Does this institution loan on the full value of the property, or does it loan on a mortgage?

Mr. MORGAN. This institution loans up to 100 per cent of the appraised value of the home purchased.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. If the property is valued at $5,000, then the soldier can borrow $5,000?

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, no. Every loan is limited to $4,000.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Of what value is it over a trust company?

Mr. MORGAN. I am not discussing trust companies.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. You are discussing a subject similar to that of a trust company. If it has value, we want to know the value of it before we can vote on it.

Mr. MORGAN. A trust company would not loan 100 per cent of the value of the property. A trust company does not ordinarily do that.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I thought you said that on a $5,000 property they would only loan $4,000.

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, no. No loan is made in excess of $4,000. If a man buys a $3,000 home, he gets only $3,000. If he buys a $4,000 home, he can borrow $4,000. If he buys a $5,000 home, he must get the other $1,000 at some other place.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. What is the limit of the value of the home that the soldier can buy?

Mr. MORGAN. He may buy property of any value, but he can get only $4,000 as a loan from this corporation.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. Did you go before the committee and try to get your bill reported?

Mr. MORGAN. I said I went before the committee and presented my bill.

Mr. QUIN. They did not report it. They reported the Mondell bill out?

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the gentleman will not take my time with those questions. I told him the bill had not been reported.

THE BUSINESS OF THE CORPORATION.

It will be the business of the soldiers' and seamen's Federal home founding corporation to finance our soldiers, sailors, and marines in the acquirement of homes. It will act the part of middleman between the soldiers and investors. It will not be its business to make money. It will charge nothing for its services.

It will exact no profits; it will pay no dividends to stockholders; it will have no mercenary motives; it will have no selfish purposes. It will be a great, efficient, impartial, unselfish, patriotic intermediary between our service men who want homes and investors who have money to loan.

The outstanding bonds of the corporation will be its liabilities; its mortgages, capital, surplus, and guaranty fund will represent its assets. The amount due on its mortgages will always be greater than what it owes on its bonds. The annual payments on its loans will always exceed its annual liabilities on its bonds. It will collect annually from its debtors more than it will be necessary to pay to its creditors. It will thus be able, at all times, to meet its financial obligations, pay 100 cents on the dollar, and annually add to its reserve funds.

THE FINANCIAL PROBLEM.

The soldiers' and seamen's Federal home founding corporation to be created by H. R. 5545 will be a sound financial institution. It will be engaged in a safe, legitimate, nonspeculative business. It is not a get-rich-quick concern, nor a wild-cat, visionary, unattainable financial scheme.

It will not be a financial experiment. Congress will take no chances in creating it and authorizing it to do business. The investing public will be safe in purchasing its bonds. At all times it will be able to meet its financial obligations and pay its debts in full. Neither the Federal Government nor the public generally will ever suffer any losses through its business transactions. It will do the business for which it will be created and accomplish the great purposes and objects for which it was designed. In time it will become the greatest land-credit institution in the world. It will outrank all other such institutions in the amount of business it will transact. In a like manner, it will excel them in the good it will do and in the benefits it will bestow.

MODELED AFTER SAFE INSTITUTIONS.

The soldiers' and seamen's Federal home founding corporation is modeled after the long-time land-credit institutions of Europe which have demonstrated their soundness and solvency. These institutions have been operating in Europe for more than 150 years. They have met with universal success. Practically none of them has failed. They differ in some respects but are alike in all essential features. They vary in type, but the underlying principles of all of them are the same. In constructing the soldiers' and seamen's Federal home founding corporation these institutions have been copied. No new feature has been introduced; no untried principle has been employed; no new method has been authorized; no essential feature has been omitted, and no safeguard has been overlooked. Every care has been exercised to build an institution that will be an exact counterpart of the European institutions which have met every emergency, stood every test, and demonstrated their permanency, soundness, and solvency.

CAPITAL EVIDENCE OF SOUNDNESS.

The capital of any financial institution is both an element and evidence of its soundness. The soldiers' and seamen's Federal home founding corporation will start out with a capital of $100,000,000, subscribed by the United States. For more than a century European nations have been contributing capital to aid in founding long-time land-credit institutions, but no amount like this has heretofore been given to any such institution. The Credit Foncier of France was organized 67 years ago with a capital of $5,000,000, $2,000,000 of which was given by the French Government. It is now the largest land-credit institution of its kind in the world. The Prussian Central Land-Credit Co. of Germany, one of the great institutions of its kind, has a capital of only $10,656,000. The largest banking institution of New York City has a capital of only $25,000,000. The 12 Federal land banks started in business with a combined capital of only $9,000,000. The 12 Federal reserve banks at the close of the year 1918 had a combined capital of only $75,858,000. The soldiers' and seamen's Federal home founding corporation will start out with a capital larger than the combined capital of our 12 Federal land banks and 12 Federal reserve banks. The large capital with which the corporation will begin business will enable it to conduct a business of immense proportions without danger of financial difficulties; it will give it prestige with financial institutions; it will secure for it the confidence of investors of all classes; it will give it influence with the public generally, and will equip it to perform successfully the sacred mission committed to its care.

AN ENDOWED INSTITUTION.

The soldiers' and seamen's Federal home founding corporation will be an endowed institution. It will have an immense financial advantage over institutions which must use the earnings of their capital in the payment of dividends to its shareholders. It will have not only $100,000,000 in capital on which to operate its business, but it will have an endowment of $100,000,000. This will mean at the first an annual income of four or five millions of dollars, which may be used to meet any financial losses sustained without in any way impairing its original capital or endangering its solvency. Any part of the income from its capital which may not be needed to pay losses will be added to the capital of the institution. The endowment will thus multiply itself through its own earning power, and the net income therefrom will increase annually. Through its endowment, the capital of the corporation will grow from year to year, its financial position will improve annually, and it will be always in a condition to meet unusual, exceptional, and extraordinary losses, and still close every business year with an ever-increasing surplus and reserve.

CHARACTER CREDIT.

The corporation will be strengthened financially by what may be termed character credit. It will make loans exclusively to the men who constituted our Army and Navy in the Great World War. They were men of the highest type of manhood. Physically, mentally, and morally they were the best America had. They were selected because of their fitness to perform a most difficult, exacting, and dangerous service to their country. They came from every State and community. Every locality sent the flower of its citizenship. They are the choice spirits of the Nation. The losses of the corporation will be insignificantly small by reason of the fact that the men whose obligations it holds represent the best manhood and citizenship of the Nation. These men did not fail to do their duty in time of war; neither will they fail to meet their financial obligations in time of peace.

LOANS EQUAL TO APPRAISED VALUE.

There is but one unusual provision in the plan proposed. That is the provision which authorizes loans to be made in an amount equal to the appraised value of the homestead purchased. This does not in any way imperil the financial soundness of the institution. The making of loans to the full appraised value of the mortgaged premises, or approximately thereto, is not without precedent. Europe has had such institutions for years. Denmark has a long-time land-credit institution which loans up to 90 per cent of the appraised value of the mortgaged property. The Norwegian Bank for Laborers' Holdings and Dwellings loans up to the appraised value of the mortgaged homestead. In 1900 France created an institution and endowed it with $25,000,000 of capital to enable farm laborers to purchase homes, and authorized it to make loans up to the full appraised value of the homestead purchased. Under the small-holdings and allotment act of 1900, England authorized loans to be made up to 90 per cent of the appraised value of the homestead mortgaged. Similar institutions are found in other countries. The success of these institutions prove that long-time loans equal to 100 per cent of the appraised value of the mortgaged property may be made and the institution still remain perfectly sound and solvent, able to meet every obligation, and accumulate a substantial and ever-growing surplus.

Any long-time land-credit institution may be made absolutely safe and sound financially even though it loans up to 100 per cent of the appraised value of the land mortgaged. There are three ways this may be done. These are: First, through the income from endowment capital; second, through annual contributions from all borrowers into a guaranty or insurance fund; or, third, through a combination of these two methods. I have chosen the third method. I have combined the income from an endowment capital with annual contributions from borrowers. The borrowers and the Federal Government thus become joint guarantors of the institution. The Government does its part in the $100,000,000 endowment fund and the soldiers, seamen, and marines do their part by annual contributions taken from their yearly earnings in whatever calling or business they may be engaged. The Government is following the correct policy of helping the soldiers to help themselves. But the soldiers are doing by far the greater portion. Their annual contributions to the guaranty fund will far exceed the annual interest on the $100,000,000 endowment capital.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The original capital that the institution starts out with is $100,000,000. That would provide 25,000 loans of $4,000 each. You provide for future operations to float bonds at a net return of only 3½ per cent?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; a nontaxable bond guaranteed by the Government is as good as a Government bond, and our 8½ per cent Government bonds have been selling at par.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Federal farm loan bonds are selling at a higher rate of interest, are they not?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes. They are selling at a higher rate of interest and are selling at 104 and 105 on the dollar, as I noticed a few months ago. I noticed yesterday evening in the paper that our Secretary of the Interior says he has been assured that the Government can sell $500,000,000 of nontaxable bonds at 3¼ per cent at par.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Suppose a man takes out a loan of $4,000. What would his payments be?

Mr. MORGAN. Four and one-half per cent annually.

Mr. LINTHICUM. How long would it take him to pay all?

Mr. MORGAN. Fifty-five years. By increasing the amortization payment to three-fourths of 1 per cent annually it will pay out in about 36 years. The borrower has the privilege of paying as rapidly as he desires.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman think that the payments per year will be equal to the depreciation in the value of the property, the wear and tear, and so on?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes. Instead of property depreciating in value, as a rule, real estate in this country goes higher every year. It will be true as long as our population and business increases.

Mr. LINTHICUM. It is very much higher at the present time, perhaps 100 per cent higher than it was. Has the gentleman thought of that situation?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; I have thought about that situation. I dislike to decline interruptions, but I should like to continue my discussion.

PROBABLE LOSSES.

Logically the next question is what will be the probable annual losses of the corporation through the failure of the borrowers to pay the amounts due annually on their loans. We can not answer this question exactly or definitely, but we can in our calculations make the allowance for losses so large that every reasonable man will say it is large enough. This is what I propose to do. The amount of losses is not entirely a matter of guesswork. Experience is generally a safe guide. The operations of long-time credit institutions in different countries and covering more than a century in time show their losses have been exceedingly light. It is reasonable to assume the soldiers' and seamen's Federal home founding corporation will have the same experience.

The ordinary real estate mortgage companies of this and other countries, on loans running on the 5 and 10 year system, seldom lose any money, and the percentage of foreclosures compared with the total number of loans made is very small. But on account of the short time on which these loans are made and the high interest rates charged it is more difficult to meet the payment on these loans than it is to meet the payments on long-time loans with the interest rates lower. The experience of the building and loan associations of this country shows their losses have been light and that remarkably few men fail to meet the payments due on the mortgages covering their homes.

The soldiers' and seamen's Federal home founding corporation can make loans on such terms, at such interest rates, and on such conditions as will be within the ability of the borrowers to meet.

The average man generally meets his financial obligations, if he is able to do so. A soldier who is able to pay rent on a suitable house in which to live will be able to meet the annual payments due on a $4,000 loan under the terms prescribed in this bill.

The possibility of loss will grow less every year the loan runs. This is true for two reasons—the amount due on the loan grows less annually and, on the average, the real estate will grow in value every year. The increase in population, the expansion of commerce, trade, and business, and the growth in our towns and cities will inevitably enhance the price of both rural and urban real estate. There will be exceptions, of course, but the rule will nevertheless obtain.

The experience of our Federal land banks throws light upon the qustion of losses. According to an official statement, after these banks had been operating three years only 1.5 per cent of their borrowers were in arrears. Probably all of these will be paid within a reasonable time. There is another thing to which I have already referred. The losses of the soldiers' and seamen's Federal home founding corporation will be comparatively light by reason of the character of its borrowers. They will be good financial risks. Most of them are young, physically strong, intellectually alert and active, industrious, honest, and ambitious. They are the kind of men who will pay their debts and achieve success in their undertakings. All things considered, it is safe to say that the losses will not equal 2½ per cent of the annual payments due the corporation. This amount would be far greater than the losses sustained on an average by the long-time credit institutions of Europe.

But for the purpose of demonstrating that the corporation will be an absolutely sound financial institution and that the Government may safely guarantee the payment of its bonds and the interest thereon, I propose to make an allowance for losses equal to 10 per cent of the annual payments due the corporation from borrowers on both principal and interest. This is equivalent to assuming that the corporation will collect only 90 per cent of the amount due from year to year on the principal and interest of its loans, or that 10 per cent of its borrowers will never pay any part of the amount due on the principal and interest of their loans, or that 20 per cent of its borrowers will pay only 50 per cent of the amount due on their loans, or that 40 per cent of the borrowers will pay only 75 per cent of the amount due on their loans. No such losses will ever be incurred. No such number of soldiers will ever fail to pay for their homes. But for the sake of the argument we will so assume.

THE ENDOWMENT CAPITAL AND THE GUARANTY FUND.

It is the business of the corporation to loan money to soldiers. To enable it to make these loans, it borrows money through the sale of its bonds. It is not an institution conducted for profit. The corporation pays the same interest rate on its bonds that the soldiers pay on their loans. The interest paid on its loans, if collected in full, will liquidate the interest due on its bonds. The borrowers make an annual or semiannual payment on the principal of their loans. The corporation must make a like payment on the principal of its bonds. This it does by retiring a portion of its bonds annually, or by creating a sinking fund to provide for their payment. The annual amortization payments due from borrowers on the principal of their loans, if paid in full, will liquidate the outstanding bonds of the corporation. Under the terms of the bill, the corporation borrows money at 3½ per cent and loans it at the same rate. It requires borrowers to pay one-half of 1 per cent annually on the principal of their loans, and applies the same amount annually on the principal of its bonds. But borrowers are required to pay an additional one-half of 1 per cent annually on the face of their loans. The proceeds derived therefrom constitute a guaranty fund. If every borrower paid in full the annual payments due on their loans, the corporation would have no need of the guaranty fund. But every financial institution and every business concern has its losses. The soldiers' and seamen's Federal home founding corporation will have its losses. It must accumulate a surplus. It must have its reserve. It must be able to meet emergencies. That is the object of the guaranty fund. Every borrower having a $4,000 loan will pay $20 annually into the guaranty fund. In 10 years he will have paid into the guaranty fund $200. In 20 years he will have paid $400. In 40 years he will have paid $800 into this fund, an amount equal to one-fifth of his original loan. When the corporation has $2,000,000,000 of loans outstanding, the annual payment into the guaranty fund will be $10,000,000. When the loans have increased to $4,000,000,000, the annual payment into the guaranty fund will be $20,000,000. When the outstanding loans are $8,000,000,000, the annual payment into the guaranty fund will be $40,000,000. Any portion of the guaranty fund not used in payment of losses, in effect becomes a part of the reserve capital of the institution. It is invested, and thus multiplies itself. The guaranty fund in itself will more than meet all losses that will be sustained by the corporation. So certain was I of this that I placed in the bill a provision authorizing the corporation, at the expiration of a period of five years, to reduce the amount to be paid into the guaranty fund. But the corporation has more than the guaranty fund. It has an endowment capital of $100,000,000, the entire income from which will be available to make good any losses sustained by the corporation.

To begin with, the interest on its capital will provide an annual income of $4,500,000. As the reserve capital of the corporation grows the income therefrom will increase. It is a fund that will grow from year to year. It gives the corporation a large independent income which fortifies it against all emergencies and prepares it, if necessary, to meet extraordinary losses, without the least financial embarrassment. But with the income from these two funds—the guaranty fund and the endowment capital—combined, the corporation is twice insured against any possible losses it may sustain.

DEMONSTRATION.

Having decided to assume that the corporation will lose 10 per cent annually on the amount due from borrowers, we can proceed to work out the actual business of the corporation, assuming that the corporation in the first year of its history and at each subsequent year will make 100,000 loans of $4,000 each; that the borrowers, according to the terms of the bill, will pay an annual charge on the face of their loans of 4½ per cent, which will include interest at 3½ per cent, amortization payment of one-half of 1 per cent, and a payment into the guaranty fund of one-half of 1 per cent; that the corporation will pay out annually 4 per cent on its bonds, which will include 3½ per cent interest thereon and one-half of 1 per cent amortization payment on the bonds, which will be used to redeem bonds or placed in a sinking fund for that purpose; that the annual losses of the corporation will be equal to 10 per cent of the annual payments due on its mortgages; and that the net annual surplus of the corporation, including the guaranty fund, will be added to the capital and loaned to borrowers.

Under these assumptions the income of the corporation the first year in annual payments from its borrowers will be $18,000,000. It will pay on the principal and interest due on its bonds $12,000,000. Its losses, estimated at 10 per cent of the amount due from its borrowers, will be $1,800,000. After paying the amount due on its bonds and charging off its losses, the corporation the first year will have a net surplus of $4,200,000. This will be added to its capital, and it will start in business the second year with a capital of $104,200,000.

The second year its losses, according to our estimate, will be $3,600,000. The corporation will charge off its losses, make the payments due on its bonds, and still have a net surplus for the year of $4,568,000. It will start the third year with a capital of $108,786,000. This year $5,400,000 will be charged off as losses, but the corporation will meet its regular obligations and still have a net annual surplus of $4,950,720. It will begin business the fourth year with $113,718,720 in capital. Its losses this year will be charged off at $7,200,000. The corporation this year will have a net annual surplus of $5,344,749.

The fifth year the corporation, after making allowance of $9,000,000 for losses, will have a net surplus of $5,758,539, and will close the year with a capital of $125,922,008. It will have made loans to 500,000 soldiers, sailors, and marines aggregating $2,000,000,000, and has had each year a net surplus averaging nearly $5,000,000.

Passing over the figures for the sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth years, the corporation will begin business the tenth year with a capital of $152,335,185. It will have loaned $4,000,000,000 to 1,000,000 soldiers, sailors, and marines. Its losses for the tenth year will be $18,000,000, but it will have a net surplus for that year of $8,089,407. Its capital at the end of the tenth year will be $160,424,592.

Omitting the details of the business of the corporation for the eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth years, we find that the corporation will begin the fifteenth year with a capital of $198,401,469. It will have loaned $6,000,000,000 to 1,500,000 soldiers, sailors, and marines. Its annual losses this year will be charged off at $27,000,000. Its annual net surplus will be $10,972,060.

Passing over the details of the business for the sixteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth years, the corporation will begin business the twentieth year with a capital of $259,932,573. It will have made loans to 2,000,000 of our service men aggregating $8,000,000,000. Its losses the twentieth year will be $36,000,000 and its net surplus will be $14,433,303, and it will end the year with a capital of $274,365,876.

In Appendix A will be found a statement in detail of the business of the corporation for each year.

It will be observed that the capital of the corporation has increased from $100,000,000 to $274,365,876. The figures show that the corporation had an average annual increase in its capital of over $8,700,000. The net annual surplus of the corporation increased every year. It grew from $4,200,000 the first year to $14,433,303 the twentieth year. During the 20 years the corporation charged off as actual losses a total of $288,000,000. It is a significant fact, to which I desire to call attention, that the corporation in these 20 years has earned a net surplus of $174,365,000. It would be in a position, without impairing or using its original capital, to pay back the $100,000,000 capital contributed by the Government with 4 per cent annual interest thereon during these 20 years. This, I think, demonstrates to the satisfaction of any reasonable mind that the plan I have presented is absolutely sound financially; that it is a practical business proposition; that the corporation will accomplish the purposes and objects for which it is to be created; that under it and through it millions of our service men will acquire homes; and that the corporation at the end of its career will be able to return to the Government the original capital subscribed with a reasonable interest thereon; and that the Government will never lose anything through the business of the corporation and the taxpayers of the country will not have contributed anything for the support of the institution.

WITH CAPITAL OF $200,000,000.

If the corporation had an endowment capital of $200,000,000, and borrowers were required to pay into the guaranty fund annually three-fourths of 1 per cent on the face of their loans, it could make 100,000 loans of $4,000 each annually, stand a loss of 17 per cent on the amount annually due on the principal and interest of its loans, and at the end of the twentieth year would have a capital of $375,151,728. To assume that the corporation would have a loss of 17 per cent annually on the amount due from its borrowers is equivalent to assuming that 17 out of every 100 borrowers would never pay any part of the principal or interest on their loans; or that 34 out of every 100, or more than one-third of the borrowers, would never pay but 50 per cent of their loans; or that 68 per cent of the borrowers out of every 100, or more than two-thirds of the entire number, would never pay but 75 per cent of the amount due on their loans.

If the corporation were given $200,000,000 endowment capital, and the borrowers paid 1 per cent annually on the face of their loans into the guaranty fund, it could stand an annual loss of 20 per cent on the amount due each year on its loans in principal and interest; make 100,000 loans of $4,000 each annually, and its capital would increase in 20 years from $200,000,000 to $426,645,344. The fact is, there would be no such losses as these, and it is probable that the losses would not be 2½ per cent of the amount annually due the corporation from its borrowers. An allowance of 5 per cent losses on annual payments due would be liberal. But whether the losses will be 5 per cent or 10 per cent, or even more, provision can be made to meet these losses. It is all a question of giving the corporation the proper endowment, and requiring borrowers to make sufficient contribution to the guaranty fund. I have asked that the corporation be given only $100,000,000 endowment capital. I have asked that borrowers contribute one-half of 1 per cent annually to the guaranty fund. In both cases, I believe I have asked all that is necessary. But if the endowment were made $200,000,000, it would not be excessive or burdensome. The amount would still be $300,000,000 less than the Mondel-Lane proposition authorizes to be appropriated, and $2,000,000,000 less than it would cost in principal and interest to pay a cash or bond bonus of $250 to each of our 4,000,000 soldiers, seamen, and marines.

EFFECT ON REAL ESTATE VALUES.

There has been some fear expressed that the inauguration of the loan policy proposed in H. R. 5545 would cause an era of speculation in farms and in urban real estate and an undue enhancement of prices. This fear is not well founded. The corporation can not and will not make 4,000,000 loans in one year. This would be impossible for many reasons. It will necessarily require a series of years to make these loans. All soldiers, seamen, and marines can not be served immediately. They were not all brought into the service at the same time and were not all discharged at once. Some method which will be fair to all must be adopted to determine the order in which applicants will obtain their loans. We found a method to determine the order in which they were called to service, and a method must be provided to determine the order in which applicants will secure loans. Loans must be distributed equitably among the soldiers of the various States. Each State must be treated fairly. This is a big country. We have over 3,000,000 square miles of land in continental United States. The loans will be equitably distributed throughout the Nation. It will not materially affect the price of real estate anywhere. The soldier will select the home he wishes to purchase. He will make his own bargain with the owner. He will then apply for the loan. The corporation will then carefully inspect the property, appraise it, and pass upon the application for the loan. If the loan be approved, the borrower will not get the money. The entire proceeds of the loan will go to the man who sells the home. The soldier gets possession of the home, he gets title to the property, he becomes the proprietor and owner, but the corporation will hold a mortgage thereon for the full amount of the loan.

We can not say how many loans the corporation will make on an average each year. The bill does not limit the number of loans that may be made annually, but the Congress might make a limitation. But 100,000 loans made annually would be a large business. It would mean 500,000 in 5 years and a million loans in 10 years. There are 2,782 counties in the United States. To make 100,000 annually would mean an average of 35 loans in each county in the United States. About one-half of this number would be in the country districts and one-half in the towns and cities. So that it would mean the purchase annually of about 17 farms and 17 town and city homes in each county. The purchase of this number of homes annually in the average county would not materially affect the price of real estate or create any dangerous speculative era.

BONDS GUARANTEED BY THE GOVERNMENT.

Some objections have been made to the provisions of the bill which makes the United States Government guarantee the payment of both the principal and interest of the bonds issued by the corporation. The objection arises out of the erroneous idea that the Government is assuming a financial liability which might endanger its credit or interfere materially with its financial operations, or possibly impose an undue burden upon the taxpayers. In the first place, it must be clearly understood that the primary object of giving this Government guaranty is not to make the bonds good. The Government guarantees the payment of these bonds because they are good—not to make them good. The guaranty is given by the Government not with the idea that it will ever pay any part of the principal or interest on these bonds, but on the theory that it will not be required to do so. The Government is in a position to permit the issue of bonds only under such terms and conditions as will make them absolutely safe and secure. If the corporation is to command the funds or credit which will enable it to make loans as provided in the bill, it will be necessary that it shall sell bonds aggregating very large amounts. The bonds must also bear a very low rate of interest, because unless the corporation can sell bonds at a low rate of interest, it can not make loans at a low rate of interest. The object of having the Government guarantee the payment of the bonds is to insure the sale of these bonds in large quantities and at a low rate of interest. These two things are absolutely necessary. A Government bond or a bond guaranteed by the Government can be sold in larger quantities and at a lower rate of interest than a bond of any other kind or character. And as I regard these two things as absolutely essential, I insist that the Government should make this guaranty.

It has been asserted that these bonds, thus guaranteed by the Government, would be in substance and effect obligations of the United States. Such an assertion I do not believe is justified. The corporation will not be the United States. It is true it will be an agency of the United States. It will be an instrumentality of the Federal Government. It will be the creature and servant of the United States, carrying out the great purposes for which it was created. But the issuing of bonds by this corporation under a guaranty of the Federal Government will not be equivalent to issuing and selling bonds of the United States for the same purpose. When the United States issues a bond the Federal Government becomes directly responsible for its payment. Every cent of the funds necessary to pay the interest and principal of United States bonds must come exclusively through taxes paid by the people of the United States. But bonds issued by a corporation controlled by the United States, but provided with ample independent income with which to pay both the principal and interest of the bonds issued, does not require and will not require any contribution from the taxpayers of the country.

The bonds issued by the corporation will have back of them mortgages on real estate of equal value. The regular annual income of the corporation will be more than sufficient to pay the annual interest on its bonds and provide for their redemption and payment in full. In other words, the annual payments due from borrowers will be larger than the annual payments which the corporation will owe on the principal and interest of its bonds. The corporation will therefore have ample funds from its own resources to pay the interest and principal of its bonds. Then, in addition thereto, the corporation will have a large income from the interest on its endowment capital and the annual payments into its guaranty fund, which will be more than necessary to meet every emergency and pay any possible losses through the failure of borrowers to pay the amounts annually due on their loans. These bonds therefore will not be, in substance or effect, Government bonds. The liability of the United States will be only contingent and remote. The practice of Federal, provincial, and State governments in guaranteeing bonds issued by land-credit institutions is not new. It has been largely practiced in European countries for many years. Time and experience has shown that practically nothing has been lost in making such guaranties. There is another point that should be considered in this connection. The corporation makes long-time loans and issues and sells long-time bonds. The borrowers liquidate their long-time loans through annual payments on the face of the original loans. The corporation pays its bonds and the interest due thereon by the same process. It either redeems a portion of its bonds every year or sets aside a certain amount into a sinking fund to provide for the redemption thereof. The borrowers pay their loans through amortization payments and the corporation pays its bonds through amortization payments. The corporation will always be in a sound financial condition when it is able to make this annual payment on its bonds. These bonds will run for a long period of time. At the end of each year the corporation will know and the Government of the United States will know whether or not it is in a sound financial condition. The liability of the United States will be an annual liability. Whatever contributions the Government of the United States would be required to make on the interest and principal of the bonds issued by the corporation would therefore be distributed over a period running from 1 to 60 years. The annual liability would necessarily be comparatively small. The amount necessary for the United States to contribute annually could not possibly be such as would endanger the national credit, materially interfere with its financial operations, or place any serious burdens upon the taxpayers of the country.

COMPARED WITH OTHER PROPOSITIONS.

There are other propositions before Congress designed to give recognition to the soldiers. Among these is the one proposing to give every service man a cash bonus. This plan has strong points in its favor; it is preferred by some of the soldiers, and some Members of Congress are favorably inclined thereto. But this would be by far the most expensive proposition the Nation could undertake. Suppose we gave each service man a bonus of $250. To provide for 4,000,000 men would require $1,000,000,000. The Government must either raise this amount by issuing bonds or deliver to each man a bond of $250. The bonds will bear at least 4 per cent interest and will run at least 30 years. The Government will pay $40,000,000 annual interest on these bonds. In 30 years it will have paid in interest alone $1,200,000,000. Therefore to give each service man a bonus of $250 would require an expenditure in interest and principal of $2,200,000,000. To give each man a bonus of $500 would require an annual expenditure in interest of $80,000,000, and a total expenditure in interest in 30 years of $2,400,000,000. This added to the principal sum of $2,000,000,000 would make a total cost to the taxpayers of $4,400,000,000. Looking at it from the viewpoint of the national credit, the financial operations of the Government, and the interest of the taxpayers, everyone must admit that the plan which I present is far preferable to the bonus plan.

Some way I have been impressed with the idea that the authors and advocates of the Mondell-Lane plan have taken some pride in claiming that their proposition is sound financially and could be safely undertaken by the Government. But I must say in all candor that I have failed to discover any real financial plan to it. All that it does is to authorize the appropriation of $500,000,000 and give the Secretary of the Interior practically unlimited and certainly unparalleled power to spend this money. Vast areas of land are to be purchased. Millions of acres are to be cleared, improved, and laid out in farms. Vast irrigation projects are to be conceived, planned, and constructed. An army of men of all classes are to be employed. It is a simple process. Congress appropriates the money; the Secretary of the Interior spends it. No one can foretell what mistakes will be made. No one can predict what losses will be incurred. After the lands have been acquired, reclaimed, and improved, the Secretary of the Interior is required to sell these lands at cost, including the purchase price and the expense of reclamation and improvement. Who can say that the Government will be able to sell each tract, farm, or allotment at the estimated cost thereof? Who can say now that the Government will not have left on its hands millions of acres of land which it will be unable to sell at cost prices? Everywhere, at all times, all along the line, from beginning to end there will be great uncertainty about what the Government may lose in carrying out this proposition or how great an amount must in the end come out of the pockets of the taxpayers.

So far as I can see, there is no attempt in the provisions of the bill to safeguard the Government against losses.

The comparatively few men who may take advantage of the provisions of the act are not required to cooperate with each other in making the undertaking a sound financial proposition. There is to be no contribution among the beneficiaries of the act to aid and assist each other in meeting their financial obligations. Each borrower or each man who purchases a farm from the Government under the Mondell-Lane plan is responsible only for his own debt. If one of them fails to pay his obligations fully, the Government alone stands the loss. If 10 per cent of them fail to pay their loans, the Government will stand the whole loss. I am not saying that the Government can not afford to do this. I am not saying that it should not do it. I am calling attention to this matter to show that under the Mondell-Lane plan the Government losses may be heavy; that there is no provision made to meet these losses, and that in the end the taxpayers of the country must make good whatever losses may be sustained.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have shown conclusively that the loan plan presented in H. R. 5545 is absolutely sound financially; that the Government may safely guarantee the payment of the bonds and interest thereon issued by the corporation without the slightest possibility of endangering the national credit; that the business operations of the corporation will not materially interfere with the financial operations of the Federal Government; and that by the method I have proposed in H. R. 5545 the Government may place homes within the reach of millions of our soldiers, seamen, and marines without placing any undue burdens upon the taxpayers of the country.

The plan which I have presented has been received with great favor by the soldiers, seamen, and marines. Executive committees of a number of State organizations of the American Legion have passed resolutions indorsing it. The State officers of a number of such organizations have written me letters indorsing it. A large number of local posts of the American Legion have passed resolutions in its favor. Letters from soldiers, seamen, and marines from all parts of the Union have come to me complimenting my bill in the very strongest terms. Many Senators and Representatives in Congress have received letters urging them to support my bill. Prominent officials, business men, professional men, and citizens in all walks of life have written me saying they approved the principles of my bill and expressed a hope that it would become a law. It will be generally conceded that my plan is popular with the soldiers and would be entirely satisfactory to them. I regard this as a high compliment. These letters, telegrams, and resolutions, coming from all sections of the country, from the New England States to the Pacific coast and from Florida and Texas to the States on the Canadian border, have been to me a source of great satisfaction, encouragement, and inspiration.

The bill H. R. 5545, of course, is not perfect. Some amendments may be necessary. It is, however, right in principle. Its object is to provide some appropriate recognition for the services rendered by our soldiers, sailors, and marines. For this purpose nothing more appropriate could be done than to place within the reach of these men a home, in which, throughout their lives, they must reside under the protection of the flag they honored and upheld. A home is the best pension a soldier can possess. It affords protection to the family; gives satisfaction, security, and contentment to the soldier; makes him a better citizen; and strengthens the very fabric of our Government. The best, wisest, and most practical way that a nation can show its gratitude to its soldiers is to provide them with homes. It is in line with the long-established policy of the Government. In every war since the American Revolution the United States has offered our soldiers homes on the public domain. Twenty-seven of the States of the Union have erected homes for their disabled soldiers. The Federal Government founded the National Home for Disabled Volunteers, and established branches thereof in 10 different States in the Union. In the District of Columbia the Government founded and supports the United States Soldiers' Home for Disabled Soldiers of the Regular Army. In the giving of public lands and the erection of these soldiers' homes and in providing for their maintenance the State and Federal Governments have expended vast sums of money. No one now questions the propriety of what has been done in the past. No one will assert that the money appropriated has been wasted or unwisely expended. The American people have never complained about the money expended in providing for the comfort, the well-being, and the happiness of the men who have fought their battles. For 142 years it has been the policy of the American Government to provide homes for its soldiers. This policy should not now be abandoned, when we have more wealth both in the aggregate and in proportion to our population than we have ever had before; when we have more homeless people in proportion to our population than we have ever had at any previous time; and when the difficulties of acquiring a home were never so great. There is no way now by which our soldiers, seamen, and marines may acquire homes except through the organization of proper and adequate credit facilities. Unless, therefore, my plan or something similar to it shall be adopted a large proportion of our soldiers, sailors, and marines must make up their minds to live in a country where it is impossible for them to acquire a small tract of land which they and their families may call their own.

The plan which I present is universal in its application. It can be utilized by all. Under it homes may be acquired in the towns and cities as well as in the country. It is the only plan which has been presented that is just and fair to the one-half of our soldiers who now reside and must continue to reside in our towns and cities.

Whatever we do for our service men should be something that will be permanently useful, helpful, and beneficial to them. In this respect a home is far preferable to a small bonus in money. As the years go by a home will grow more valuable and likewise more useful and helpful to the owner.

The plan which I present will distribute its benefits equitably throughout the country—to every State, county, city, town, village, and community. One great point in its favor is that it will serve at least three great national purposes. It will multiply the number of home owners and turn back the ever-growing menace of tenancy; it will encourage thrift and saving among both the soldiers who purchase homes and the citizens who will buy the gilt-edged securities of the corporation; and it will promote good citizenship, allay unrest, and stand as a mighty bulwark against I. W. W.ism, Bolshevism, and every other radical and revolutionary movement.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. NOLAN). The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. BEE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes in order that I may ask him a question.

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more, and in that time I want to ask him a question or two. When did the gentleman introduce his bill?

Mr. MORGAN. On the 15th of June, 1919, I believe.

Mr. KITCHIN. To what committee did it go?

Mr. MORGAN. To the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. KITCHIN. Has that committee reported it out?

Mr. MORGAN. It has not.

Mr. KITCHIN. You have had two or three caucuses of the Republican Party in the House since you introduced that bill, have you not?

Mr. MORGAN. I remember we had one, at least. I could not say as to the two or three.

Mr. KITCHIN. Did the caucus take any action on that bill?

Mr. MORGAN. It did not. It was not brought before it in any way.

Mr. KITCHIN. Did you attempt to get the Republican caucus to take any action on it?

Mr. MORGAN. I did not. I should have been glad to have them do so, but I did not ask them to do so. It was not before the conference.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am not saying anything for or against the bill. I want to find out its present status. Is the gentleman on the steering committee?

Mr. MORGAN. I am not.

Mr. KITCHIN. Has the gentleman been to the Republicans of the steering committee of the House and asked them to have this bill taken up in committee?

Mr. MORGAN. I have not been before the steering committee officially.

Mr. KITCHIN. Have you seen any members of the steering committee privately?

Mr. MORGAN. Some time ago I talked to a number of the members of the steering committee about the general proposition; yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I want to see how diligent the gentleman has been in trying to get his bill reported out. The gentleman has not seen the steering committee?

Mr. MORGAN. I have not been before the steering committee officially, but I have talked to the majority of them about this bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. And that was some time ago. You just went to them one time, did you not? Have you been to them more than one time—just little informal meetings?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I object to the gentleman's questions as leading. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I want to know how to vote on the gentleman's bill, and I want to get some information. Has the gentleman studiously and diligently tried to get the steering committee to have this bill reported out and considered in the House or has he just done it informally?

Mr. MORGAN. I think I have done my whole and full duty. I have had much else to do, and so have others. I have no doubt in due time the proposition will be fully considered.

Mr. KITCHIN. Has the gentleman been before the Committee on the Public Lands and made a diligent effort to have his bill reported?

Mr. MORGAN. I went before the Public Lands Committee and talked, I think, about an hour about my bill and other bills on the same subject.

Mr. KITCHIN. Did the Public Lands Committee give any intimation that they were going to report it out?

Mr. MORGAN. Of course, I want to be liberal in answering the gentleman's questions. He was kind enough to yield time to me.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am going to yield some more time to the gentleman to see if I can get the facts.

Mr. MORGAN. All right. I am sure I have nothing to conceal about it and I would be glad, if I can, to give the gentleman more information.

Mr. KITCHIN. Did the committee or any members of the Public Lands Committee intimate to you that they would report that bill out?

Mr. MORGAN. I think there are a number of members of the Public Lands Committee who are favorably inclined to my bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Most of those are Democrats, are they not?

Mr. MORGAN. I am sorry to say that they are not. [Laughter.] I think, however, that there are one or two Democrats who are favorably inclined to the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Does the gentleman know how many Republicans there are on the Public Lands Committee?

Mr. MORGAN. Nine or ten.

Mr. KITCHIN. There are about two Republicans to one Democrat on the Public Lands Committee, are there not?

Mr. MORGAN. I think not that proportion.

Mr. KITCHIN. The Republicans have quite a large majority on that committee, have they not?

Mr. MORGAN. It is quite a majority, sufficient for working purposes, of course.

Mr. KITCHIN. And the gentleman has introduced this bill——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will extend the gentleman's time five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five additional minutes, if he wishes to accept it.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. I want to get at this. I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska that he does not want information on this bill. He has never read it. I have read this bill. I have talked with the gentleman from Oklahoma about it. I am interested in all these bills, and I want to find out about this one.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. In order that the gentleman from North Carolina may be educated, I will yield.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. As I understand, the gentleman has been trying to get this Republican Committee on the Public Lands, ever since June, to report out this bill that, in his judgment, is fair and just to the soldiers, and that committee has not done it, has it?

Mr. MORGAN. I have said several times that the Committee on the Public Lands has not reported the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. But the committee did report out another soldiers' bill, and not the gentlemen's, did they?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. They reported out what is known as the Mondell land bill?

Mr. MORGAN. They did; yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Do you know how many Republicans on the committee voted for your bill?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not.

Mr. KITCHIN. They have not even come to a vote on your bill yet, have they?

Mr. MORGAN. I think not. I will say to the gentleman, however——

Mr. KITCHIN. I want to know this fact, and then I will let you state the other fact.

Mr. MORGAN. I want to say a few words on my own account now. I decline to yield further just now.

The Public Lands Committee early took up hearings on the so-called Mondell-Lane bill and has held hearings on it for two or three weeks before my bill was introduced. I introduced my bill and went before the committee, but there has never been any real hearings on my bill. I have not asked the Public Lands Committee for any special hearings.

I want to convince, if possible, the Members of the House that my bill is right, and then I expect to ask the Public Lands Committee, or some other committee, to report it favorably or unfavorably.

I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I expect to see what the Republicans will do with the bill, and also expect to see what the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and other Democrats will do with the proposition.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. For a question.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Do not let the gentleman from North Carolina take up all your time.

Mr. KITCHIN. But I yielded him the time.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Do not take it back again. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman's bill may be perfectly right and just.

Mr. MORGAN. It is right and just.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman from Oklahoma has studied it, but I doubt whether one man in a hundred in the House has read it.

Mr. MORGAN. I am sure that the gentleman is wrong about that.

Mr. KITCHIN. I may be wrong; I know two gentlemen in the House who have read it—the gentleman from Oklahoma and the gentleman from North Carolina. [Laughter.] But the gentleman from Oklahoma has been diligent and persistent with the steering committee—all Republicans—he has been diligent with the majority leader, who is a Republican; he has been diligently pursuing the Public Lands Committee, making argument after argument to them, and has failed to convince any of them. Does not the gentleman think that it will take somebody else to get that bill through? Does not the gentleman fear that the soldiers in his district might say, "MORGAN is a good man and the best fellow that could possibly be imagined, but even with such a good bill as his, and with all his diligence, after his labors month after month with the Republican steering committee, with the majority leader, and the Republican Public Lands Committee, he has failed, and we think somebody else ought to be sent to Congress to take charge of it." [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. YATES. I would like to know if when the gentleman from North Carolina extends the time we are compelled to accept it? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. YATES. Another parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. YATES. All I want to say is that I don't want the gentleman from North Carolina to yield me any time. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is out of order. The gentleman from Oklahoma will proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, gentlemen, I will admit that it is somewhat embarrassing to accept this time, but I asked for 30 minutes on my own side and could not get it, and the gentleman from North Carolina kindly yielded me 15 minutes out of the 30 minutes. I do not say this to reflect on the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, for he was very much pressed for time. This was a very important matter, and it was right and proper that one-half of my time should be yielded by the Republican side and one-half by the Democratic side. I think that indicates that in due time the two sides of the House will unite on my bill and pass it. The gentleman from North Carolina even will agree to it, although he has endeavored to bring in a little cheap politics and give the impression that the Republicans are not doing their duty. I think the gentleman from North Carolina is a great man, and I regard him as a great statesman, but the course he has pursued is too small for such a great man as he is. [Laughter and applause.]

I have here a great proposition. Some man has said that it is too big. It is a big proposition. But we had a big Army and a big Navy in the great World War. They had a big job to perform and they performed it in a big way. The question is now whether or not Congress will authorize the undertaking of something which corresponds in dimension with our Army and Navy, and what they did for the glory of our country and the good of mankind. So I appeal to my friend from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] that he shall never hereafter, when we are considering a proposition which has to do with our duty to our soldiers, seamen, and marines, and with the welfare of the Nation at large, devote his valuable time and great talent in an effort to gain some small political advantage, which I consider not befitting a great statesman and leader of the American Congress, as is the gentleman from North Carolina. [Laughter and applause.]

APPENDIX A.

Table showing supposed business transactions of the corporation.

Annual charge on loans, 4½ per cent, which includes 3½ per cent interest, one-half of 1 per cent amortization payment, and one-half of 1 per cent guaranty fund.

Bonds bear 3½ per cent interest; annual amortization payment on bonds one-half of 1 per cent. Total payment on bonds 4 per cent. Net annual surplus becomes part of the capital.

The table is based upon the estimate that 100,000 loans of $4,000 each will be made the first year and a like number in each subsequent year.

It is assumed that the entire capital will be kept invested in loans and that the annual losses will equal 10 per cent of amount due from borrowers.

The bonds issued each year will be equal to the amount of loans for the year minus the net surplus for the preceding year.

FIRST YEAR.

Capital	$100,000,000
Bonds	300,000,000
Loans	400,000,000
Gross income	18,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	1,800,000
Net income	16,200,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	12,000,000
Net surplus	4,200,000
Capital, end of first year	104,200,000

SECOND YEAR.

Capital	104,200,000
Bonds	695,800,000
Loans	800,000,000
Gross income	36,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	3,600,000
Net income	32,400,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	27,832,000
Net surplus for second year	4,568,000
Capital, end of second year	108,768,000

THIRD YEAR.

Capital	108,768,000
Bonds	1,091,232,000
Loans	1,200,000,000
Gross income	54,000,000
Loss of income, 10 per cent	5,400,000
Net income	48,600,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	43,649,280
Net surplus for third year	4,950,720
Capital, end of third year	113,718,720

FOURTH YEAR.

Capital	113,718,720
Bonds	1,486,381,280
Loans	1,600,000,000
Gross income	72,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	7,200,000
Net income	64,800,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	59,455,251
Net surplus for fourth year	5,344,749
Capital, end of fourth year	119,063,469

FIFTH YEAR.

Capital	119,063,469
Bonds	1,881,036,531
Loans	2,000,000,000
Gross income	90,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	9,000,000
Net income	81,000,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	75,241,461
Net surplus for fifth year	5,758,539
Capital, end of fifth year	124,922,008

SIXTH YEAR.

Capital	124,822,008
Bonds	2,275,277,992
Loans	2,400,000,000
Gross income	108,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	10,800,000
Net income	97,200,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	91,011,119
Net surplus for sixth year	6,188,880
Capital, end of sixth year	131,010,888

SEVENTH YEAR.

Capital	131,010,888
Bonds	2,669,089,112
Loans	2,800,000,000
Gross income	126,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	12,600,000
Net income	113,400,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	107,763,564
Net surplus for seventh year	6,636,435
Capital, end of seventh year	137,647,323

EIGHTH YEAR.

Capital	137,647,323
Bonds	3,062,452,677
Loans	3,200,000,000
Gross income	144,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	14,400,000
Net income	129,600,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	122,498,107
Net surplus for eighth year	7,101,893
Capital, end of eighth year	144,749,216

NINTH YEAR.

Capital	144,749,216
Bonds	3,455,350,784
Loans	3,600,000,000
Gross income	162,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	16,200,000
Net income	145,800,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	138,214,031
Net surplus for ninth year	7,585,969
Capital, end of ninth year	152,335,185

TENTH YEAR.

Capital	152,335,185
Bonds	3,847,764,815
Loans	4,000,000,000
Gross income	180,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	18,000,000
Net income	162,000,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	153,910,592
Net surplus for tenth year	8,089,407
Capital, end of tenth year	160,424,592

ELEVENTH YEAR.

Capital	$160,424,592
Bonds	4,238,675,408
Loans	4,400,000,000
Gross income	198,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	19,800,000
Net income	178,200,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	169,547,016
Net surplus for eleventh year	8,652,984
Capital, end of eleventh year	169,077,576

TWELFTH YEAR.

Capital	169,077,576
Bonds	4,630,022,424
Loans	4,800,000,000
Gross income	216,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	21,600,000
Net income	194,400,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	185,200,897
Net surplus for twelfth year	9,199,103
Capital, end of twelfth year	178,276,679

THIRTEENTH YEAR.

Capital	178,276,679
Bonds	5,020,823,321
Loans	5,200,000,000
Gross income	234,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	23,400,000
Net income	210,600,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	200,832,932
Net surplus for thirteenth year	9,767,067
Capital, end of thirteenth year	188,043,746

FOURTEENTH YEAR.

Capital	188,043,746
Bonds	5,411,056,254
Loans	5,600,000,000
Gross income	252,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	25,200,000
Net income	224,800,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	216,442,250
Net surplus for fourteenth year	10,357,750
Capital, end of fourteenth year	198,401,496

FIFTEENTH YEAR.

Capital	198,401,496
Bonds	5,800,698,504
Loans	6,000,000,000
Gross income	270,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	27,000,000
Net income	243,000,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	232,027,940
Net surplus for fifteenth year	10,972,060
Capital, end of fifteenth year	209,373,556

SIXTEENTH YEAR.

Capital	209,373,556
Bonds	6,189,726,444
Loans	6,400,000,000
Gross income	288,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	28,800,000
Net income	259,200,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	247,579,058
Net surplus for sixteenth year	11,620,942
Capital, end of sixteenth year	220,994,498

SEVENTEENTH YEAR.

Capital	220,994,498
Bonds	6,578,105,502
Loans	6,800,000,000
Gross income	306,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	30,600,000
Net income	275,400,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	263,124,220
Net surplus for seventeenth year	12,275,780
Capital, end of seventeenth year	233,270,278

EIGHTEENTH YEAR.

Capital	233,270,278
Bonds	6,965,829,722
Loans	7,200,000,000
Gross income	324,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	32,400,000
Net income	291,600,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	278,633,189
Net surplus for eighteenth year	12,966,811
Capital, end of eighteenth year	246,237,089

NINETEENTH YEAR.

Capital	246,237,089
Bonds	7,352,862,911
Loans	7,600,000,000
Gross income	342,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	34,200,000
Net income	307,800,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	294,104,516
Net surplus for nineteenth year	13,695,484
Capital, end of nineteenth year	259,932,573

TWENTIETH YEAR.

Capital	259,932,573
Bonds	7,739,167,427
Loans	8,000,000,000
Gross income	360,000,000
Loss on income, 10 per cent	36,000,000
Net income	324,000,000
Payment on bonds, 4 per cent	309,566,697
Net surplus for twentieth year	14,433,303
Capital, end of twentieth year	274,365,876

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I profoundly and sincerely regret that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] misconstrued my position in the questions that I have asked him.

Mr. YATES. Nobody else misconstrued it.

Mr. KITCHIN. There is the situation, and I ask the gentleman to believe me, if he will, or if he can.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. If he can! [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] has given as much study to a soldier relief bill and to what he considers the proper kind of relief as any Member of the House, if not more. He has worked upon it day and night. As I say, it may be a good bill. I have not yet made up my mind about any of these bills. The gentleman from Oklahoma is thoroughly convinced that his is the best bill, and I know that a great many soldiers throughout the United States who were engaged in the World War think that it is the best bill that has been proposed. After the gentleman had given this time and study to it and had prepared the bill with great pains, after the bill had behind it thousands and thousands of soldiers, I wanted him to know that his party here in this House had not treated him with the proper consideration and had not treated his bill, nor the thousands of soldiers who indorsed the bill, with proper consideration.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. I think that is unfair to the Republicans of this House.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, well, I will not yield any further if the gentleman wants to indorse the majority leader for not permitting him to take up his bill, if he wants to indose the steering committee in its refusal to allow his bill to be considered, if he wants to indorse the Public Lands Committee in absolutely ignoring it, and if he wants to indorse generally the Republican side of the House in not letting him and the soldiers have a chance to even get the bill up. In such circumstances I have nothing more to say. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from North Dakota proceeds, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the House fixed so short a time for the discussion of this most important bill. The report prepared by me gives a brief outline of the so-called Canadian reciprocity act. I ask to have it printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting in the RECORD the report filed by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 7779, introduced by Mr. YOUNG):

The Committee on Ways and Means, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7779) to repeal the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, report the same back with recommendation that the bill do pass.

The so-called Canadian reciprocity agreement was negotiated at Washington during the month of January, 1911, between representatives of the American and Canadian Governments. Diplomatic forms and ceremonies were dispensed with There was very little official correspondence and the negotiations were almost entirely verbal. After the arrangement had been concluded, Mr. Fielding, Canadian finance minister, and Mr. Paterson, minister of customs, addressed a formal letter to Mr. Knox, Secretary of State, setting forth their understanding of what had been agreed upon. The arrangement was to take the form of concurrent legislation instead of a treaty, for the reason that it was said Canada wished to be free to annul it at any time if it should prove to be against their interests.

It was agreed that wood pulp and paper made of wood pulp, when valued at not more than 4 cents a pound, should come into the United States duty free, upon condition that no export duty should be imposed by Canada upon these articles. This provision became section 2 of the act which later passed Congress, and which was approved on July 26, 1911. The operation of that section was not made dependent upon the fate of the reciprocity measure in the Canadian Parliament, so it went into effect.

The proposed changes in the general tariff rates were listed in four schedules. Schedule A embraced the articles that were to be duty free in both countries. It included practically all agricultural products, except wool; fish and fish oil of all kinds (except sardines and fish preserved in oil); hewn timber, sawed lumber, posts, ties poles, staves, and palings; unmanufactured asbestos, gypsum, talc, mica, feldspar, and fluorspar. Very few manufactured products were included in this schedule, the most important of those that were included being galvanized or tinned iron and steel sheets, galvanized wire and wire rods of certain gauges, all barbed fencing wire, cream separators, carbon electrodes, typesetting and typecasting machines, coke, and cottonseed oil.

Schedule B included articles to be admitted into each country from the other at identical rates of duty, which were generally lower than those at the moment then prevailing in either country. Many of the items were secondary products and manufactures of which the chief component materials were made free in schedule A. Under this head came such articles as flour, barley malt, canned vegetables, fresh and canned meats, lard, bacon, prepared cereals, biscuits, and fruit juices. Schedule B also included agricultural implements and machinery, monumental and building stone (except marble and onyx), cutlery and plated ware, clocks and watches, motor vehicles, bathroom fixtures, and some other manufactures of minor importance.

Schedule C included six articles that were to be admitted at special rates by the United States: Aluminum, laths, shingles, planed or finished lumber, iron ore, and coal slack.

Schedule D contained seven articles upon which Canada was to make reductions: Cement, fruit trees, condensed milk, unsweetened biscuits, canned fruits, peanuts, and bituminous coal.

On January 26, 1911, like bills were introduced in the American Congress and Canadian Parliament to carry the arrangement into effect. Both these bills met a storm of opposition. In our country protests came from every industry where the duties had been lowered. Among those opposing the bill the farmers, particularly those in Maine, northern New York, Ohio, Michigan, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Washington, and Oregon, were the most pronounced in their opposition. While the measure was sponsored by a Republican President it was opposed by a majority of the Republicans in Congress, and went on the statute books only because of the united support of the Democrats.

The speeches made in the Canadian Parliament demonstrated beyond a doubt that the proposed reciprocity agreement was, from the economic standpoint, a decidedly one-sided arrangement, by which the chief benefit went to Canada. But political issues were raised in Canada which diverted the attention of the people from the commercial and economic phases of the agreement and resulted in the defeat of the bill in the Canadian Parliament.

The wood-pulp provision was reenacted in the Underwood tariff law and is not affected by this repeal bill.

The Underwood tariff law contains reciprocal provisions as to wheat, flour, potatoes, and potato products, which were complied with last year by Canada, and therefore wheat, flour, potatoes, and potato products are now on the free list from Canada. The passage of this bill will not affect the status of those commodities. Another bill is pending in the Committee on Ways and Means for the repeal of sections 581 and 644 of the Underwood tariff law, which relate to wheat and wheat products, potatoes and potato products, and to impose duties upon those commodities. Importations of wheat have been temporarily suspended during the administration of the food-control law.

It is the belief of the committee that the time has come when the so-called Canadian reciprocity act should be repealed, and it is hoped, in view of the formal rejection by Canada of the proposed reciprocal arrangement, that the bill may be considered without partisanship and speedily passed.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in the necessarily brief discussion of this bill I wish to emphasize, first of all, the fact that the Committee on Ways and Means has recommended the repeal of the so-called Canadian reciprocity act through no feeling of hostility, commercial or otherwise, toward Canada. On the contrary, it is the belief of the committee that a possible cause of friction may be removed by the passage of this bill.

Speaking for myself, and probably for many in this House, I believe it is the most sound policy to treat all countries upon a basis of uniformity. That principle was followed in the preparation of the Underwood tariff law, and I venture to say will be followed in the general tariff bill which will hereafter be reported by our committee. This is a principle—that is to say, uniformity of treatment to all nations in respect to tariff duties—which should be followed by both Republicans and Democrats in all future tariff making. It is a peace policy, and if lived up to will remove some of the causes for commercial clashes, and perhaps war.

It has been claimed that there is no need for repeal, for the reason that Canada will never change her position. The Commercial and Financial Chronicle of December 20, 1917, after the inauguration of the new Government at Ottawa, printed a dispatch from its Ottawa correspondent, as follows:

Mr. Sifton is a strong-willed member of a western trio of new members in the Federal Government. All of them are committed point-blank to tariff revision downward, particularly in the items of agricultural implements, farm supplies of all sorts, and free access between the United States and Canada for flour, oats, barley, etc.

According to the Toronto Globe of December 20, 1918, a demand for "reciprocal free trade in everything from A to Z" is made by the United Farmers of Ontario in a resolution adopted on December 19.

My own belief is that there is little fear of Canada ever passing a law to accept or put in operation the reciprocity law now on our statute books. Why should she? Canada was made a present in the Underwood tariff law of practically all she was trading for in the proposed reciprocity arrangement. While it was a one-sided agreement, still Canada did give a certain degree of preference to United States manufactures. Why should Canada agree to do this now, when practically all she asked was given to her by the Underwood law? The only reason that the Laurier government ever thought of signing such an agreement was to secure free access to our markets for her agricultural produce. Now, let us see what was put on the free list by the Underwood law:

Broom corn; buckwheat; corn; cotton; eggs; flax straw; hemp; fruits or berries, green, ripe or dried; hides; hoofs; hop roots; lard; meats; milk; cream; condensed milk; nuts; seeds; skins of sheep, goats, and so forth; hogs; cattle; sheep; wool of the sheep. Potatoes and potato products and wheat and wheat products carried duties, but were to be on the free list upon certain reciprocal conditions. These conditions have been met by Canada, thus placing these commodities on the free list from that country.

Section 581 of the Underwood tariff law, October 3, 1913, being in that part of the act devoted to the free list, reads as follows:

Potatoes and potatoes dried, desiccated, or otherwise prepared, not specially provided for in this section: Provided, That any of the foregoing specified articles shall be subject to a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem when imported directly or indirectly from a country, dependency, or other subdivision of government which imposes a duty on such articles imported from the United States.

Treasury Decision 37815 in respect to paragraph 581, tariff act of October, 1913:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, November 21, 1918.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
New York City.

SIR: The department is in receipt of information through the Secretary of State that by an order in council of the Canadian Government, potatoes and potatoes dried, desiccated, or otherwise prepared have been transferred to the list of goods which may be imported into Canada free of all duties of customs. It appears also from instructions issued by the commissioner of customs at Ottawa, Canada, that the order was effective on November 7, 1918.

Potatoes and potatoes dried, desiccated, or otherwise prepared not specifically provided for, imported to the United States from Canada are therefore entitled to entry free of duty under paragraph 581 of the tariff act of 1913 from November 7, 1918.

Respectfully,

L. S. ROWE, Assistant Secretary.

Section 644 of the Underwood law, being a part of the act devoted to the free list, reads:

Wheat, wheat flour, semolina, and other wheat products not specially provided for in this section: Provided, That wheat shall be subject to a duty of 10 cents per bushel, that flour shall be subject to a duty of 45 cents per barrel of 196 pounds, and semolina and other products of wheat, not specifically provided for in this section, 10 per cent ad valorem, when imported directly or indirectly from a country, dependency, or other subdivision of government which imposes a duty on wheat or wheat flour or semolina imported from the United States.

The Treasury Department informs me that Canada has taken action similar to that in respect to potatoes, in respect to wheat and wheat products; and wheat, wheat flour, and semolina are now on the free list from Canada—at least, so far as the tariff is concerned. Mr. Barnes, president of the Food Administration Grain Corporation, however, has barred the importation of wheat during the pendency of the food-control law. Mr. Barnes told me over the long-distance telephone from New York recently that only 5,000,000 bushels had been imported from Canada during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, as against about 19,000,000 bushels imported annually prior to the war.

The Underwood law did not get well under operation before the European war began. The conditions created by that war have acted as a high protective tariff. When we get back to peace conditions, which as to wheat will be next June, and as to other things some of them before that time, the American farmers will raise a howl which, by comparison, will make the roar of protest against Canadian reciprocity seem like a feeble murmur. In other words, when the farmers really find out that the Underwood law lets down the bars as to agricultural products to a much greater extent than Canadian reciprocity, they will throw the men responsible for it higher than they did Mr. Taft.

Mr. Chairman, what we have done in favor of other countries and against our own agricultural interests is reflected in an article in the London Economist from its Ottawa, Canada, correspondent, written on May 27, 1919. He says:

There has lately been issued a report of the United States Tariff Commission, which suggests a double system of duties, one for countries which give America specially favorable treatment, and another for countries which discriminate against her. At present Canada has the benefit of free importation to the United States for most of her agricultural produce. In the year which ended March 31, 1918, she exported to the United States the following agricultural produce:

Wheat	$53,561,000
Cattle and horses	16,465,000
Flax	19,445,000
Hay	4,240,000
Wool	6,834,000
Bran and mill feed	5,194,000
Flour	5,602,000
Clover seed	769,110
Potatoes	2,704,093
Turnips	685,967
Rye	984,443
Oats	4,513,946
Barley	1,380,922
Buckwheat	216,488
Beef	1,850,375
Fresh cream	666,401
Preserved cream	2,486,279
	127,599,024

This profitable export trade is largely a result of the Underwood tariff, and its growth has been very rapid. For instance, the export of living animals from Canada to the United States was only $1,746,000 in the year which ended March 31, 1913. By 1915 the exports in this one line alone had increased to $13,389,000, and last year the total was $16,465,000. Of this amount $1,376,000 was for lambs, which it is utterly impossible to ship across the Atlantic. There has also sprung up a profitable trade in wheat under milling grade, which has been in great demand for feeding purposes in the United States, and a good market for flax, bran, and other grain products.

Now, it is well known that the American farmer, particularly in the Northwestern States, which adjoin the Canadian West, has always looked with great disfavor upon the comparatively free importation of Canadian agricultural products. The Middle Western States have old Republican traditions, into which President Wilson made certain inroads, but the Republican Party realize that their wholesale reconversion is a necessity if they are to carry the presidential election of 1920. The agricultural interests in the Middle West were strongly hostile to the reciprocity agreement of 1911, and Mr. GEORGE M. YOUNG, Congressman for North Dakota, who is a member of the Ways and Means Committee at Washington, recently declared that their opposition had not abated. Mr. MONDELL, the new Republican House leader, also expressed the opinion that free importation of Canadian agricultural produce was against the interest of the American farmers. There is every symptom, therefore, that the Republicans will make agricultural protection an important item of the new tariff policy.

The article just read shows that the item for cattle and horses had multiplied many times after the passage of the Underwood tariff law, and that all of the items show a great increase of exports into the United States, and in this thoughtfully written article from a Canadian to the London Economist fear is expressed that the Underwood tariff law may be changed by the present Congress to the very great damage, in his opinion, of the farmers in Canada. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I do not mean to convey the idea that farmers are high protectionists. Upon the contrary, I do not believe they are. But they are very pronounced in their opposition to any policy which discriminates against them. If what they buy is protected by tariff duties—and most things they buy are protected by the Underwood law—they want tariff duties collected upon articles which they sell. That is all I want. That is all they contend for.

If I were asked to summarize the reasons why we want the Canadian reciprocity act repealed I would say:

First. Because the process by which it was prepared and enacted was unconstitutional. The President's power to negotiate with foreign Governments exists nowhere outside of the treaty-making power, and the treaty-making power does not extend to revenue measures; they belong exclusively in their initiation to the House of Representatives. The action of President Taft was an invasion of the constitutional prerogatives of the House to originate revenue legislation.

Second. It violates the principle of uniformity in tariff legislation. It proposed to give to Canada privileges denied to other countries—such action carried to its legitimate conclusion with other countries would tend toward commercial wars and perhaps even to wars by force of arms.

Third. Even if it could be justified upon other grounds, it was a horribly poor bargain which, had it gone into effect, would have injuriously affected the agricultural interests of our country.

Mr. Chairman, for these and many other reasons which I can not set forth in the time assigned to me I am in favor of this repeal bill.

There is a timely article in the American Economist of July 25, 1919, which I desire to have printed in the RECORD. It reads:

REPEAL THE CANADIAN RECIPROCITY ACT—BECAUSE ECONOMICALLY UNSOUND AND ESSENTIALLY DISHONEST.

Reciprocity, as applied to the customs tariff, consists in exchanging what belongs to some one else for something which by such exchange becomes yours. There is an exception to this general rule and it consists in securing something of value for yourself and giving in exchange therefor something which belongs to nobody. Both propositions are essentially dishonest.

Let us demonstrate: A protective tariff is one designed not only to produce revenue from such imports as are made, notwithstanding its provisions, but to shut out the major portion of the commodity involved. A is a manufacturer of saws. Being the largest manufacturer in the United States and having considerable competition from other domestic concerns, he is desirous of establishing a market for his saws in Canada. In order to enjoy a decent margin of profit on his output and to prevent unfair competition from the products of lower-cost nations, such as Germany, England, and others, he, in common with other saw manufacturers, has asked for and received a protective tariff on saws. Having heard so much about the value of reciprocity as an aid to export trade, he asks that Congress pass a reciprocity act which will allow his product to enter Canada either duty free or at a substantial reduction from the present Canadian tariff duty, for be it known that Canada manufactures saws, and hence has a protective tariff on that very important industry.

But does A ask that the reciprocity shall consist in the lowering of the duty on saws, so that Canadian saws may come into this country duty free or at a lower than the present rate of duty? That would be real reciprocity. But no, A has no such foolish idea in his head. He wants his industry protected. He wants no lowering of the "economic barriers" so far as his industry is concerned. He did not ask for protection only to swap it off at the first chance for the poor privilege of selling saws in Canada.

So what does A propose? He proposes to let Canadian wheat come into this country duty free. He can see some sense in that kind of reciprocity. That will not cost him anything, while he gains an entrance for his saws into the Canadian market.

But B has a big wheat farm up near the Canadian border, but on this side thereof. While his land is worth from $50 to $60 an acre, the Canadian wheat lands are worth from $10 to $25 an acre. His investment is at least twice as great as the Canadian farmers, and is probably five or six times as great. Not only that, but he has to pay more for his help, more for nearly everything he buys, because labor and commodities are higher in this country than in Canada. Therefore there being a surplus of wheat in this country, he needs protection against Canada wheat, the unrestricted importation of which would make its growth in this country unprofitable.

Now, if A succeeds in securing "reciprocity" which gains him a market in Canada for his saws, he does so at the expense not of himself but of B, and of the many B's, whose industry is more important to this country than all the saws ever manufactured, to say nothing of the theft of another man's business.

Will any man say that such a proposition is true "reciprocity"? No; it is theft. It is a bartering of another man's prosperity, of his chance to make an honest living at his own all-important industry, for the benefit of A.

Now, take our second proposition, that reciprocity as proposed by some is simply getting something for nothing, a mere "con" game. Take our friend A again as illustration. He sees that the Canadian reciprocity scheme is a dishonest one, so he plans to apply reciprocity where it will do no harm. He thinks that the forest of Brazil should provide a market for his saws, so he proposes reciprocity with Brazil. When asked what he thinks would be a fair basis of reciprocity he suggests the admission of saws into Brazil without payment of duty, the consideration therefor to be the admission of coffee duty free into this country. He argues that such a reciprocal agreement will not wrong any domestic industry, and he is quite right. But what does Brazil get in return? Absolutely nothing. We can not raise coffee in this country, so we are granting no concession to Brazil in admitting it free of duty. Furthermore, if we impose an import duty, we add just so much to the cost to the consumer of coffee in this country. That is an instance where the free trade claims that "a tariff is a tax which is added to the price which must be paid by the ultimate consumer" is true. It is the reverse of a protective tariff, which lowers the cost to the ultimate consumer.

Everyone can see that the proposition to make "reciprocal" concessions on noncompetitive products is a dishonest one. It is as much a crime as obtaining money under false pretenses, which is an offense punishable by imprisonment.

But these are not the only ways in which "reciprocity" is not a square deal. It is not fair to other friendly nations. Our tariff laws should be uniform in their provisions, application, and administration. This most-favored-nation proposition is a breeder of resentment and misunderstanding. We should treat all nations fairly and show partiality to none.

We believe that we have shown that so-called reciprocity is unfair, not uniform in its application, besides being unwise and dishonest.

This Nation can not afford to be a party to dishonesty. It can not afford to rob one class of producers to aid another class. It can not afford to gain any advantage for our own producers by entering into a confidence game to swindle a friendly nation.

Therefore we say: "Repeal the reciprocity act." It will be a matter of news to some of our readers that there is any reciprocity act to repeal, but there is. It is what is known as the Canadian reciprocity act of July 26, 1911, the act which Canada refused to ratify, but which she can change her mind about and ratify at any time unless the same shall be repealed.

A bill looking toward such repeal has been introduced into Congress by Representative YOUNG of North Dakota, being H. R. 7122. Canadian farmers have of late been very active in asking the Canadian Parliament to ratify the act of 1911, not for the benefit of the people of this country, but so that the Canadian farmers may sell their wheat at the higher prices which are obtainable in this country. With a guaranteed price of $2.25 a bushel for wheat, which a fool free-trade administration has saddled upon this country in opposition to every principle of sound economics, the Canadians will have a mighty fine time of it under "reciprocity," and at the expense of every man, woman, and child in the United States.

The Young bill also provides for the repeal of paragraphs 581 and 644 of the tariff act of October 3, 1913, which places potatoes on the free list, also wheat and wheat products from all countries which impose no duties on American wheat or its products. It is important for the welfare of this country and its most important industries that this bill pass and pass immediately, and we respectfully urge the Congress to take prompt action to remove this foolish and inconsistent, this dishonest, act, falsely posing under the name of "reciprocity," from our statute books.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman want more time? His discussion of the bill is right to the point.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The time has all been promised by the chairman of the committee [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY].

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, I represent a constituency that borders on Canada. Every State along that border for 3,000 miles is interested in the repeal of the Canadian reciprocity act. They are united, Republicans and Democrats both, to-day for the repeal of this reciprocity act, which holds out our hands to Canada, asking them to accept this un-American law, which they can do at any time. Under the limited time we have to discuss this bill in the House, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a speech I made in the House of Representatives of Maine in 1911 on a resolution indorsing Canadian reciprocity, in which I opposed it, and which the Legislature of Maine, being strongly Democratic, also repudiated Canadian reciprocity. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
LEGISLATURE OF MAINE,
March 7, 1911.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

To-day assigned: Resolution in favor of reciprocity with Canada.

* * * * * * *

Mr. HERSEY, of Houlton. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise at this time for the purpose of discussing the tariff, and neither do I wish for one moment to present this matter from any partisan or political standpoint. I think it is the most important question which will be before this legislature, and I think it should be approached from no partisan standpoint. The manner in which the committee approached it could not have been partisan, Mr. Speaker, for the majority of that committee said that they were opposed to this resolution, while the minority presented a report which is a modification of the original resolve, which indorses the doctrine of reciprocity with Canada, of which I suppose there is no objection in any quarter; but the object of this resolution, Mr. Speaker, if passed by this legislature, must intend to say to the President of the United States and to the incoming Congress in special session that this Legislature of Maine indorses the resolve or treaty for reciprocity with Canada.

That treaty comes before our Congress under peculiar circumstances. It came a few weeks ago like thunder in a clear sky; it startled the Nation, it came from a Republican President, it came without consultation with Congress, it came without consultation with the leaders of his own party or the leaders of any other party, it came without notice, without an examination, it came at a time when it was popular to speak of reciprocity as a great benefit to our Nation, and for the first few days after this announcement the people of this Nation thought that the President had taken a position that would bring to the people of this Nation more prosperity and had inaugurated something for the benefit of the whole people; but as time went on—and time settles these matters all right—it was found that such a measure did not meet the ideas of Congress, either Democratic or Republican; it did not meet the desires of the people of America, and it certainly did not meet the desires or wishes of that great class, the agriculturists, the farmers, the tillers of the soil, because they have learned something of what it contains and of its effects upon this country of ours.

I wish to ask the patience of this house while I bring before you some facts to demonstrate that this treaty ought not to be approved by Congress and ought not to be approved by this legislature. It is class legislation, un-Democratic, un-Republican, and un-American. Between us and Canada there is a border line of 3,700 miles, reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific. North of that line bordering the United States is a country, a territory as large as the United States—Canada—settled at about the same time that the United States were settled, or a little before, and since the time of those settlements Canada has grown to a country of about 7,000,000 people, while the United States have about 91,000,000. The United States has become the greatest Nation of the earth during that period. Her great natural resources have developed and become the wonder of the world. On the other hand, across the line in Canada, her forests still stand primeval almost as they were on the morn of creation, the great water powers of the St. John and the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes are undeveloped, her waters through her numerous rivers run, unvexed by millwheels, to the sea. She has a soil as rich as ours, and in all her agricultural resources she surpasses us. She has greater water powers and natural resources undeveloped than we have. Her waters are full of fish to supply to the world, no restrictions upon labor, and for that reason we find the labor of the world drifting to Canada, cheap pauper labor at her hands to develop her resources, her farms are undeveloped, her agricultural pursuits are of no consequence or account, she still retains her 7,000,000, small in the markets of the world; and this treaty says that these 7,000,000 people north of us shall have the markets of 91,000,000 people, and in exchange for the agricultural products of the farmers we shall have the great privilege of a market of 7,000,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this present treaty, although it has received merit as something new, as some great thing inaugurated by President Taft as a great blessing to our people, is not new; it is something old, something that this Nation once discarded. We had this same treaty in 1854, and we had it for 12 years, commencing in 1854 and ending in 1865, the same treaty that President Taft says we want now, and at the end of that 12 years we sent from the Congress of the United States to England this notice, that it was no longer for the interest of the United States to continue the same course. Previous to that notice from our Congress to Canada, in the Canadian Parliament of 1864 the privy council made this report:

"It would be impossible to express in figures with any approach to accuracy the extent to which the facilities of commercial intercourse created by the reciprocity treaty have contributed to the wealth and prosperity of this Province; and it would be difficult to exaggerate the importance which the people of Canada attach to the continued enjoyment of these facilities."

England approved of it and England prospered under it and Canada grew rich under it, and we suffered; and so we repudiated it, and Senator Sherman, of Ohio, when that matter came before our Congress, when they repudiated the treaty and would stand by it no longer, said:

"All the products of Canada come into our markets free of this duty. While this treaty stands it is a discrimination against every farmer and every mechanic and every industrial interest of the Western States. The farmer in Canada may raise his grain and produce and send it to our markets free of duty, and it pays no tax. We can not reach their railroads; we can not tax their transportation; we can not affect them in the least; and yet every interest of our farmers is taxed. It is manifest, therefore, that while we maintain our present system of internal taxation the reciprocity treaty is a direct benefit to the Canadian producer, farmer, and mechanic, and it is a discrimination against our own farmers and mechanics. It seems to me, therefore, for this reason alone, if there were no other, that this treaty ought to fall," and it did.

Now, then, during the Cleveland administration and while the tariff question was under discussion it was thought then that they might revive the old treaty of 1854, and they attempted to do it through Cleveland; and he, great Democrat that he was, repudiated that. In th

Canadian Parliament on the 24th day of February, 1903, Sir John Charlton, then a member of the Canadian Parliament, said:

"The American policy has been applied not only to us but to all the world. The object of the United States has been to sell all that it possibly could of the products of its soil and its mills and its workshops and to buy just as little as it could from other countries, and thus have as much of the balance of trade in its own favor as possible. The result has been that the balance of trade in favor of the United States last year amounted to $600,000,000 as against the whole world, $71,000,000 as against Canada. That is a good thing for the United States, and it will be her policy so long as the rest of the whole world will permit her to do it; but it is not good for us."

Then he goes on to say further:

"Something must be done to change the trade conditions that exist between the United States and Canada. Free trade in natural products would afford a reasonable adjustment. Nothing short of this will do, and this condition of free trade of natural products must be granted by the United States without a solitary concession from Canada further than she has already made. We can not afford any more."

We have now through President Taft a revival of the treaty of 1854 and nothing more. In order that you may have no question about it, a few days ago Mr. Fielding, the minister of finance of the Canadian Government, before the Canadian Parliament, said this about the treaty that he wanted his parliament to adopt:

"It is the reciprocity agreement of 1854 over again with comparatively little change. It promises prosperity to the people of Canada, and this House would make a grave mistake and do a great wrong if it refused to take advantage of it."

Now, the President of the United States takes the old treaty of 1854, discarded by the United States, and revives it and puts it before the Senate by a special message, and he says that he wants it to go through without reference to a committee, without discussion, without giving the people of this great Nation an opportunity to see what it contains, and without even giving to Congress the privilege of negotiating that treaty, and he says, "You must pass it before this Congress adjourns," and when Congress adjourns without passing it he inaugurates by a special message a special session of Congress to crowd this treaty down the throats of the people of this Nation. You can not amend it, you have got to take it as it comes, make all the fight you please, it must be taken as a whole or defeated. I say, Mr. Speaker, that is discrimination against the farmers of this country and in favor of Canada and not one whit in favor of the United States.

Now, in order that we may make no mistake about this matter, when England saw that there was free trade by this treaty with her colony, Canada, in agricultural products, she saw that if that thing became effective it meant annexation, and she would lose her colonies, because there was nothing then between them and everything would be in common, and the 7,000,000 would take the blessings of the 91,000,000 in the market, and she could not hold her colonies, and so England says to her minister there, "What about this?" and Fielding sends a cablegram to England, and what does he say? He says:

"Canada is seeking markets everywhere for her surplus products, subsidizing steamship lines, and sending out commercial agents. Would it not be ridiculous in the pursuit of such a policy to refuse to avail herself of the markets of the great Nation lying alongside? The expressed fear that it will seriously affect imports from Great Britain is groundless. The greater part of the agreement deals with natural products Great Britain does not send out. The range of manufactures affected is small, and in most cases the reductions are small.

"It appears to be assumed in some quarters that the tariff rates agreed upon discriminate in favor of the United States and against Great Britain. There is no foundation for this. In every case Great Britain will still have the same rate, or a lower one. Canada's right to deal with the British preference as she pleases remains untouched by the agreement. The adoption of the agreement will probably lead to some further revision of the Canadian tariff, in which the Canadian Parliament will be entirely free to fix the British preferential tariff at any rates that should be deemed proper."

Now, what is reciprocity? It is a popular word, but what is it? I will give you a definition of it, the best definition which I could find in the dictionary.

"Reciprocity is an arrangement or agreement between our own Nation and another nation by which we agree to admit, free of duty, certain articles which we need but which we can not raise or produce here; and in return the other nation admits to its ports free of duty certain articles which we produce and which they need but can not produce in their own land."

Take that definition. Does that define the treaty proposed to be inaugurated in this nation? Not at all. It is not reciprocity. There are a lot of us here who are in favor of reciprocity, but this is nothing but a discrimination against the farmers of the United States. Now, in order that you may understand it still further, what does the Canadian press think of this thing? Are they getting a good thing? The Manitoba Free Press, in that great agricultural country of Manitoba, the richest land upon the face of the earth, what do they say?

"The outstanding feature of the tariff is the complete reciprocity in farm products. This will undoubtedly be popular with the farmers both of the East and of the West. The good times in the eastern Provinces during the life of the Elgin treaty are a matter of tradition, and there is no doubt that the opening of the markets of the great American cities to the products of the eastern farms will be acceptable and profitable to the eastern farmer. In the West free wheat and free access to the Chicago market for his cattle will undoubtedly appeal very strongly to the cultivator of the soil."

The Ontario Advertiser has not been altogether satisfied with us in the past, but after characterizing the treaty as "the Canadian farmers' triumph," it authorizes us to congratulate ourselves that all is now forgiven. It says:

"The treaty agreement is a complete reversal of the normal attitude of the United States for nearly half a century. Except during the brief periods of Cleveland's ascendancy, the policy of the country since the Civil War has been one of stiff-necked protectionism, with a particularly forbidding front toward Canada. Probably no persons have been more surprised at the change than the Canadian negotiators. They could scarcely have expected such liberality when they set out for Washington."

But somebody says in giving the market for Canadian farm products in competition to our own will lower the price of food products and thereby help your labor, but that is the greatest blow there could be to labor in this land. In the United States, in the State of Maine, the labor is the best paid of any laborer on the face of the earth, and you and I know it. Yes; he is the best paid, and why? Because on this great border between us and Canada stands the immigrant inspection officer as well as the customhouse. We keep out the cheap and the pauper labor of the world. Pass that treaty and Canada with her great natural resources and her powers to manufacture cheaply with cheap labor, and how she can compete with the manufacturers of this great Nation! To be sure the cost of living is high, but wages are correspondingly high. You may lower the cost of living by cheapening the farm products, but then you must lower labor at the same time. Let us look at it. There are to-day 48,322 sawmills in the United States, employing in round numbers 1,250,000 men, who support a population of 5,000,000 people. Where would those people be with the natural resources of Canada and the mills upon her great water powers to compete with? There are $300,000,000 invested in the pulp and paper mills of the United States, employing 112,000 men. Premier Gouin, in speaking for the Province of Quebec, is quoted in the press as saying:

"The desire of the Provincial Government is to make Quebec the center of the pulp and paper industry of the world, and there is no reason why this should not be accomplished, for Quebec has the essential pulp wood and water power."

We have heard a great deal of discussion in this legislature about the protection of the fisheries along the coast of Maine. Fishermen have been looking after their wants—sea and shore fisheries. It is a great enterprise in the State of Maine, a great enterprise along the coast of Maine. The great State of Washington is the first State in the Union in the matter of fisheries. What about those fisheries? Pass that treaty and you won't discuss the fish question in a Maine Legislature; it won't be necessary; there will be no fish question, and there will be no fisheries along the coast of Maine. We can not compete with the Canadian waters, that are full of fish; the packing houses along the coast of Maine and Massachusetts and Oregon and Washington can not compete with the packing houses that will be erected where the fish are. Have you any doubt of that? Premier G. H. Murray, of Nova Scotia, in discussing the provisions of the treaty before the Canadian Parliament on February 24 said:

"I see no reason to-day why the fishing fleet of Nova Scotia should not increase threefold. I see no reason why we should not become the principal fish-food producers of this continent.

"For a quarter of a century the fishing portion—one-third—of our population longed for a free market with the nation to the south," he continued. "Now that great wish seems satisfied, and hope is filling the heart of every man who follows the sea for a livelihood."

What about the farmers? I said it was not a matter of politics. Democrats and Republicans alike ought to be agreed in the State of Maine upon this matter. Even the Waterville Sentinel on February 27 said:

"The scheme of reciprocity with Canada proposed by President Taft is not a fair proposition, judged either from the viewpoint of a tariff for protection or from the viewpoint of free trade or from the viewpoint of a tariff for revenue. From the viewpoint of a tariff for protection its aim is to take away from the farmers of this country what little of special privilege is extended to them. From the viewpoint of trade it fails to correct the favoritism granted to other lines of business besides farming. From the standpoint of tariff for revenue it is an absolute failure, because it still adheres to the policy of a tariff for the protection of privilege."

The Bangor Commercial of February 14 said:

"The ratification of the proposed reciprocity measure in its present form would be a blow for the future as well as for the present. A blow to the Maine industries depending upon our forest products would mean a blow to hundreds of thousands of people whose livelihood comes from these industries. We are glad to build for the future, but not at the expense of the present, and can not but object to a measure that, if adopted, will injure Maine's interests until such time as it is abrogated.

"But it is not alone the lumbermen, the paper and pulp manufacturers, and the dealers in the manifold forest products who will be dealt a vital blow should the reciprocity agreement be ratified, for every potato farmer, dairy farmer, cattle raiser, and hay producer will find his prosperity very seriously menaced.

"This is a question that is of vital importance to every farmer, not only in Maine but of all States adjacent to the Canadian boundary, for naturally the interests more directly affected are those near the boundary. They naturally can see no justice or equity in giving the manufacturer protection on the articles that they must buy and proclaiming free trade on the products of the farm, of protecting meat and not livestock.

"It has been said that Canada does not raise a vast amount of farm products, but this does not mean that she can not. Open to Canada the markets of the United States on a more than even basis with our farmers, for our neighbors across the border can buy their farms and obtain their laborers more cheaply, and the result is not far to seek. Right across the Maine line in Canada are thousands and thousands of acres of fertile lands. Give them a profitable market and their production will be vastly increased at the expense of Maine. Our farmers will suffer in lower prices for their products and depreciation of their farms and the State will suffer in the removal of many of its agriculturists across the border. And what is true of Maine is equally true of the other States that are adjacent to the Canadian border.

"It is not at all surprising that the sentiment in Canada over the proposed treaty is one of gratification mingled with surprise, for Canada is the larger beneficiary."

P. B. Carvell, Liberal member from New Brunswick, said recently:

"It is practically the unanimous wish of the electorate of the maritime Provinces, Conservatives as well as Liberal, that there should be freer access to the American markets for the natural branches products of Canada."

Under the agreement he felt sure there was no possibility that any Canadian interest would suffer. On the contrary, they would all be greatly stimulated. In his own country, he said, hundreds of Canadian farmers had crossed the international boundary line, a stone's throw away, not because the land of Maine was more fertile but because the New Brunswick farmer did not have as good a market as the man in Maine.

The Carleton Sentinel, published in New Brunswick, under date of February 3, said this in an editorial:

"We direct our readers to a careful study of the proposed reciprocity agreement concluded between the representatives of Canada and the United States, and made public on Thursday of last week. It will be seen that if this proposal becomes law practically everything produced by the farmers of New Brunswick will be admitted into the United States markets free from duty.

"One can hardly grasp at the outset what this will mean to the farmers and ordinary producers of the Province.

"As compensation for these wonderful boons all that we are granting the United States producers is a reduction in duty of from 2½ to 5 per cent on farm machinery. Thus from a farming standpoint and, in fact, from the standpoint of practically every person in New Brunswick we win both ways. We will not only obtain a better market for our products, but we will obtain cheaper machinery with which to produce them."

It is true that we have a large number of corporations—a trust you may call it—in the United States manufacturing farming machinery. It will help those tew trusts in getting a market for their farm machinery, machinery with which they can do better work.

The Observer, published in New Brunswick, under date of February 1, said:

"Never since confederation has there been such a golden prospect for Carleton County farmers as is held out by the new tariff agreement announced in Parliament last Thursday. Throughout Canada the message that Hon. Mr. Fielding bore was considered the most important achievement ever made for the Canadian people. For weeks a committee composed of Canadian and American tariff experts have been arranging an agreement of reciprocity, or free trade, particularly in farm products, and the concessions gained from the Americans are a surprise to every Canadian, for those who have read the full report will have noticed that our neighbors concede to Canada much more than we have given.

"The new arrangement will not become law until the measure passes both Parliament and Congress. That it will pass the farmers here by a most decisive majority goes without saying, but there is reason to apprehend that the measure may be killed in either the House of Representatives or the United States Senate.

"Over in Aroostook farmers are getting 40 cents a dozen for eggs, 50 cents for oats, 12 cents for pork, $10 for hay. When this tariff agreement passes Carleton County farmers will be situated on an equal with their Yankee neighbors, and the day the measure becomes law every farm in Carleton County will increase in value 25 to 50 per cent.

"The day the United States House and Senate passes the proposed measure Carleton County comes in for not only her own but a great slice of her neighbor's market."

Do they know what they are talking about? It is nothing but class legislation, while the farmers of this great Nation are selected for the sacrifice. And you have accomplished nothing by it. You won't relieve the laborer or the manufacturer or the consumer, but you will injure the producer. Now, I say, gentlemen of this House, that the time has been in the past when Democrats and Republicans stood together for Maine and for this great Nation of ours. They stood together shoulder to shoulder when the Union was threatened. They stood together for a United Republic, they marched shoulder to shoulder, they were one, and they saved the Union and they saved the State of Maine. Again they stood together, Democrats and Republicans, some years ago when it was proposed to take our money and depreciate and degrade it and make of a dollar 50 cents, and they stood together, shoulder to shoulder, and they saved the money in this country. The time has come now when they must again stand shoulder to shoulder to save the agricultural interests of this Nation. Too much talk has been made about the consumer who must depend upon the farmer. The vital source of all our life comes from the farmer. Back to the farm we must go for prosperity. The farmer is the lifeblood of the Republic. You must save the farmer if you would save the Nation and the people; and I say the time has come when the producer must be given some protection and you must have some regard for him. The great agricultural interests of this Nation, the millions of farmers to-day that protest against this measure, must be heard, and they will be heard; they will be heard in this House of Representatives, or they will fill the House with those who will hear them. I say that in agricultural Maine we should stand to-day a unit against this treaty, and say that the majority of this committee, composed of Republicans and Democrats alike, are right when they state that this measure, this resolution, ought not to pass. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to any Republican on that side three minutes.

Mr. MORGAN. I would like to have that time to talk on this bill.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] to talk on this bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I have not had time to study this bill before the House, but I remember very well when this proposition was before the House in its original form, and I remember the position I took on it at the time. I was opposed to the original proposition, and I made a speech against it when before the House; I voted against it, I believe, three times in one form and another. I am opposed to it to-day, and I want to compliment the Committee on Ways and Means in bringing in a bill here in favor of the repeal of this measure. I have always thought it was a discrimination against the agricultural interests. I believe in the principle of protection, and I believe that principle ought to apply to agriculture as well as to manufactures. I believe it ought to apply fairly to all interests, and that is the kind of protectionist I am. So I believe that the passage of this bill will indicate the position which the American people will take upon this great question in the future. I do not expect to see the day come again when the American Congress will ever reenact a measure like this, or we will have an American President who would sign and approve such a bill. I just wanted to place myself on record in favor of the passage of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, on last Monday, in replying to an article in the Washington Post regarding the election in the seventh congressional district of Alabama, I called the attention of the House to the fact that Mr. L. B. Rainey, of Gadsden, a Democrat, had been elected to Congress by a majority of 406 votes. Mr. WOOD of Indiana participated in the debate that morning, and the RECORD quotes him as saying or insinuating that I had secured the appointment of a negro by the name of Scott as Assistant Secretary of War, and had also secured the appointment of another negro for some office—he did not say what.

I was in the Hall Monday when Mr. WOOD of Indiana made a speech, but my attention was diverted by some Members who were speaking to me, and I did not hear what he said about me personally with regard to this particular matter. If I had, I would have branded the statement then as incorrect, unwarranted, and untrue. Here is the statement made by Mr. WOOD, and to which I desire to give attention:

I informed them—

He said, speaking of what he told the Republicans in the seventh district of Alabama, referring to me—that he was appreciated fully, however, by the President from the fact that when it came to selection of an Assistant Secretary of War during this trying period he went to Alabama to get him; that this Assistant Secretary of War came from the district of Mr. HEFLIN; and, notwithstanding he was black as a coal, he was nevertheless appointed Assistant Secretary of War.

In the first place, Mr. Chairman, there is not now and has not been at any time during the present administration a negro Assistant Secretary of War. During the war there were three Assistant Secretaries of War. I have just been informed by the War Department that all three of them were white men and that the negro, Emmett Scott, referred to by Mr. WOOD, was not an Assistant Secretary of War, but that he was appointed by the Secretary of War to do certain work in connection with the negro soldiers. I did not even know that Scott had been designated to look after the negro soldiers until I heard it charged by Republicans in the seventh congressional district of Alabama that he had been appointed Assistant Secretary of War—a charge which was untrue. Any insinuation or intimation that I knew of or had anything to do with the negro Scott's appointment to the position that he did fill temporarily is without foundation. It is absolutely untrue.

Then, again, Mr. WOOD said:

I told them that, as another evidence of his influence, that when the ship George Washington sailed to the other side they were looking for some one to represent that section, and the gentleman from Alabama was again called upon to name that representative. The man he selected was as black as the ace of spades.

Mr. Chairman, there is no excuse for this unfounded and untrue statement. I am so innocent of even information as to what he means by this last statement that I do not even know to what he refers. But I want to say that there is no truth in either one of the statements charging or insinuating that I was consulted about or had anything whatever to do with the matter here mentioned by Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There is no word of truth to give rise to or even remotely sustain the charges or insinuations made against me with regard to the negroes here mentioned by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

I fear that he talks one way on the negro question in Indiana and quite another way in Alabama. If you had heard him in Alabama you would have thought that he favored white supremacy, and if you should hear him in Indiana you would think that he favored social equality and marriage between whites and negroes. My position on that question is the same here as elsewhere. I always try to tell the negro the truth about this question. I know the feeling of the great white heart of this country, and we ought to be honest and just with the negro and not deceive him in order to get his vote. You hurt us in the South, and the negro, too, by teaching a false doctrine. The masses of the white men in the North are not with you Republican leaders on this question. Mr. Lincoln said that he was opposed to social equality. He said that he was opposed to intermarriage between the races. And the Republican leaders like Mr. WOOD would do well to stay by the doctrine of Mr. Lincoln.

Those of you Republicans who believe in mixed schools and churches and intermarriage between the negro and white races are doing more to cause riots and crime amongst the negroes than any other thing. You cause them to aspire to something that the decent white man and woman abhor and hate, and will never submit to. In order to obtain the negro vote temporarily you mislead, deceive, and do that which will injure for a long time the negro race and at the same time bring trouble, serious trouble, upon the white men and women throughout the country. Every time you Republicans do anything to encourage mixed schools, mixed churches, and marriage between the races, you are sowing dragon's teeth in the path of white women wherever the negro problem is present. The white woman alone in her home or walking alone through the park in the city, and the country girl walking along the lonely road, as she goes or comes from school, is in danger because of the doctrine that some of you teach. You do an injustice to the good negro, and there are thousands of them. The class that I refer to as the good negro knows that we tell him the truth and give him the true attitude of the real decent white men and women on this race question.

Mr. HERSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. HERSEY. Did the gentleman understand Mr. WOOD to claim, either in Alabama or elsewhere, that he was in favor of the intermarriage of the races—the black race and the white race?

Mr. HEFLIN. Not in Alabama; no.

Mr. HERSEY. Anywhere?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am speaking of what I think his position is on the negro question up in the other sections of the country.

Mr. HERSEY. You do understand he claims that?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I do not say that he claims that. I am stating what I understand his position to be.

Mr. HERSEY. He is not here.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. What is the gentleman's source of any such information as that?

Mr. HEFLIN. I have no direct information. I am simply expressing my opinion as to his attitude on this question. All who indulge in it should quit playing politics with a question that lies at the very heart of all that the white race holds dear and that touches the present and future welfare of the whole negro race in America. Let me say to white men North and South that whenever the crime of rape is committed and white men go out after the brute who commits it do not let anyone harm the innocent negro. It is our duty to see to it that he is protected, and we do that in the Democratic South. But we have registered a vow, and we will keep it as long as there is courage and life in us, and that is when a negro commits the crime of rape on a white woman he must die. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am not here to discuss concretely any bill. I ask for five minutes in order to correct a false impression, honestly entertained, no doubt, by my good friend the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]. I asked it in order that I might speak when he was in the room, and I supposed he was here. I am here to enlighten this committee on the subject of the consideration of the Mondell bill and the Morgan bill and other soldiers' settlement bills. I make the statement that a gentleman on the minority side a few days ago, in the discussion in general debate made the statement, which you will find in the RECORD, that the soldiers' settlement bill was fathered by the Republicans.

I want to say to you in this connection that the bill was introduced by Mr. MONDELL, but I say to you that it has a more remote, though possibly not a more illustrious, ancestry, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has referred to it before the committee and before this House as the "Secretary Lane bill." So that instead of it being a Republican bill and having a single paternity, that which is impossible in nature has become the phenomenon of legislation, and it has a conglomerate ancestry.

As to the Committee on Public Lands, I want to enlighten my good friend, because I know that he would not knowingly misstate any proposition before this House. I assume that it may be regarded as an act of temerity for a gentleman of such tender years and inexperience as myself to endeavor to even enlighten the gentleman or to correct his statement. I want to say to you with reference to the report on the Mondell bill that nine Democrats and eight Republicans on that committee supported the majority report. I think that this is information to this House, and I am making it, not as a partisan, but as a member of that committee. Of the four gentlemen who signed the minority view, all of them were Republicans—not a single one of them a Democrat. And if the majority that supported the majority report, a majority of Democrats, were sincere, why have they not come before this committee and before this House and urged some measure of the kind? They have not done so. I oppose the Mondell bill conscientiously, because I think it is fundamentally defective. This I say to you, gentlemen on the minority side and on the majority side, is not a partisan question, and should not be degraded as a partisan question in any sense, and it can not be. I say to you further, gentlemen, as a statement of information to this committee, that I myself in that committee, as both Democrats and Republicans will attest who are members of that committee, moved to substitute the Morgan bill for the Mondell bill. It is a matter of record. I make these statements, gentlemen, because I think it fair to the Republicans and the Democrats and to the members of this committee that this statement should be made here and in this manner. I make it respectfully.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. BEE. What has become of the Morgan bill in the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I am not able to answer the gentleman's question, except I understand it maintains its place without prejudice in that committee.

Mr. KITCHIN. I did not quite understand. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I will yield for a question.

Mr. KITCHIN. What impression does the gentleman think ought not to be created and ought not to go out to the country?

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. The report as to the number of Democrats and Republicans on the committee, which the gentleman said was about 2 to 1.

Mr. KITCHIN. Some said 13 to 8.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. It was 9 to 12; and I wish to state that that majority report was supported by 17 members of the Committee on the Public Lands, consisting of 9 Democrats and 8 Republicans. I make this statement, not as a partisan, but as a patriotic citizen and a member of that committee; and I believe that this legislation should not be tinged with any partisan consideration, either now or at any subsequent time. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 14 minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I really did not intend to get into any debate upon this soldiers' bills matter, or even to refer to it, or to the bills or lack of bills concerning it reported out or kept in by the Republicans of the Committee on the Public Lands. I am glad, very glad indeed, that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE] has set the House perfectly straight on the Mondell soldiers' bill, the bill introduced by the majority leader of the House. The gentleman says that nine Democrats and only eight Republicans voted to report out of the committee this soldiers' bill.

It appears from the statement of the gentleman that with the dozens of bills introduced by various Members for the relief of the soldiers, no bill at all would have been reported out of that committee in favor of the soldiers if it had not been for the Democrats on the committee. No bill at all, whether a good bill, a just bill, or not, would have been reported. But for the Democrats, all soldiers' relief bills would have been kept in the committee and not one would now be pending for consideration by the House. Now, the Democrats, perhaps, who caused the making of the favorable report on the Mondell bill took the position that there was a sentiment in the country and in the House for the soldiers to have some relief, and that the soldiers had the right to have some bill for their relief considered by the House, whether they agreed to all the provisions of the bill or not. They were willing, for the sake of the soldiers, that some bill, some concrete proposition, should be considered by a Republican House, and so they voted to report it so that the House could consider it if it desired. According to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE]—and I know he is correct—if it had not been for these Democrats on the Committee on the Public Lands the soldiers would not have had an opportunity for this House to have considered any bill, good or bad, in their interest.

I am mighty glad that the Democrats were willing to vote to report some concrete bill, whether wise or unwise, whether they agreed to the bill or not. I am glad they felt that the soldiers really had a right to have something considered in the House. If there is one man in this House who should forever feel under the most grateful obligations to the Democrats on that committee it is the author of the bill, Mr. MONDELL, the Republican majority leader of the House, because if it had not been for these Democrats a Republican committee, which he helped to make and to shape, would have killed his bill in the committee and it could not have been considered by the House. His committee would have ignored and turned down its own majority leader.

These Democrats also out of respect to Mr. MONDELL, the distinguished and able leader of this House, seeing that the committee and members of his own party were going to turn him down and humiliate him, felt that it was nothing but fair and just, although they might not favor all the provisions of the bill, that the majority leader of the Republican Party of the House ought to have his bill, the first bill he introduced at this session, considered in the House by his own party. [Laughter.] Of course, if I had been on that committee, although I am opposed to the bill, I think I would have taken the view that the Democrats took, that the committee under the circumstances should show enough respect for the majority leader of the House [Mr. MONDELL] to give his bill a chance on the floor of the House. [Laughter.] So that is the way the bill got out. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, gentlemen, with respect to the bill now under consideration, I am glad to say that this is one bill, the repeal of the Canadian reciprocity act passed by the Congress under Mr. Taft's administration in 1911, which all Democrats agree with the Republicans should be passed. That reciprocity act was passed, as the Democrats will recall, and I wish to remind them afresh, before the Underwood Act of 1913 was passed. Therefore, from the Democratic standpoint, after the Underwood bill passed, arranging and adjusting the tariff rates according to the Democratic theory and policy, there was little use from the Democratic standpoint in Canadian reciprocity, since it was practically a tariff proposition between this country and Canada. Having the Underwood Act enacted two years after the passage of the reciprocity act, the Democrats have no particular concern in keeping on the statute books the Canadian reciprocity act, especially since Canada rejected it. And then as a real American question it is not fair for this country that we should keep standing forever open for her acceptance the reciprocal agreement with Canada after she, by a vote of her people, has rejected it, leaving Canada for the next 10 or 20 or 30 years free to come in and accept it whenever she thinks conditions have so changed as to make the agreement a one-sided bargain in her favor. Therefore, as a national proposition, in the exercise of our right and interest, we ought to repeal it now.

I am very glad to agree with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and the other Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means on this bill.

As to the report of my friend from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], perhaps he states the facts, but not all the facts with respect to how that legislation was passed and who voted for it. It is stated in this report that "while the measure was sponsored by a Republican President, it was opposed by a majority of the Republicans in Congress and went on the statute books only because of the united support of the Democrats." Of course, the Democrats did not unitedly support it. We had some Democrats who opposed it.

I want to call the attention of the gentleman from North Dakota to the fact that this same identical reciprocity bill was passed by a Republican House—in February, 1911—in the short session before the Democrats had come in. We Democrats did not take control of the House until the extra session called by Mr. Taft in April, 1911, after the election of 1910. But from December 1, 1910, to March 4, 1911, the Republicans had control of the House by a large majority, and that same identical reciprocity agreement was passed by that Republican House. The Senate, however, refused to take it up, or did not pass it. And because of its failure to pass, Mr. Taft called an extra session for the express purpose of passing this reciprocity agreement, which the Republican House a month before had passed. In this extra session the House was Democratic.

I believe the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], who made this report, was not here then; neither was my friend from Kansas [Mr. WHITE] and many other gentlemen. But let us keep the record straight. Mr. Taft, a Republican President, and Mr. KNOX, the Republican Secretary of State, negotiated with Canada this agreement before any Democrats in the House ever heard of it and before any Democrat in the Senate ever heard of it, and they submitted it to the Republican Congress—the short session of the Sixty-first Congress—and the Republican House passed it.

You know the reciprocity bill could not have gotten out of the Republican Ways and Means Committee in that Republican Congress in 1911 if the majority of the Republicans on the Ways and Means Committee had not been for it. Mr. Payne headed that committee. On that committee were Mr. LONGWORTH, who is now a Member of this House; the late Mr. Hill of Connecticut; Mr. Boutell of Illinois; and Mr. McCall, of Massachusetts, who, one or two years afterwards, was made governor of Massachusetts. They voted to report it out and defended it on the floor. Mr. MANN, one of the strongest and ablest leaders the Republican Party ever had in this House, voted for it in the Republican House in February, 1911, and in the Democratic House in April, 1911. Gentlemen, at the time it was a wise act and, in my judgment, it was the most statesmanlike act of the whole Taft administration. But as I say, there is no use for it now. It will serve no purpose now. I merely wanted to call the attention of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] to the facts as they appear in the RECORD and to some of the distinguished Republicans in the House who voted for the act.

And, gentlemen, I want to call attention to another gentleman who voted for this reciprocity act both in the Republican House and a month or two afterwards in the Democratic House, and that is the patriotic and distinguished gentleman whom the united voice of the Republicans in this House made Speaker, Mr. GILLETT.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman from North Carolina maintain that the original reciprocity act was passed by a Republican House?

Mr. KITCHIN. A Republican House; the original bill submitted by Mr. Taft.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is mistaken, because it was approved on July 26, 1911, when Mr. CHAMP CLARK was Speaker and the Democrats were in full control. The gentleman's memory is marvelous, but he certainly will not dispute the RECORD.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is the act that Democrats and Republicans and President Taft passed and put upon the statute book in the extra session of 1911. But I was referring to the vote in the preceding February, when the Republicans had control of the House. Will somebody ask Mr. Sabine to send me the RECORD of the vote on that in February, 1911?

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, that came up at the end of my occupancy of the Speakership, at the end of eight years. I was violently opposed to the so-called Canadian treaty, and suffice it to say that it did not pass during that short session.

Mr. KITCHIN. It is barely possible that I may be mistaken, but I am equally as certain the House did pass it in the short session of the Sixty-first Congress, in February, 1911, while the gentleman was Speaker; but we will see when I get the RECORD.

Mr. CANNON. I will tell the gentleman why I am so clear that it did not pass Congress in the short session. I was sent for to go into the President's room at the other end of the Capitol, where President Taft had been signing bills, and I went over there immediately after the expiration of that Congress, which expired at 12 o'clock on the 4th of March, and I went along with several other Republicans, and the President asked us for our opinion as to the proper time to call a special session of Congress, whether it should be immediately, in April, or in May; and after polling everybody else I said, "Mr. President, the real reason for calling that session together is to ratify the reciprocity treaty with Canada?" He said, "Well, yes." I said, "Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, it does not make a d—— bit of difference when you call it"; and it was called, and the Democratic House passed it.

Mr. KITCHIN. But the gentleman will admit that before the Democrats took control, in the short session when the Republicans were in the majority, the bill passed the House. I did not say it passed Congress. I expressly said it failed in the Senate. The question at issue now is, Did the House in February, 1911, while in control of the Republicans, pass the reciprocity bill? The gentleman may possibly be right and I may possibly be wrong, but I want to get the RECORD. That will tell. Ah, here it is. Let us see. The yeas and nays were ordered on the passage of the reciprocity bill on the 14th day of February, 1911, in the Republican House, and this RECORD shows that both the young gentleman from Minnesota, the active and diligent whip of the Republicans [Mr. KNUTSON], and my esteemed and respected and revered and lifelong friend, Mr. CANNON, are mistaken and that your humble servant was correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Give me one minute more.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman one minute.

Mr. KITCHIN. The RECORD shows that in the Sixty-first Congress, on the 14th day of February, 1911, with the Republicans by a large majority having control of the House, it was passed by an overwhelming majority. The vote stood—for it, yeas 221, nays 93, or two and one-half times as many yeas as there were nays. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, the gentleman is correct and I was incorrect in saying that it did not pass the House; but if it had not been for the solid Democratic vote for it, or substantially that, it would not have passed.

Mr. KITCHIN. I only wanted to show the RECORD for the benefit of my young friend, Mr. KNUTSON. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] had gone further with his statement, he would have found that when the reciprocity bill passed the House in February, 1911, it passed with a solid Democratic vote and a minority of the Republicans voting for it, and it never received a majority of Republican votes in this House at any time.

Mr. KITCHIN. There are many other righteous acts that never received a majority of the Republicans, either. But that bill received a vote of a majority of the Republicans on the Ways and Means Committee, did it not? The gentleman wes a member of that committee at that time.

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not remember as to that, but I do not think so; and if you think Canadian reciprocity a righteous act, why are you going to vote for its repeal? But the gentleman from North Carolina is always resourceful and will present any kind of an argument, whether it is correct or otherwise, if he can get merriment out of it from the Democratic side of the House, whenever a tariff bill is under consideration.

This treaty has remained upon our statute books since 1911 and would become a law by the approval of Canada. When this bill became a law, so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, the matter was taken up by the Canadian people and submitted to a vote of their people, and it was overwhelmingly defeated. Since that time the law has remained upon our statute books, subject to the approval of Canada, and would become a law at any time that the Canadian Government might approve the treaty.

I have here a statement prepared by the Tariff Commission, a very valuable document, a summary and brief history of all the commercial treaties which have become laws between the Government of the United States and other countries. I commend the reading of this report to every Member of the House. The substance of the report is that this Government never entered into a reciprocity treaty with any foreign country that did not work to the disadvantage of our people.

Many treaties that have been agreed to between the representatives of our Government, the Secretary of State, and foreign authorities have been rejected by the Senate end of this Congress. We entered into a treaty with Canada in 1854. That treaty became effective in 1855 and remained a law for 11 years, and was repealed by a Republican Congress in 1866 by the adoption of protective measures.

Congress was called together in extra session after the House of Representatives had declined to ratify a treaty. Presented in the form it was drawn up, it was necessary to submit it to both Houses of Congress for ratification—the treaty between this Government and Cuba. In 1903 Congress was called together in extra session to pass that treaty. After great pressure had been brought to bear on Congress by President Roosevelt that treaty became a law. I want to show you the effect of that treaty. I was a Member of the House of Representatives at the time that treaty passed the House. I voted against it.

The balance of trade between this Government and Cuba for 17 years from the date of that treaty to the present time shows the balance of trade against the United States of $538,210,000. The average balance of trade annually was more than $31,000,000. Of course the trade between the two countries has very materially increased since that time, as our trade with the whole world has increased in volume.

During the same period of time under our general tariff laws, without any special trade relations between this Government and Canada, a small foreign nation to the north of us, the balance of trade has been in our favor. With Canada the balance of trade annually has been in our favor to the extent of $122,000,000, or more than $1,031,865,000 in 17 years. There is evidently a difference between a country doing business with the people of the United States under a general tariff law and a reciprocity treaty, which means free trade on many products, and the ordinary transaction of business in the usual manner.

I repeat, gentlemen, that there is not a treaty of record between this country and any other country in the world that has not operated to the disadvantage of our people. I can see no benefit coming to the people of the United States by trading a horse to the people of another nation for a horse.

The Republican principle of reciprocity is to accept from a foreign country such goods as they produce that we do not produce, if they will take some of our products under the same terms. It has always been a Republican principle to admit free of duty, or at the very lowest possible rate of foreign duties, articles produced in foreign countries that we do not produce here but must have. Coffee and tea are articles of food produced in foreign countries and not produced here. It is not a competitive product with any product of this country.

Raw rubber is produced in foreign countries and admitted free under the Republican law and under existing law. There never has been a duty on coffee and tea entering this country, except as a war measure during the Civil War. I think I am correct in that statement, although there might have been a duty in very early days before my recollection.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. How about the export duty on coffee in Brazil?

Mr. FORDNEY. No country imposes an export duty on coffee. Brazil produces the bulk of the coffee which comes to this country, and the Government of Brazil purchases all the coffee produced there and sells it at a profit, and that profit goes into the treasury of Brazil. They get around the export duty by that sort of method.

We are talking a great deal about the high cost of living in the papers and to the galleries. The administration has asked additional laws to enable it to bring down the cost of living. Such laws have been passed by Congress. I have reports and a photograph in my office to the effect that more than 30 Government ships are lying at anchor, out of operation, at Seattle, Wash. Thirty Government ships inactive and a great shortage of tonnage all over the world! In Brazil the docks and warehouses are filled to overflowing with coffee waiting for tonnage to bring that coffee to the United States or to take it to some foreign country. If the administration wants to bring down the cost of living in one great food product of this country, why not send some of those Government ships lying at anchor in Seattle to Brazil and bring in a few cargoes of coffee, dump them on the market, and reduce the price of that commodity? [Applause.]

I know at my home old Government Java coffee sold 3 pounds for a dollar some months ago. Now $1.20 for 2 pounds for that same coffee. If this administration is really serious and wishes to do something to reduce the cost of living, why not bring in from Brazil some of this coffee that is begging for tonnage? Here is a steamship company at New York, with which a Munson is connected, comes in and offers, so I am told on good authority, comes and offers the Shipping Board the very high price of $190 per ton for 20 ships. But the Government will not sell for that money, although they admit that it is a very high price.

This company wants to purchase those ships and put them in the South American trade. The administration is the dog in the manger, if my information is correct. It will neither put their boats in operation between this country and South America or let anyone else have the boats to put them in that trade. And they talk about wanting additional laws to reduce the high cost of living! Why not move in that direction if sincere?

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Is it not a fact that strikes at Rio de Janeiro have been one of the causes for the delay of the shipment of coffee, and is not that one of the real troubles?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not think so. I do not know of any strikes on Government ships operated by the Shipping Board.

Mr. McKEOWN. I am talking about strike conditions of the longshoremen at the ports of Brazil. Is not that the reason?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; that is not my information. My information is that the warehouses and the docks are loaded to overflowing, waiting only for tonnage. The Government of Brazil has been compelled to borrow from people in this country—the bankers of New York—large sums of money to carry that great volume of coffee, because the Government borrows the money to pay the coffee producers of Brazil. All coffee produced in Brazil, under penalty, must first be offered to the Government before sold to any other persons in the world. Therefore the Government controls the coffee trade in Brazil.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for the repeal of this law because we have suffered every time we have entered into reciprocity treaties with any people of the world, and every time we have placed upon our statute books a low rate of duty on imports the industries of this country and American labor have suffered and will continue to do so so long as the great difference in the scale of wages prevails between the labor in this country and the labor of any other country. American laboring men have higher standards of living than any other laboring people under God's sun because of the higher wage scale here in this country. I have statistics from Germany and Austria-Hungary which show that since the war the wage scale in gold in those countries has practically not advanced in an appreciable way. Where the wages were from 10 to 13 cents per hour before the war they are to-day from 10 to 14 cents per hour in gold. Of course, in their depreciated money the wage is higher. The par value of the German mark is 23.8 cents. It is offered to-day in the markets of the world for 6 cents in gold and also in Germany. Of course the man who received a mark per hour or half a mark per hour before the war now would receive 2, 3, or 4 marks because of the depreciated value of their currency and because of the depreciated value of money all over Europe, and a comparison based upon the mark or the money of any other country, depreciated as it is in Europe, as to the rate of wages paid there and here, is of no value except it be put in terms of gold. There is to-day a difference between the wage scale of the United States and in Europe as great as there was before the war. Compare any wage scale in any line of business in the United States and you will find that the difference is as great to-day between our wage scale in every line of industry, as compared with other countries, as it was before the war. Every article of production whether manufactured or agricultural, in its total cost of production, carries at least 90 per cent labor cost. Now, how in the name of common sense can we have lower prices for the products of this country while the high cost of production prevails? It is not practical and it is only a demagogue that preaches anything else.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. If the reciprocity pact with Canada had become operative, it would have worked a great hardship on the agricultural interests of this country.

Mr. FORDNEY. Absolutely; a greater hardship upon the agricultural interests of the country than upon any other industry in the land. Of the 100,000,000 people in this country to-day, only 33 per cent live in the rural districts and are farmers. We look to them to produce the food articles for all the rest of the people; and any law that works a hardship upon the farming industry of the country works a hardship upon the whole people of the country, because we are dependent upon that one-third of our people for our food and our clothing. Therefore, I say to you that any law which affects the agricultural interests of the country should be most carefully considered by men in this House upon both sides of the House. No man wants to vote for a law, Democrat or Republican, which will work to the disadvantage of our people as a whole. We differ in our opinion as to how we should vote on these various measures, but I do not accuse any man who differs with me of being dishonest in his views. If I am right, then he certainly is wrong when he differs with me; and if he is correct in his position, I am wrong, and I will not vote for any law, no matter from what source it comes, unless in my opinion it works to the advantage of the masses of the people. Neither do I think other honest men will. I believe the repeal of this law will remove an obstable of great danger resting in our statute books to-day. There is danger of its becoming a law. Certainly so, if Canada accepts it at any minute. I am anxious, therefore, to repeal the law, and I hope that every man in the House, both Democrat and Republican, will vote for the bill. I ask that the Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canade, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, is repealed, to take effect on the day following the passage of this act. On and after such date there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the articles enumerated in such act, the growth, product, or manufacture of the Dominion of Canada, when imported therefrom into the United States or any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), in lieu of the duties levied, collected, and paid under such act, the duties levied, collected, and paid under existing law upon the same articles when imported from other countries.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], in explaining why he would support the proposition to repeal the Canadian reciprocity act, said that since the passage of the Underwood tariff act in 1913 Democratic theories in this matter had been put into law and consequently there was no further use for the Canadian reciprocity act to remain on the statute books. I wish that one William Howard Taft, somewhere in his travels, would take note of the observation of the gentleman from North Carolina. Every real Republican in 1911, when President Taft, by main strength and awkwardness, forced this measure through the Congress over the protests of his party knew that it was a Democratic tariff proposition, pure and simple. Mr. Taft had been elected President by a majorty of more than a million and a half votes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I decline to yield. His party had an overwhelming majority in both Houses of the Congress and controlled all of the Northern States. At the beginning of his administration Republicans had every reason to expect and to look forward to a long lease of power and Republican supremacy.

In my opinion, and I do not say it criticizing Mr. Taft's motives or his patriotism in any way, in urging this proposition and forcing it through Congress he committed the greatest political mistake that was ever made by an occupant of the White House. The one cardinal doctrine of Republicanism for which the party has ever stood is protection—protection of labor, protection of American industries, and protection to the American farmer. We had passed in 1909 the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill under his administration at a special session of Congress. There was some complaint from many good Republicans that certain schedules in that bill were excessive, yet the country accepted the bill, and its subsequent operation demonstrated it to be a wise law, a law that brought in abundant revenue, that gave ample protection to every real American interest. Following this came this astounding proposition from a Republican President that the Republican farmer, whose support had been the backbone of the Republican Party in the States of the great West and Northwest—that the Republican Party proposed to put those things which the farmer produced upon the free list. Republicans could hardly believe that proposition was seriously advanced and would be forced through the Congress with all the power of the Federal administration. The Republican Congress refused to carry out the President's recommendations, and the Sixty-first Congress closed without final action on the proposition. After the adjournment of that Congress, the President called into extra session the new Congress, which was Democratic. I remember reading in the papers just after the new Congress had organized that President Taft had called to the White House Mr. Speaker CLARK and Senator Stone, of Missouri, and consulted with them as to the methods and means of getting the reciprocity act through Congress. I said at that time to myself, "God help the Republican Party," if its head, if its leader, if its President had gone into consultation and caucus with such distinguished partisan Democrats as the two gentlemen mentioned to devise the means of getting through Congress a law diametrically opposed——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To every Republican principle. And so the law was passed. The Republican Party was defeated. The passage of this law started all the troubles that have since overtaken the Republican Party and presaged the disasters that came in rapid succession. It lost for the President the confidence of the farmers of the country—the Republican farmers—and he never after that was able to have behind him a united party in his administration.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Canadian reciprocity was to the Republican Party what the daylight-saving law will be to the Democratic Party. Is not that true?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let us have an answer to that important question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is unbelievable, and those who read the history of this country in the years to come will absolutely be unable to comprehend how it was possible for a great party, a party that has been supreme in this country for half a century, that had passed great and beneficent laws, whose policies and principles were believed in and accepted by an overwhelming majority of the American people, could in four short years be so utterly discredited and destroyed as to take a third place in the popular vote, carrying only two small States. That all came about and was made possible by our then President, William Howard Taft, working hand in hand with such Democrats as the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman permit one little question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. KITCHIN. Did the gentleman vote for Mr. Taft after he submitted and approved this so-called miserable, anti-Republican bill for reciprocity with Canada?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am sorry to say I did.

Mr. KITCHIN. Very well——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I voted for him for the reason that he was the Republican Party nominee, nominated at a convention of the party regularly called. I just stayed in the party ranks awaiting the time when an American Republican Congress would repeal this act.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am right.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I decline to yield further as I have a few other things I desire to say.

Mr. WELLING. We accept the gentleman's apology.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We heard it stated here this morning that the minority party, the Democratic Party, was in favor of this repeal?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And yet that party had, during all the several years which it controlled Congress, plenty of time in which to accomplish the repeal, but did not do it. And from the day of the Underwood tariff act the Canadians have been congratulating themselves on having the benefit of reciprocity without any of the discomforts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is true. The only reason given why they favor its repeal now is that under the Underwood tariff act we have practically free trade with Canada. The trouble with Mr. Taft—and I have the highest regard for him personally—is that he was not at the time he advocated this measure a Republican. He has never in his life been a real Republican, and he is not a Republican to-day [applause], if we can judge from his public utterances, stating his views upon great issues that come before the country. He is absolutely not in harmony and has never been in harmony with the real, old-fashioned Republicanism of the country that was advocated by Republican leaders like Abraham Lincoln, like James G. Blaine, William McKinley, and other illustrious leaders of the party. [Applause.] He can not help himself. He is a free trader, as can be demonstrated by many of his utterances before his election to the Presidency, and naturally he thought that he had accomplished great fame when he forced through the Congress this free-trade act over the protest of the great party which made him President.

He is still operating as an assistant or aid of some kind to the Democratic Party. The trouble with Mr. Taft is that he has unlimited capacity to do the wrong thing at the right time all the time, and such has been the case through his entire career. He is now acting as a wet nurse for the league of nations [laughter], and is advising a few Republican Senators—he admits they are few—to not act in harmony with their party in the Senate, but to join with the opposition and force upon the American people this un-American instrument known as the league of nations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Taft, I think, is the Fatty Arbuckle of American politics. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have had all the time I want.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise with a great deal of regret to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS], but I want to ask him some questions if I get the time. He says that Taft never was a Republican, never was imbued with those great fundamental Republican principles——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do you think he is?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think he is the best Republican you ever had, and that is the reason you gentlemen are against him. He is too good and patriotic for you.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That proves absolutely that he is no Republican at all.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman says that he voted for Mr. Taft after he had urged and approved the reciprocity act only because he was nominated by the party machine. In that campaign the gentleman had Mr. Wilson to vote for. He was in favor of the reciprocity act. He had Mr. Roosevelt, one of the Republican candidates, to vote for. He was so strong in favor of reciprocity that he advised Taft to submit it to Congress. Mr. Taft submitted it to him before he submitted it to Congress. Roosevelt approved it. There were three candidates. Mr. Wilson was a candidate for the Democratic Party, Mr. Taft of the Republican Party, and Mr. Roosevelt of the other Republican Party. They were all for Canadian reciprocity. Let us see about the next election, in 1916.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me ask the gentleman a question there. Was the Canadian reciprocity act a Republican or Democratic measure, in your opinion?

Mr. KITCHIN. It was negotiated by a Republican President and by a Republican Secretary of State, and the act was approved by a Republican President—Mr. Taft. The Republicans afterwards, knowing that, nominated Mr. Taft and another branch of the Republicans nominated Mr. Roosevelt. There were two Republican candidates, and they both approved this reciprocity act.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do you consider the Canadian reciprocity act a Democratic or Republican measure?

Mr. KITCHIN. I considered it at that time a real patriotic American act, indorsed by a Republican President and by the Republican candidate thereafter, by the Republican Secretary of State, and by the present Republican Speaker, by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], who is here now in the House——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did you not get the same thing in the Underwood tariff bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. We got the main things that the Democrats wanted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And is that a Democratic or a Republican bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. We got the main things the Democrats wanted in the Underwood bill. We voted for reciprocity because it was right. That is the reason Mr. Taft and Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. KNOX and Mr. GILLETT and Mr. LONGWORTH and the late Mr. Payne, who was chairman of the committee, favored it. They did not say, "It is a Republican bill," or "it is a Democratic bill." We all said it was right and we got together and voted for it.

Now, the gentleman is mighty sorry that he voted for Mr. Taft. If he had not, and had voted at all, he would have voted for Mr. Roosevelt or Mr. Wilson, and both believed in the reciprocity act. Who did the gentleman vote for in the election of 1916, Wilson or Hughes? He voted for Mr. Hughes. Mr. Hughes was strong for reciprocity.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Hughes was defeated, too, was he not?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

He was strong for it, and you were strong for him. The gentleman said that Mr. Taft was a Democrat because he was for reciprocity. If so, Mr. Roosevelt was a Democrat, because he was for reciprocity, and Mr. Hughes was a Democrat, because he was for reciprocity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7779) to repeal the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FORDNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Rules Committee, I submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio submits a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 327.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 4438, being a bill to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise.

That there shall be 2 hours and 30 minutes of general debate, one-half to be controlled by those favoring the bill and one-half to be controlled by those opposing the bill.

That at the conclusion of the general debate the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule.

That the bill, together with the amendments, if any, shall be reported to the House.

Thereupon the previous questions shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto for final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] desire any time on the rule?

Mr. GARRETT. No; but I will reserve five minutes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, the bill which the rule makes in order is a bill designed for the rehabilitation of the industrial cripple. It is an effort to complete certain legislation that was started some time in 1915.

The movement for vocational education was before the country for at least 15 years before any definite stand was taken, and finally it was written in the form of law under the Smith-Hughes Act, which provided cooperation between the Federal Government and the States, the Federal Government appropriating a dollar that would be met by the States in return, and the law requiring that when we reached the maximum the amount of $7,000,000 from the Federal Treasury was to be met by $7,000,000 from the State treasuries.

That law applied simply to pupils. Then later on that was supplemented by the effort to rehabilitate the disabled soldiers, and it was thought wise to put that work also under the same board that was then in existence under the law of 1917, called the Smith-Hughes Act.

That supplemental act, as you know, applies only to soldiers, and was purely a Federal function. The States had nothing to do with that at all, and in that respect the law differed widely from the Smith-Hughes Act. When the bill for the rehabilitation of wounded soldiers was before the country we were besieged from many sources to add to it the rehabilitation of the industrial cripple. We did not want to do that at that time, because the soldier rehabilitation was purely Federal, while the industrial cripple would be both Federal and State, and as the Smith-Hughes Act acts in cooperation with the State boards, so the industrial cripple would have to act in cooperation with the State boards, while the soldier bill would not reach the States at all. We asked the proponents of such a measure to withhold any urgency, because we did not see our way clear to put that on the bill, but we promised that at the earliest convenience there would be a measure introduced looking toward the rehabilitation of the industrial cripple. That came on, and was introduced both in the Senate and in the House. The Senate took it up and discussed it for four days, and on June 21 it was passed in the Senate without a dissenting vote.

Our Committee on Education, having joined the Senate committee last session in hearings, saw fit not to open hearings at this session, but considered the bill and unanimously reported it to this House. It has been on the calendar for two or three months.

The rule that we have just now had reported makes this bill in order for consideration. I do not care to enter upon the discussion of the merits of the bill at this time.

Mr. WALSH rose.

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Was the rule which has just been reported reported out by a quorum of the Committee on Rules?

Mr. FESS. There was no question raised about a quorum. There is always a quorum unless the question is raised.

Mr. WALSH. I am asking the gentleman if a quorum of the committee was present?

Mr. FESS. That question did not come up. Consequently it would stand as a quorum.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think the gentleman is correct about that. I think any Member of the House is entitled to know, when a rule or any other measure is reported here, whether a quorum of the committee was present.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman probably is correct in his insistence of the right of the House to know whether a quorum was present in the committee, and I still insist that a quorum is present if the question is not raised. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I think I shall want only two or three minutes. Is the gentleman from Ohio yielding to me, or am I recognized in my own right?

Mr. FESS. The gentleman is recognized in his own right. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I think I should say that I was unavoidably absent when this rule was reported. I was in attendance for a few moments while a hearing upon another matter was in progress, and I really understood that nothing except that hearing was to be had, and I explained my situation to the committee, which excused me, and I left before this matter was taken up. Consequently, to be entirely frank with the House, I have not given any very great consideration to this legislation, even such consideration as members of the Committee on Rules in dealing with a rule usually do give. However, I have come to the conclusion that, so far as I am personally concerned, whatever my opinion in regard to the legislation might be after hearing the debate and considering it, I do not desire to resist the proposition for its consideration.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. WELLING. Does the gentleman care to state whether any members of the minority side of the Committee on Rules were present when the rule was considered?

Mr. GARRETT. I can not state as to that, because I do not know.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman indorse the proposition that the chairman of a committee can call his committee together and in the absence of every other member of that committee can go to work and perform and direct a report on a bill because there was no question of quorum raised?

Mr. GARRETT. No; I do not, Mr. Speaker. However, let me say in regard to this legislation that I am not in position to state whether there was a quorum present or not. I was in attendance at the Committee on Rules for a very few moments. There were a number of members there. I was at that time the only minority member. Whether any came in afterwards I do not know. But personally I did not count the number of persons who were there, and so far as I know there was a quorum. I do not know how that is.

Mr. WALSH rose.

Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire me to yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. I desire time.

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this rule, and I am opposed to the bill which it proposes to make in order.

I think the time has arrived in the late weeks of this special session when Members on both sides of the aisle should begin to give some attention to matters of economy.

I am opposed to extending further the authority, the privileges, and the duties of this Federal Vocational Board.

Now, we all recognize the interest in this subject that has been displayed by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], and I wish to heaven that men of his type and ability were upon that board at the present time expending money. Their administration of the laws we have passed, I submit, is open to severe criticism. Heretofore and probably now their expenditure has been and is wasteful, and the manner in which they have been attempting to take care of the wounded and disabled men who participated in the Great War in the military and naval branches of our Government is open to criticism.

Now, this bill seeks to extend it to men disabled in industrial pursuits, including agriculture, trade, commerce, manufacturing, mining, transportation, and all the mechanic arts. I submit that in the present state of the public finances, with the tremendous interest charge that we will be forced to pay in the years to come, with the tremendous expenses of government, we ought not to extend this Federal vocational rehabilitation to civilians until we have demonstrated beyond all question that we can make a success of it in administering the law and conferring its benefits upon our wounded and disabled soldiers and sailors.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. WALSH. For a question.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is my colleague aware that there has been a resolution introduced, which I think is before the Rules Committee to-day, calling for an investigation of this particular board and the way its labors are performed?

Mr. WALSH. I did not know that the resolution had been taken up for consideration, but some resolution should be considered and an investigation ought to be made.

Mr. TREADWAY. If my colleague believes that an investigation ought to be made, does not that raise still further doubts as to whether we should confer additional powers upon that board before they show their ability to conduct the work already in their hands?

Mr. WALSH. It certainly does follow that if there is complaint, and if there has been a failure on the part of this board and its officials in its activities to confer the benefits upon our wounded soldiers and sailors, that certainly we ought not to extend the privileges and duties of it to take in civilians. But I am opposed, as I said, to extending these privileges to persons in civilian life, anyway. After having come out of a great war, with thousands of crippled and disabled soldiers upon our hands, who, I agree, should receive the benefits of legislation to rehabilitate them, I do not believe that the Government should further go into this matter of rehabilitation and extend it along paternalistic lines.

Oh, they will say, the State must match dollar for dollar. If the States are willing to match Federal dollars with an equal amount of their own dollars, let the States embark upon this matter independently of the Federal Government. Let them try out this experiment. But, I say, Members of the House, that I believe the time has come to stop appropriating the people's money except upon the most urgent need and on the most satisfactory showing that the money is required, and I believe we should be slow before embarking upon new ventures such as this is. Therefore I am opposed to the rule and opposed to the measure which it makes in order.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make just a plain statement in regard to this rule. I did not understand that the rule was to be brought on the floor of the House this afternoon. The rule was presented to the Rules Committee, or a question regarding the rule. As far as I know, I think there was no rule drawn or presented to the committee as it was presented to the House. I am going to tell the exact situation. There were four Republican members present. I opposed the rule and reserved the right to oppose the same on the floor of the House. I, as a member of the Rules Committee, will never vote for a rule that comes in there that is so important as this one, or on the floor of the House, without any consideration whatever. The rule was not before the Rules Committee for five minutes. I did not make the point that there was no quorum present until after the vote was taken, and then I was told it was too late; but as long as the question has been asked I want the House to thoroughly understand the situation. There were four Republican members present and no Democrats. The statement that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] made was exactly correct. I was the acting chairman when the Rules Committee first met this morning, and he asked the question if there would be any definite vote taken; and at that time I did not expect there would be, and I told him we expected merely to have a hearing. Now, let us see the situation in which we are. The Rules Committee this morning held a two hours' hearing on a resolution presented by Mr. ROGERS to investigate the present Federal Vocational Rehabilitation Board. From the evidence that was put before the committee this morning it is plain that a majority of the people feel that that board up to the present time has not functioned. Now, consider this as a business proposition. When you have a resolution before the committee to investigate a board because it is not functioning, then you turn around and vote out by a special rule to make a special order of this House a bill giving more business for the same board that you doubt whether it functions or not. If there is anything businesslike in that I want to know it. And that is why I opposed the rule and am opposed to the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman undertake to assert that simply because charges are made against a board of this character, it raises a presumption that the board is not performing its duties in a satisfactory way?

Mr. SNELL. I am not making that charge myself, but it is under consideration.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the inference to be drawn from the gentleman's argument.

Mr. SNELL. That is the condition that confronts us. Personally I am opposed to the legislation, and I certainly am opposed to the rule that makes it in order at this time, and I want the House to know the exact conditions under which it is brought on the floor of the House.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of order against the matter now under discussion. I make the point of order upon the facts that have been developed that this rule is not properly before the House.

I take it for granted that so long as a chairman stands on the report of his committee, it will be presumed that a quorum of the committee was present when the report was ordered. In all legislative bodies, until the question of quorum is raised, I agree to the proposition advanced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], that the presumption is that a quorum is present. Until it was developed by sufficient evidence that a quorum was not present in the Committee on Rules when this rule was reported, it was perfectly competent and proper for the chairman or acting chairman of the committee to rely upon the presumption that this rule had been reported by a quorum of the committee. Further I agree to the principle that a chairman of a committee is not compellable to answer an inquiry whether any given action was taken by a quorum of the committee. But now, according to the statement of the gentleman from New York who has just taken his seat [Mr. SNELL], this rule was not considered by a quorum of the Committee on Rules, of which the gentleman is a member. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FESS] does not deny, or challenge this statement of fact. Less than a quorum in the Committee on Rules, or in any other committee for that matter, can not properly and legally order a report to this body. It appears in this case that less than a quorum did order a report, and as the evidence to that effect is unchallenged I submit that this rule is not properly before the House. Therefore I make the point of order based upon the statements of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, the proposition raised by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] is a very serious one. If after action has been taken, either by a committee of the House or by the House, the point can be raised that no quorum was present when the business was transacted in the committee, probably it would invalidate nine-tenths of the actions of this House or of its committees.

We have here this condition: It seems that there was not a quorum of the committee present when this action was taken. There was a member of the committee present who was opposed to the action being taken. It was his privilege, as it was the privilege of any member of the committee, to have raised the point of no quorum; if he desired to raise that question at all, it should not be raised here, it should have been raised there.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state what protection the House has against three or four members of a committee getting together and reporting out a measure to the House, particularly in the Committee on Rules, bringing it up for consideration, if the point of no quorum can not be raised in the House?

Mr. TOWNER. The question can not always be raised after action is taken. It is the duty of members of the committee to be present and take part. It is the duty of members of the committee to see that no action is taken unless a quorum is present.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. Take the particular case in hand. I have just made a statement myself in the House which I do not know that the gentleman from Iowa heard.

Mr. TOWNER. I did not.

Mr. GARRETT. I attended the committee in the beginning of the session. I made inquiry as to what business would be transacted, and was informed that there would be nothing except a hearing this morning upon a resolution. Upon that statement, I left the committee, explaining to the committee the necessity for so doing, on account of an engagement before I knew that the meeting was to be held.

Mr. TOWNER. By whom was the gentleman informed?

Mr. GARRETT. By the acting chairman of the committee, publicly, in the presence of the other members. I did not know at the time the rule was called up whether any other member of the minority had been in attendance, but I have since learned that there was not. I do not know that the minority would have been opposed to the rule. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Iowa, that it was the duty of members to be present, which I agree to, I thought I would make this statement.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement by the gentleman from Tennessee, it is necessary for me to make a further statement. The committee took a vote on reporting this resolution and it was carried. It was suggested that it was somewhat delicate to report out a resolution where no member of the minority party was present. That was after telephoning all the members of the minority trying to find them, so as to have them present. The gentleman from Tennessee had been in. I was asked to see the gentleman from Tennessee after the vote was had. I talked with the gentleman from Tennessee on the floor of the House and told him I would not call it up unless he would assent to it, and he said he would offer no objection.

Mr. GARRETT. I said I would not resist the rule, so far as I was concerned. The gentleman's statement is correct. I did not inquire of the gentleman as to whether there was a quorum present and there was nothing said about a quorum at that time.

Mr. FESS. That question had not come up; the only question that came up was whether the gentleman would oppose it. I did what I was requested to do and got the assent of the gentleman from Tennessee before I called it up.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio was not the question of a quorum discussed in the committee this morning?

Mr. FESS. I think the gentleman was asked if he wanted to make a point of no quorum.

Mr. SNELL. And I said I would not make the point, but I understood it was not to be brought up to-day.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman say he understood it was not to be brought up to-day?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I was authorized to see Mr. GARRETT, which I did, and when he gave his assent I called it up. If he had not assented, I would not have called it up.

Mr. SNELL. I understood the gentleman from Ohio to tell the chairman of the committee and myself that it was not to be brought up to-day, and the chairman so told me that that was what he understood, and no member of the Rules Committee thought it would be brought up.

Mr. FESS. Does the chairman state that he understood so?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I came from the chairman of the committee immediately on the floor to present it.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I think that these matters are proper for the consideration of the committee in determining whether or not they will or will not adopt the rule. That is all before them. The opportunity is afforded them for doing so, but I think it would certainly be going very far for the Speaker to declare, as a question of order, that action taken by the committee in reporting the rule was not valid, by a point made after action is taken. The point of order was not made and could have been made. The attention of the members of the committee was called to it, and they said that they would not make the point of order.

It occurs to me that it would be going very far to hold such action was invalid and that a point of order could afterwards be raised against it. I admit that all of these matters that have been stated here on the floor of the House are proper for the consideration of the House, if Members think that they ought to vote down the rule because it was not reported out except under these circumstances, and that the committee was not justified in doing it, they can now do so.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know what the majority of the House would do about this matter, if it were given the chance. I do not know whether there are any precedents that cover such a case as this, but under all of the circumstances does the gentleman not think, and does not the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] think, without regard to the merits or demerits of the proposition, that by unanimous consent the whole matter should be recommitted to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. TOWNER. I would say to the gentleman that is a matter that is now before the House. If the House takes the view that the gentleman does, and I will not say that it is not justified, the House can certainly vote down the rule.

Mr. CANNON. I wanted if I could to avoid a long discussion and perhaps some feeling about the matter, after the statement of facts which has been made, and thought perhaps that it would better go back to the Committee on Rules by unanimous consent.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] that this is an important matter, and for that reason I made the point of order. But I certainly can not agree with the gentleman that it would be sound practice, safe practice to permit the members of a committee confessedly less than a quorum of that committee being present, to assemble and report any sort of measure to this House, and then to hold as to this report that it could not be challenged, even though the members of the committee voluntarily stated that the report had been made in the absence of a quorum. A practice of that kind would certainly admit of great abuse. I call the attention of the Speaker to a case that arose in this body when Mr. CLARK was Speaker. The gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Houston, was seeking under the alleged authority of his committee to substitute a Senate bill for a House bill. Under the rules it was necessary to have the authority of his committee to make this motion. The gentleman from Tennessee upon inquiry admitted that a quorum of his committee was not present at the time he was directed to move to take up the Senate bill. Upon this admission that a quorum of his committee was not present when action was taken, the Speaker [Mr. CLARK] held that the gentleman from Tennessee lacked the necessary authority to enable him to make the motion for substitution. That case precisely parallels this one.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. In just a moment. Let me give one or two analogies. In most jurisdictions, it is not permitted to inquire into the proceedings before a grand jury, but when it is sufficiently developed in some way what those proceedings have been, and they appear to be illegal, then advantage can be taken of the same. In this particular case I could not make the point of order sooner than I did for the reason that there had been no statement on the part of anyone, competent to speak, that a quorum of the committee was not present when this rule was reported. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] relied upon the presumption that when the question of no quorum is not raised, it is presumed that a quorum is present.

That principle is sound, and so long as the chairman stood on that presumption, no Member could raise and sustain the inquiry whether there was or was not a quorum of the committee present, when action was taken on the rule. I will go further. There is no one in this House who believes more strongly than I do, in preserving the rights and dignity of a committee and the presumptions in favor of a committee. I admit that if a member of a committee is asked whether or not a quorum was present at the time some particular action was taken he can appropriately decline to answer, and can not be made to answer. This is the rule in the case of a trial jury. The jurors are not allowed to be called to impeach their verdict, by giving evidence of irregularities in the jury room. That, however, is not this case. The lack of a quorum was sufficiently developed here by a voluntary and unchallenged statement of a member of the committee. As soon as that statement was made the point of order was raised that lacking a quorum the members present had absolutely no authority to make a report, no more authority than any other group of Members in this House to get together and make a report. This committee when it acted had no more authority in the premises than a casual group of Members not designated as a committee.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman carry out that analogy in the case of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union? That committee having much less than a quorum often agrees to amendments, as the gentleman knows and takes action—it is done frequently in this body—and does the gentleman undertake to say that after that action has been taken, the bill which that committee has passed can be called into question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Oh, no.

Mr. TILSON. On the question of whether or not there was a quorum present. On the gentleman's argument, if it could be shown that no quorum was present at any time in the Committee of the Whole the action could be invalidated.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman is losing sight of the distinction which I sought to make, and which I think I have made. I agree that a committee can stand upon the presumption of legality that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] stood upon, and properly so. Indeed I have gone further, and asserted the proposition that a member of a committee can not be made to develop facts showing that the action of the committee was illegal. As the gentleman has asked me a question, I think that I will ask a question or two.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will ask this question of the gentleman from Ohio. Does the gentleman maintain that when a quorum of his committee is not present, the members present have the right to make a report of any sort to this House?

Mr. FESS. I certainly do, and I go further——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Does the gentleman contend that orderly action can be taken without a quorum?

Mr. FESS. I go further——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. How much further can the gentleman go?

Mr. FESS. I can not sit in a meeting of the Committee on Rules and allow a matter to go out and then come out on the floor of the House and break up the work by making a point of no quorum in the House, a point which I did not make at the time.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I admit that a question of propriety may be involved.

Mr. FESS. If a Member could do that, he could break up almost everything reported in the last six weeks, because we have not had a quorum most of the time.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman is making a confession that I do not think he ought to be very proud of, namely that his committee has been taking action that it ought not to have taken in the absence of a quorum. Mr. Speaker, this is not a partisan question. It is a question of the authority of this body over a subordinate committee. It has been admitted by members of this committee, positively stated by one and not denied by others, that the action taken in the committee was by a membership short of a quorum. It was therefore illegal action. The question before us is whether this House can act on a report that confessedly is not legally, or authoritatively, before it.

That is the whole situation. I have not asked the Committee on Rules any questions. I admit the right, as I said before, and I repeat the statement, of the gentleman from Ohio and of every other member of that committee to decline to answer any questions as to proceedings in the committee, and to stand upon the record, upon the report of the committee, and of the presumption that the committee had the authority to make the report. I agree to all of that fully.

Mr. FESS. But if a gentleman refuses to make the point in the committee and then comes in here and makes it, then——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But the question before us has to do with the rights of this body after the facts as to the proceedings in the committee have been developed. Allow me to give one more illustration. Suppose it appeared from the report of the committee itself, that a quorum was not present when this action was taken, what then? Does the gentleman contend that under such circumstances, a point of order could not be made to the report?

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Does not the same rule obtain in a committee that obtains in the House, that unless a point of order of no quorum is made that the committee may proceed with its deliberations?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The committee could rely upon the presumption that a quorum was present, and proceed with its work but that does not relieve us from the necessity of acting, when it is fully developed, as it has been in this case, that action was taken in the committee in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. But the gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I yield to my friend from Virginia and then later I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. As to the analogy suggested awhile ago between proceedings in the Committee of the Whole House and the proceeding in a standing committee of the House is not the distinction this: That every Member of the House is entitled to participate in the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole and he is not so entitled so far as proceedings in a standing committee of the House is concerned. In other words, a standing committee is apart from the membership of the House, and I submit that if it can do the thing that is contended here is proper to be done it can sacrifice the right of the entire membership of the House except those Members that happen to be present at the time when the particular matter was being considered by the standing committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes that is perfectly true. I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TOWNER. The question I asked the gentleman from Virginia was this: Would a different rule obtain in the committee from that which obtains in the Committee of the Whole or in the House that the presumption is always, and the presumption can not be afterwards changed or repudiated, that the action so taken was when a quorum was present?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not assent to that proposition.

Mr. TOWNER. I am asking the gentleman whether or not he would take that position. We have time and time again in the Committee of the Whole House—yesterday, to-day, every day—when we have any bill under consideration, acted when there was no quorum present, and when, as a matter of fact, the record showed there was no quorum present.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Oh, no. A quorum may not have been present, but the record does not affirmatively show that fact.

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, yes; when there were votes taken when there was not a quorum present.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The record of the votes taken does not show that there was no quorum present. Many Members may not have voted at all. The presumption is that enough Members were present, in addition to those voting, to make a quorum. The mere fact that 40, or 50, or any number less than a quorum are recorded as voting, does not show that they were the only Members present. It is presumed that enough nonvoting Members were present to make a quorum.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman said there should be no presumption——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No I did not say that. I said that the gentleman from Ohio could stand upon the presumption of regularity as to the report.

Mr. TOWNER. The proposition the gentleman now urges is that after a vote has been taken and after action has been reported to the House or in Committee of the Whole, or in any other kind of a committee, that you can then challenge the action that was not challenged when it ought to have been challenged before the committee?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman's question is very easy to answer. The gentleman confuses the distinction between action in a committee, and the rights of Members of this House, when it affirmatively appears that a report has been made when less than a quorum of the members of a committee were present. The gentleman says that I have argued that no presumptions should be indulged in. On the contrary I made it abundantly clear that every presumption of regularity should be allowed. But this is not a question of presumption. The facts stated in our presence directly establish illegality. Take the case of a court that is called on to determine whether an act was passed with, or without a quorum. The court will not entertain testimony to establish whether or not a quorum was present, but if the record shows affirmatively that a quorum was not present, the court will void the law.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am surprised that the gentleman is maintaining his present contention, in view of the abuses that will follow, if his position is maintained, that in spite of the unchallenged statement of the gentleman from New York, this rule may still be regarded as having been legally reported. Two members of a committee, including the chairman could make a report, and even if the two conceded on the floor of the House that they and they alone were present when the report was made, still if the gentleman's position is correct, the report must be conclusively presumed to have been made by a quorum.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do.

Mr. FESS. Think of the abuses that the gentleman's ruling would work if he were in the chair. All you need to do to prevent any legislation is enough of you to stay out of the committee and prevent a quorum.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If enough of us to constitute a majority of the committee stayed out of the committee room we would be a quorum. Surely my friend would not contend that the minority that remained could legally take action requiring a majority?

Mr. FESS. And by so doing you forbid all legislation.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Our action would be the action of the majority. If enough of us to constitute a majority of the committee stayed away, then the minority of the committee, of course, could not make a valid report, or take any other action that required a majority of the committee to be present to give it validity.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman hold that when the committee takes a vote and a point of no quorum has not been raised and the vote has been declared by the Chair carried and that reported to the House that a Member could come in from the committee and make the point in the House that in the committee there had not been a legal quorum?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is not this situation. A member of the committee has stated that a quorum of the committee was not present when this action was taken. That statement has not been denied.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will yield in a minute.

Mr. BEE. Just for a question.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I yield for a question.

Mr. BEE. In answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] as to the difference between the committee and the House sitting as Committee of the Whole, it will be found in this, as the gentleman from Virginia will admit, that the committees are the creation of the House, and the House itself is sovereign. The House has therefore the right to look into the doings of that which it created, and the House being sovereign you can not go back of its action.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. CARTER. Suppose this ruling, as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], should be carried out. Could not then the chairman of the committee alone, when it is carried to its last analysis, report a bill out on his own single vote?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I pointed out that if two members were there, they could report a bill, and it could not be attacked in the House, unless one of these members admitted that a quorum was not present when the report was made. If such a statement or admission was made, the case would be like the one under consideration.

Mr. CARTER. Suppose this situation should develop, that a vote should be taken by the committee with less than a quorum present and the vote declared carried; under the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, if, after the vote was carried, some member of the committee who was present should then make the point of no quorum, after the vote had been declared carried, what situation would the committee then be in?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I leave the gentleman from Ohio to answer that question.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I wish to say that this vote was taken in a hurry. I opposed the whole proposition. I did not intend to make this statement at this point, but I think I must. I made the point that there was no quorum present, and the gentleman said it was too late, and "We are going to put it over, anyway." I would not have made those statements, but the gentleman says I have made a breach of faith in saying on the floor of the House that there was no quorum present.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman from Ohio in the face of the facts just stated, still insists that he will "put it over." I am surprised that he takes such a stand. There is no partisanship in this question of order. I am seeking to maintain the rights of the House and secure orderly procedure. It surprises me to hear the gentleman from Ohio insist that although it now appears in our proceedings that no quorum was present at the time action was taken, in his committee, nevertheless this House is powerless to treat this unauthorized action of a minority as illegal, and reject this report on a point of order. If a conference committee exceeds its authority, short work is made of its report. This action was not in excess of power afforded. The minority was without authority ab initio.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the reference that was made to the Committee of the Whole; I wish to say that if it appeared that the committee acted in the absence of a quorum the question of the legality of its action could be raised. Suppose that it affirmatively and sufficiently appeared as to some action in the Committee of the Whole that a quorum was not present, does anyone suppose that the House would be powerless to take action when confronted with a situation of that sort? Would a report from the Committee of the Whole, that carried on its face the evidence that it was made by less than a quorum—be a legal report? And if not a legal report, would it be in order?

Mr. DOWELL. Suppose in the Committee of the Whole we have no quorum, and the bill is passed upon, does the gentleman think he can raise that question when it gets into the House?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Let me call my friend's attention to this fact: There is a difference between raising a question tending to develop facts, and having it entertained, and raising a question of order after the facts have been developed. I stated before, and I repeat that statement, that I do not approve of the policy of having the members of a committee impeach the action of their committee. I do not think, if they were asked to make a statement, that they should be compelled to testify. I even think that another Member of the House could raise a question of order against thus making a statement tending to impeach the action of their committee.

Mr. DOWELL. Just assuming, now, if the gentleman please, that in the Committee of the Whole——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Suppose we deal with the case before us.

Mr. DOWELL. Let us have the question on the proposition that the gentleman is perfectly familiar with.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am familiar with this situation.

Mr. DOWELL. Suppose in the Committee of the Whole we adopt a bill and recommend it to the House without a quorum being present, and when everyone knows that in the Committee of the Whole there is no quorum. Assuming now that a gentleman would rise in his seat and raise the question of order when the House assembled to consider a bill, that a quorum in the Committee of the Whole was not present, does the gentleman state that the Chair would sustain such a question of order raised at that time? And is not that practically the question you have here now?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is not the question at all. I have stated, Mr. Speaker, in this connection time and time again, that I think that the Chair ought to hold that the members of a committee should not be compelled to impeach their own action. But that is not the situation confronting us. A like situation to the present one arose in this body during the last session. The gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Houston, sought to make a motion to take up a Senate bill. The question of his authority was raised, and in response to questions, he frankly admitted that when his committee acted, a quorum was not present. The Speaker thereupon ruled that the action of a minority, was not the action of the committee, and that the gentleman from Tennessee could not make his motion. Now, so far as the gentleman from Ohio is concerned, he was asked whether there was or was not a quorum present when this rule was acted on. I do not think that the gentleman from Ohio was required to answer the question, and he did not answer it. He stood on his report, and the presumptions of validity supporting it. But later the facts were developed by another member of the committee. They will appear in our proceedings.

The RECORD will show that the committee not only did not have a quorum when it acted, but that the statement was made in the committee that, lacking a quorum the chairman was going to "put it through." The effort is now being made to "put it through," although the unchallenged testimony that will appear in the RECORD shows that there was no legal authority behind the report. Confronted with that situation, the Chair ought to rule that this report is not properly before the House.

Mr. BRIGGS. I want to ask the gentleman if in the Committee of the Whole a point of no quorum was made and it was developed there was no quorum, and that then the committee members who were there should go ahead, if the House would not have a right to inquire into that?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman makes a very pointed illustration. I think that upon the predicated state of facts, the House could take action. Suppose a point of no quorum is made in Committee of the Whole, and the Chairman holds that there is no quorum present?

Mr. BRIGGS. And a roll call develops.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And the Member wants to withdraw his point of order. How often has it been ruled that this can not be done, because the Chairman's ruling of record shows that no quorum is present? If the point of order was allowed to be withdrawn, and a vote was then taken, the RECORD would then show that the committee was transacting business without a quorum.

The SPEAKER. Suppose the Committee of the Whole House had reported a bill, and after some debate some one would rise and say that when the Committee of the Whole House adopted the bill a quorum of the Committee of the Whole House was not present; would that invalidate it?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I would not entertain those statements, if objection was made. I would not hear parties participating in action to impeach their action. That is a sound principle, but that is not the present situation.

The SPEAKER. What is the distinction?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The distinction here is that a lack of quorum has been developed by the unchallenged statements of a member of the committee. These statements are before the Speaker, they will be reported as a part of these proceedings. They are admitted to be true. No issue of fact is presented. The facts are in substance, agreed.

The SPEAKER. Suppose the Committee of the Whole House should admit it and put it on record. Would not that be the same thing?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The difference in that respect would be a difference in the character of the committee. You should draw the distinction, I think, between the Committee of the Whole House and these smaller committees, which stand on a different foundation. The facts are before the House, and before the Speaker. The gentleman has said that he was going "to put it over." Are the rules of the House and the just authority of this House to be disregarded in this fashion?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether or not you will hold a point of order against the point of order, but the point of order of the gentleman from Virginia comes too late, after a discussion of some length before the point was raised.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FIELDS. Would it be in order, while the point of order is pending, to move to recommit the rule to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, may I reply to the point of order submitted by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I want to proceed for a moment only. I shall not take much time, but I shall try to add something.

If in the Committee on Rules a bill was recommended to be reported back to the House without a quorum, say only half a dozen present, and then after it had been approved in the Committee of the Whole and reported to the House, some gentleman should stand up and subsequently say that there was not a quorum in the Committee of the Whole, there is no Member here who would say that that made any difference as to the conclusiveness of the proceedings on the bill.

That is the situation here. Members of the committee have stated that there was not a quorum. If that same statement had been made after the Committee of the Whole had acted upon the bill, nobody would have thought it material. If everyone who was present in the Committee of the Whole had said there was no quorum, it would have made no difference.

Now, this rule is elementary. If the point of no quorum is not made and entered of record at the time, it can not be considered afterwards. That is the rule with reference to the House proceedings. It is the rule everywhere—in court proceedings, in legislative bodies, and in committees.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa if it is not a fact that a member of the Committee on Rules stood here on the floor and stated that the point of no quorum was made, and the chairman of the committee said we were going to "put it over, anyway"?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No. That was not stated in that way, and if it had it would be immaterial. Such matters must be determined by the record and not by statements made afterwards.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can not yield now. It simply shows what we are getting into—the illogical position that would be reached if this point of order was sustained. It would become a question of dispute among Members instead of a determination by rules.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. There is no dispute here. The facts are all admitted.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; they are not admitted. There is a dispute here now. Some gentleman now states that a point of no quorum was raised in the committee. That is disputed.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I made the plain, absolute statement that after the vote was taken I made the point of order that there was no quorum, and they told me it was too late.

Mr. FESS. That statement was not made when I was in the Rules Committee.

Mr. SNELL. You said you had got started and were going to put it through.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, it is due both the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] and myself that I should make the statement that after the resolution was passed by the committee I left the Committee on Rules to come down on the floor of the House to see the floor leader, who had asked that this rule be made in order to make this bill the order to-day and to ask the floor leader that we put it over and allow some other bill to come on. I found that my delay in reaching the floor had given it to the Committee on Ways and Means, which had taken the floor, and it was decided we would put this over until 2.30.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FESS. In just a moment. Then I notified the floor leader, who was anxious that the program be not interrupted. He has been misunderstood, because I did not present this rule to the Committee on Rules until to-day. Having asked the Rules Committee to meet yesterday in order to have it considered in time for to-day, I was asked by the chairman to put it over until to-day. I presented it to the Rules Committee to-day, when one member of the Rules Committee felt that he had not had time to consider it, and said he was opposed to the bill, and while he would not obstruct consideration of it, he made it very clear that he was opposed to it and preferred that we would not go on with it. But the program of the afternoon was completed. I went to the Rules Committee and notified the chairman of the situation.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FESS. I spoke to the chairman of the committee and asked him whether I should present the rule, and he asked whether I had seen Mr. GARRETT. I told him that I had, and that Mr. GARRETT said he would not resist it; that he was not sure that he was in favor of the bill, but that he would not object to its consideration. Then it was that I came to the Speaker and told him that I would call it up. That is the situation exactly.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman says the program for the afternoon was completed when his resolution had not been presented to the Rules Committee. Now, what I want to know is, who completes the program?

Mr. FESS. That committee had acted upon the resolution, which I presented in accordance with the wishes of the floor leader.

Mr. SNELL. You said in the statement in the Rules Committee this morning that the program had been completed to consider this. I raise the question, Who made the program?

Mr. FESS. The whole thing is that the gentleman from New York is opposed to this bill and is attempting to obstruct it now, and I want the ruling of the Chair, and will put the House on record whether we are in favor of this bill or not. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I desired to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Ohio when I rose, but in view of his last statement I hardly know whether it is worth while to make the suggestion or not. But I will. In view of the condition which has developed here—namely, that there were only four members of the Committee on Rules present, which was a fact unknown to me at the time the gentleman came to me on the floor of the House—I want to make a suggestion. The gentleman has been perfectly fair with me, as I have been, of course, with the gentleman, and I do not wish to do anything that would appear to violate in any way the statement which I made to the gentleman that I would not resist the adoption of the rule; but I think it is fair that I should say that I did not know at that time that there was not a quorum present. I believe the gentleman did tell me, perhaps, that no other representative of the minority came in, or else he told me that he had been unable to find any other member of the minority. I believe that was the statement of the gentleman.

Now, in view of the importance of this matter as a precedent, I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio: Does he not think it would be wise for him to ask unanimous consent that it be recommitted to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. FESS. I will say to my friend that I can not ask that at this stage. In order to maintain the integrity of the rules, I want the Speaker to rule on this point of order.

Mr. HARDY of Texas and Mr. BLANTON rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Education I ask for recognition for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] desired recognition earlier, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] after the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] has concluded.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I speak only by way of a suggestion that has occurred to me, which may be worth something or not. The analogy between the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole House and of a committee of the House has been presented, and I see it strikes the mind of the Speaker, as it struck me, with much force. I wish to call the attention of the Speaker to some differences that actually exist. The proceedings of the House and the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole are open and are held under such conditions, rules, and circumstances as to admit of no undue advantage being taken. Every day the House meets in regular stated session for its action. It perpetuates itself and carries itself on in an open session. On the contrary, committees of the House are only called together by action of the chairman, either by written notice or by verbal notice of the time and place of meeting. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that no fraud could be perpetrated upon the Committee of the Whole, because all Members of the House have notice and may be here. On the other hand, a minority of a committee of the House might act designedly, having only the members of that committee present who were favorable to the reporting of a bill. Let me not be understood as raising any question of that kind as an actual fact. I am only talking about the possibilities. If it were admitted that less than a quorum, when that fact was disclosed, could report and put through a bill, and especially if it were admitted that you could not inquire into the proceedings of a committee to show that there was no quorum present, then any kind of combination might be made between the chairman of a committee and any minority members of that committee to report any bill that was before them to the House. In other words, it occurs to me that what has been stated by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] as being the rule, that you could not raise the question of a quorum with reference to the proceedings of a Committee of the Whole House—and I do not think you can—does not apply to the smaller committees established for the preliminary work of the House. On the contrary, it seems to me that any member of a committee of this House, if a bill has been reported in the absence of a quorum, has an absolute right to raise the question of no quorum in that committee and have it gone into.

Mr. BLACK. That may be the only way in which it could be done.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. That might be the only way in which he could protect the House against the unauthorized action of a minority of the committee, and I believe that whenever the question is raised this House has the right to inquire of every member of the committee, was there a quorum present when the bill was reported, and every member of the committee must say. I think that is necessary for the protection, not of minorities, but of majorities against the unauthorized action of a minority, and that it is absolutely necessary for the House to have the right to inquire into the proceedings before a committee when the question of no quorum in the committee is raised in the House.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. According to the contention of the gentlemen on the committee, would it not be possible for the chairman of a committee to act alone, with no other member present, and although every other member of the committee might come on the floor of the House and say he was not present at that meeting of the committee, would not such a ruling prevent the question being raised?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. It would certainly be possible for the chairman and two or three members of a committee to get together and act upon a bill, and then say that the question of a quorum could not be raised. In this way a bill might be reported to this House, not by the committee to which it was reported, but by one or two members of that committee, even though the committee was nearly unanimous against it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair promised to recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I take it that if this rule had been adopted after debate, without the question of a quorum being raised, the question then would have been settled and could not be raised subsequently; but I also take it that there is a time for the membership of the House to raise the question of a quorum or no quorum in a committee with respect to the favorably reporting of any measure. Now, I am just as heartily in favor of this bill as any man in this House. I have supported it since it was first introduced and since hearings began on it, and I expect to vote for it when it comes up in the House, and ordinarily I would support the chairman of my committee on any reasonable proposition; but I do not expect to vote for any rule or for any measure that attempts to disregard the full rights of the membership of the House. I do think that in the interest of orderly procedure and in conformity with the rules, safeguarding at all times the rights of the House membership, that when the question has been raised that there was no quorum in the Rules Committee when this resolution was favorably reported, and when that question has been opportunely raised at the proper time when the matter was first presented to the House for action, and when it has been asserted by a member of the Rules Committee and by its ex-chairman [Mr. GARRETT] that there were only four members present at the time the rule was favorably reported, I take it that where that assertion is undenied on the floor of the House, this House should not consider the rule in the face of that fact. Although I expect to vote for the bill when it is properly before the House, I am opposed to the House taking any matter up at all until it is properly shown that a quorum has sent it here.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I wish first to reply to the point of order made by the gentleman from Alabama, to the effect that the point of order raised by me came too late. The gentleman from Alabama was doubtless thinking of the situation in the House when a section, or a paragraph of a bill is read. If a point of order is not made when the reading is concluded, and you pass on to discussion, it is then too late to raise the question of order. The reason for this rule is that when the paragraph is read, the reading discloses whether or not the matter so read is in order, and any point of order should be then made, but that is not the present situation. This question of authority could not be raised until the fact of the lack of authority was developed. Neither I, nor any other Member could raise the question while the gentleman from Ohio was speaking, for the simple reason that he stood on the record and on the presumption that a quorum had ordered the report. I admit that so long as he relied upon this presumption he could not be required to state whether a quorum was present when the Committee on Rules acted. But the moment that it was developed in the presence of this body by the positive statement of the gentleman from New York that a quorum was not present in the committee when this rule was reported, the point of order was made. I maintain that it was made in due time, and was therefore in order.

Now a word further. The consideration of the bill to which this rule relates has never been entered upon. The point of order as to the authority of the committee to order a report came at the very threshold of the discussion over the rule. I admit that if we had entered upon the discussion of the bill, and debate was in regular progress, then in the interest of orderly procedure no belated question of authority ought to be entertained. I admit that. But again I say, that that is not this situation.

In this connection I wish to ask how the question of no quorum in the committee could ever be raised in the House, if the House can not take cognizance of the facts now in its possession? Suppose eight members constituted a quorum of a committee and at a given meeting only seven members were present, six of one party and one of another. The minority member, we will say, raises the question of no quorum, but the Chair arbitrarily holds that he will not entertain it on the ground that it is made too late, and a report is ordered by the six members over the protest of the single objecting member. The report is then made, and is brought into the House by the chairman. On its face it is regular and the chairman stands on the presumption of regularity. But one of his associates frankly admits that a quorum was not present. This statement is not challenged, but is admitted by the chairman in a word, the facts are agreed. Is it possible that under such circumstances the Speaker of this body is without authority to hold that the report was improperly made and therefore is not properly before the House?

That is no fanciful suggestion. It suggests a situation that may arise at any time, a situation that did arise in this body under Mr. Speaker CLARK, who held under circumstances similar to these that the action of less than a quorum in a committee afforded no authority to bring up a bill in the House. If this proceeding is sustained, then the committees need not concern themselves to maintain quorums, since their action without a quorum, even when the lack of a quorum is admitted, can not be challenged. In the past many committees have been timid about acting without a quorum. Overrule this point of order, and the necessity of maintaining a quorum in a committee when action is proposed to be taken will be entirely removed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, just a word. The committee of the House, under the rules of the House, is presumed to have a quorum present until the point is made that there is no quorum present, and then the rule provides that there shall be a call. The result is to be reported to the House. If there is a quorum present, the roll call shows it, and if there is no quorum present, a call of the House is had or the House adjourns, as the case may be. As far as the House itself is concerned, the Journal of the House decides. You can not go behind the Journal. I do not know whether the committee in this case kept a journal or kept a record. There is nothing in the rules of the House that requires it to keep a record. So far as I know, when the question of no quorum is raised in committee the roll is called, and if no quorum is present no action is had. If there was a quorum present, the matter being questioned, it seems to me if we are going to require the committee to keep a record at all, that the record might be produced and would show the presence or absence of a quorum. I do not know what the ruling of the Chair may be. I do not recollect that this question was ever raised, so far as my recollection goes, in the House. We have not entered upon the consideration of this rule. It is a proposition to enter upon the consideration, and the House is to determine whether we will or not by a yea and nay vote. There should be a rule proposed by a majority of the committee, and I think it is sufficiently shown here that a majority did not order it.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I think it due myself that I should make a short statement. At 10 o'clock this morning I talked from my hotel with the clerk of the Committee on Rules, and was informed that the meeting of the committee had been called for the purpose of hearing certain gentlemen on the Rogers resolution, as the resolution was called. In a word, the meeting was a committee hearing, as we call meetings where it is not intended to take action. I certainly understood that no vote would be taken this morning. Because of another engagement, I did not attend. I am therefore one of the guilty absentees.

I will say this also: I try to attend all the meetings of the Committee on Rules. Occasionally this is not possible. Certainly it is the duty of every member to attend all meetings if he can. It is likewise true that gentlemen should stay in this Chamber whenever the House is in session, but occasionally that is not possible also. I can only apologize for my absence from the hearing this morning and promise to do better in the future. [Laughter.] I believe, however, I have never missed any important vote in the Committee on Rules since I have been a member if I was physically able to attend.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the Chair to the debate in the last Congress which was had in the case to which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] referred, and particularly to the argument of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] at that time. His argument then seemed to me to be correct, as it does still seem to be correct. I refer, of course, to the argument he made in the last Congress. On page 6689 of the RECORD of the last Congress, in the RECORD of May 17, 1918, I read:

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly. A quorum is always presumed to be present if the point is not raised in the body transacting business. Take the case suggested by the gentleman, in which the committee begins business with a quorum, but actually loses it before a bill is reported; but no point of no quorum is raised, ought the statement of a Member in this body to the effect that less than a quorum was present when the bill was actually reported, be admitted and cause the bill to be stricken from our calendar as having been improperly reported? If the question of no quorum can be raised in the present instance, as against the record of the committee, then in the case suggested it could be raised, if it is a question of fact to be decided in this body by oral testimony, as against the presumption to conclusiveness in favor of the regularity of the committee's action, as revealed by the records of the committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is precisely my attitude to-day.

Mr. MAPES. After several interruptions the gentleman repeated the same thought, and definitely stated that the minutes of the committee should be controlling.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes. Now, let us have the minutes of the committee showing that there was a quorum present.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I beg the indulgence of the Chair for just one observation. Repeatedly the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] has said that the records show that there was no quorum present. I beg to take issue with the gentleman. The records show exactly the contrary. There is no record here before this House, except the report of the committee, and that report is presumptively the report of the committee. The proposition here which the gentleman from Virginia is arguing is that he has a right to impeach the records by the statements of men afterwards who have attended or who did not attend the meeting of the committee. Are the statements of gentlemen to be received as impeaching the action of the committee after the action has been taken? Of course, if the matter enters into a question of jurisdiction, that is another proposition, but even that question can not be shown by the statement of men on the floor of the House.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I would not take the floor again, but as I stated heretofore, having raised the question of order I presumed that my remarks would be the ones last heard, in other words that I would close the debate. As soon as I sat down half a dozen gentlemen asked for recognition, and most of them submitted remarks. If I had known that these gentlemen were going to speak, I would have delayed my concluding remarks until they had made their speeches. I wish to say just a word in respect to the citations from the RECORD read by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES]. My contention at that time was precisely what it is to-day, namely that it is inadvisable to entertain statements by members of a committee to impeach committee action, that the House ought to stand on the record, if there is a record to the contrary, of what is proposed to be stated. That is the rule with respect to the verdict of a civil jury. The courts of my State will not allow the verdict to be impeached by putting the members of the jury on the witness stand to show illegal, or improper acts on their part, but when the illegality is developed then the court is bound to take cognizance of it. In the case cited, by the gentleman from Michigan, the fact that the chairman of the committee, not only did not stand on the record, but admitted that there was no quorum present when his committee acted, precluded him from making the motion he sought to make. In that case the chairman required authority of his committee to make a motion, but in response to a question the chairman, Mr. Houston, stated that when action was taken a quorum of his committee was not present, and argued against the propriety of receiving statements of this character, but the statement having been made the Speaker [Mr. CLARK] held that Mr. Houston had put himself out of court, that the meeting at which the authority to empower the chairman, Mr. Houston, to take up a Senate bill was voted was not a committee meeting, and that this being so the chairman could not bring up the Senate bill under the circumstances. Now that is precisely the situation confronting us with respect to this report.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. If the rule as suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] should apply, then all the chairman would have to do would be to have a meeting all by himself, report the bill, and that would be all there would be to it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes; that would be an inevitable consequence of such a ruling, since no absent Member could challenge the record or be heard to impeach the conclusive presumption of the report that the same had been authorized by a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] raises the point of order that the resolution is not in order. It is not a question of the propriety of the action of the committee. It is simply a plain question of the duty of the Chair to decide that it is now out of order. It is well established that a committee can act only with a quorum present, and the Chair is disposed to recognize that there is a difference between the Committee of the Whole House and the ordinary committees of the House. The Chair has served on a great many committees and does not recollect a single instance when any committee on which he served took action without a quorum of the committee being present. On the contrary, his recollection is that the committees were always scrupulous to see to it that a quorum was present.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was the first one to raise the point which has been repeated a number of times during this discussion, and which certainly is impressive, that if you say that a committee can report without a quorum, unless the point is raised in the committee, then a chairman can have a meeting by himself, can report a bill, and it can not be questioned, because there is no one present to raise the point of no quorum, and nobody but himself would know whether there was a quorum present or not. That might lead, naturally, to great abuse, and, of course, of itself it would be a great abuse; but that does not determine the validity of the point of order. It seems to the Chair that this discussion has illustrated the wisdom of the rule that what takes place in a committee is not to be divulged in public.

The Chair has been shown two precedents on this subject, one by Mr. Speaker Reed and one further back. As far as the Chair can see, from a cursory reading, the earlier precedent is directly in point, that such action by a committee without a quorum does not make the report of the committee subject to the point of order on the floor of the House after its consideration has commenced. As Mr. Speaker Reed said, the line must be drawn somewhere when irregularities can not be questioned, and it seems to the Chair, according to these precedents, that after consideration has begun the question of a quorum in the committee can not be raised.

The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I regard this matter as one of very considerable consequence, and without in any way quarreling with the decision of the Chair, I am impressed with the idea that the proprieties of the occasion should induce the House to recommit this matter to the Committee on Rules—not in a spirit of opposition, therefore, to the rule itself, but because of the situation which developed here. If my appeal to the gentleman from Ohio is in vain——

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. FESS. When the gentleman made the suggestion a moment ago that that procedure be taken I was not averse to it, except I wanted the ruling of the Speaker, because I thought that was extremely important for the procedure of the House.

And if my friend will yield to me for a minute to make a statement—I have not consulted with any members of the committee at all—I will be free to state my own convictions on the matter.

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, there has been developed, I think, some unfriendly attitude toward the legislation that has come in in an unexpected manner, and it is somewhat embarrassing to me personally as well as chairman of the Committee on Education that has reported this bill. There is very distinctive opposition to the bill in certain quarters. It has been the result of weeks of propaganda. I am somewhat unhappy over the possible effect of that propaganda. It does not go to the merits of the bill, but simply through dissatisfaction, because certain things could not be done which certain people wanted done. I hesitate to forfeit the opportunity of voting on the measure when it is now before the House. I feel that a great many friends of the measure feel just as the gentleman from Tennessee feels, although I think he has been frank with me that he does not know that he is in favor of the bill, and I honor him for that frankness, because I know that he always takes the position based upon his own judgment, which I have always highly respected, and it is not that that I refer to, as the gentleman knows. If the Committee on Education could be consulted I would consider asking unanimous consent that the matter be referred back to the Committee on Rules. I have understood that the Committee on Rules will assure me that there will be a quorum, and that action will not be deferred for lack of a quorum. I do not want to put myself in the attitude, however, of interfering with the progress of the bill when we have it now before the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield, with the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The intimation the gentleman from Ohio has just suggested that there will be a quorum of the Committee on Rules to consider this rule indicates speedy action upon this legislation.

Mr. FESS. My opinion is that we will have to delay it for some time now, because of the crowded program for to-morrow and the next day and probably next week that would forfeit speedy action upon it if it goes back to the Committee on Rules now.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, does the gentleman wish to proceed further?

Mr. FESS. Not now.

Mr. GARRETT. Several gentlemen have come in, perhaps, during this discussion who have not heard all the facts. A peculiar state of facts developed in connection with this proposition. I myself was advised of the meeting of the Committee on Rules when I reached my office about 10.30 this morning. I immediately went from my office to the committee. When I entered the committee room a public hearing was in progress, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] was addressing the committee upon an investigating resolution. I first privately inquired of the acting chairman whether there would be a vote upon any proposition, and he informed me, as he stated upon the floor of the House, that the meeting was for the purpose of hearing the gentleman from Massachusetts and others upon a resolution proposing an investigation. I thereupon interrupted the gentleman from Massachusetts, explaining that I had an engagement, apologized to him, stated publicly to the committee that I had an engagement, and I understood that nothing in the way of business was to come up, so I would ask to be excused, and was excused. Now, it developed that subsequently business did come up. I am not complaining of that. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] came to me after the House had convened and explained the situation, and said that the matter was not to be called up if I were disposed to make any point against it. Nothing was said about whether a quorum was present and I did not know anything to that effect.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. For a question.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, for a suggestion. I have been busy with other matters and have not been in the House during the discussion this afternoon. This occurs to me: No one, I assume, has any objection to the consideration of this bill. There is claimed to be a question as to the regularity of the proceedings relative to the rule. That being the case, has anyone any objection to proceeding with the consideration of the measure without regard to the rule? The measure can be considered by unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. WALSH. I will state to the gentleman that I object to the consideration of the bill, with a rule or without it.

Mr. MONDELL. That being the case, of course, settles the matter. I had hoped there would be no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield? What is the objection to proceeding with the consideration of the bill under the rule? That has been ascertained to be regular and conformable to established procedure. What is the objection to proceeding with it?

Mr. MONDELL. I certainly have no objection to proceeding under the rule.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It has been decided that the point of order that it was reported without a quorum is not well taken. That has been held and determined.

Mr. MONDELL. My understanding is the Chair has held that the report of the Committee on Rules is regular.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is what I say. It has been held to be in conformity with the regular proceedings, so why not proceed?

Mr. MONDELL. I should like to proceed rather than discuss other matters. I am anxious to have the bill considered.

Mr. GARRETT. Has the gentleman concluded the statement he was about to make? Is he going to ask unanimous consent? Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the matter to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it is in order to recommit; that is the Chair's impression at first blush. The Chair's recollection is that he made that motion himself once, and it was held it was not in order.

Mr. GARRETT. My recollection is that the Chair is correct about that, namely, that it is not in order to recommit to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. FESS. I move the previous question on the adoption of the rule.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point that there is no quorum present, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. That does not apply against a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on agreeing to the rule.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 1, noes 95.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the rule.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 52.

Mr. FESS. I demand tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum. The Chair thinks no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members. Those in favor of agreeing to the rule will, as their names are called, vote "yea," and those opposed will vote "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 134, nays 115, answered "present" 7, not voting 173, as follows:

YEAS—134.

Alexander	Evans, Mont.	Kreider	Rose
Almon	Fess	Lampert	Rouse
Anderson	Freeman	Layton	Rubey
Andrews, Nebr.	French	Lea, Calif.	Sanders, Ind.
Ashbrook	Garland	Linthicum	Schall
Ayres	Glynn	Lonergan	Sinclair
Baer	Graham, Ill.	Luhring	Sinnott
Bankhead	Green, Iowa	McFadden	Smith, Idaho
Barbour	Hadley	McKeown	Stedman
Benham	Hardy, Colo.	McLaughlin, Mich.	Stiness
Boies	Haskell	Madden	Strong, Pa.
Brinson	Haugen	Mapes	Summers, Wash.
Brooks, Ill.	Hawley	Mays	Sweet
Browne	Hayden	Michener	Temple
Browning	Hays	Miller	Thompson
Burroughs	Hernandez	Monahan, Wis.	Tilson
Butler	Hickey	Mondell	Timberlake
Campbell, Kans.	Hicks	Moore, Ohio	Towner
Caraway	Hill	Morgan	Vestal
Carss	Hoch	Morin	Voigt
Christopherson	Huddleston	Nelson, Wis.	Volstead
Cooper	Hudspeth	Newton, Minn.	Walters
Crago	Johnson, Ky.	Newton, Mo.	Wason
Curry, Calif.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nolan	Watson, Pa.
Dallinger	Johnson, Wash.	Ogden	Webster
Darrow	Juul	Parrish	Wheeler
Davis, Minn.	Kearns	Radcliffe	White, Kans.
Denison	Keller	Raker	White, Me.
Dickinson, Iowa	Kelly, Pa.	Ramseyer	Williams
Dowell	Kendall	Randall, Calif.	Yates
Dunbar	Kiess	Reed, W. Va.	Young, N. Dak.
Edmonds	King	Rhodes	Zihlman
Elliott	Kinkaid	Ricketts
Elston	Kraus	Riddick

NAYS—115.

Bee	Caldwell	Cramton	Flood
Benson	Campbell, Pa.	Crisp	Focht
Black	Candler	Cullen	Gard
Bland, Mo.	Cannon	Dale	Garner
Bland, Va.	Cantrill	Davis, Tenn.	Garrett
Blanton	Carew	Dickinson, Mo.	Good
Booher	Carter	Dominick	Greene, Mass.
Box	Clark, Fla.	Drane	Griest
Briggs	Clark, Mo.	Evans, Nebr.	Hardy, Tex.
Buchanan	Cleary	Evans, Nev.	Harrison
Byrnes, S. C.	Coady	Ferris	Hastings
Byrns, Tenn.	Connally	Fisher	Heflin

Hersman	McDuffie	Rainey, J. W.	Tillman
Holland	McLane	Rayburn	Tincher
Howard	MacGregor	Reber	Treadway
Hulings	Mansfield	Riordan	Vinson
Hull, Tenn.	Martin	Robinson, N. C.	Walsh
Humphreys	Minahan, N. J.	Rogers	Watkins
Husted	Moore, Va.	Romjue	Watson, Va.
Igoe	Nelson, Mo.	Saunders, Va.	Weaver
Jacoway	O'Connell	Sears	Welling
Johnson, Miss.	Oldfield	Smith, Mich.	Welty
Jones, Pa.	Oliver	Smithwick	Whaley
Jones, Tex.	Overstreet	Snell	Wilson, La.
Kincheloe	Padgett	Steagall	Wilson, Pa.
Lanham	Park	Stevenson	Woods, Va.
Lankford	Pell	Sumners, Tex.	Woodyard
Lazaro	Pou	Taylor, Colo.	Young, Tex.
Lufkin	Quin	Thomas

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—7.

Bacharach	Graham, Pa.	Longworth	Neely
Fields	Knutson	Major

NOT VOTING—173.

Ackerman	Fitzgerald	McArthur	Rowe
Andrews, Md.	Fordney	McClintic	Rucker
Anthony	Foster	McCulloch	Sabath
Aswell	Frear	McGlennon	Sanders, La.
Babka	Fuller, Ill.	McKenzie	Sanders, N. Y.
Barkley	Fuller, Mass.	McKiniry	Sanford
Begg	Gallagher	McKinley	Scott
Bell	Gallivan	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Scully
Blackmon	Gandy	McPherson	Sells
Bland, Ind.	Ganly	MacCrate	Sherwood
Bowers	Godwin, N. C.	Magee	Shreve
Brand	Goldfogle	Maher	Siegel
Britten	Goodall	Mann	Sims
Brooks, Pa.	Goodwin, Ark.	Mason	Sisson
Brumbaugh	Goodykoontz	Mead	Slemp
Burdick	Gould	Merritt	Small
Burke	Greene, Vt.	Montague	Smith, Ill.
Casey	Griffin	Moon	Smith, N. Y.
Chindblom	Hamill	Mooney	Snyder
Classon	Hamilton	Moore, Pa.	Steele
Cole	Hersey	Moores, Ind.	Steenerson
Collier	Houghton	Mott	Stephens, Miss.
Copley	Hull, Iowa	Mudd	Stephens, Ohio
Costello	Hutchinson	Murphy	Strong, Kans.
Crowther	Ireland	Nicholls, S. C.	Sullivan
Currie, Mich.	James	Nichols, Mich.	Swope
Davey	Jefferis	O'Connor	Taylor, Ark.
Dempsey	Johnston, N. Y.	Olney	Taylor, Tenn.
Dent	Kahn	Osborne	Tinkham
Dewalt	Kelley, Mich.	Paige	Upshaw
Donovan	Kennedy, Iowa	Parker	Vaile
Dooling	Kennedy, R. I.	Peters	Vare
Doremus	Kettner	Phelan	Venable
Doughton	Kitchin	Platt	Ward
Dunn	Kleczka	Porter	Webb
Dupré	LaGuardia	Purnell	Wilson, Ill.
Dyer	Langley	Rainey, H. T.	Wingo
Eagan	Larsen	Ramsey	Winslow
Eagle	Lee, Ga.	Randall, Wis.	Wise
Echols	Lehlbach	Reavis	Wood, Ind.
Ellsworth	Lesher	Reed, N. Y.	Wright
Emerson	Little	Robsion, Ky.
Esch	Luce	Rodenberg
Fairfield	McAndrews	Rowan

So the resolution embodying the rule was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. KNUTSON with Mr. BELL.

Mr. BOWERS with Mr. NEELY.

Mr. MCARTHUR with Mr. SISSON.

Mr. MCPHERSON with Mr. MAJOR.

Mr. SHREVE with Mr. MCANDREWS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio with Mr. BRAND.

Mr. HULL of Iowa with Mr. FIELDS.

Mr. KAHN with Mr. DENT.

Mr. JAMES with Mr. ASWELL.

Mr. MAGEE with Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas.

Mr. PORTER with Mr. GANLY.

Mr. MANN with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania with Mr. DONOVAN.

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island with Mr. KITCHIN.

Mr. KLECZKA with Mr. KETTNER.

Mr. ANDREWS of Maryland with Mr. WISE.

Mr. PURNELL with Mr. GANDY.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana with Mr. DEWALT.

Mr. MUDD with Mr. DAVEY.

Mr. CROWTHER with Mr. SMITH of New York.

Mr. ANTHONY with Mr. WINGO.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana with Mr. WEBB.

Mr. FOSTER with Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois with Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY.

Mr. MURPHY with Mr. COLLIER.

Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan with Mr. CASEY.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio with Mr. PHELAN.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania with Mr. VENABLE.

Mr. OSBORNE with Mr. BRUMBAUGH.

Mr. PAIGE with Mr. BLACKMON.

Mr. TINKHAM with Mr. OLNEY.

Mr. PARKER with Mr. BARKLEY.

Mr. FREAR with Mr. SABATH.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois with Mr. RUCKER.

Mr. VARE with Mr. O'CONNOR.

Mr. WARD with Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina.

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts with Mr. ROWAN.

Mr. REAVIS with Mr. GALLAGHER.

Mr. REED of New York with Mr. FITZGERALD.

Mr. PETERS with Mr. BABKA.

Mr. BURKE with Mr. UPSHAW.

Mr. DEMPSEY with Mr. SMALL.

Mr. MCKENZIE with Mr. HAMILL.

Mr. CHINDBLOOM with Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas.

Mr. DUNN with Mr. SIMS.

Mr. COLE with Mr. SULLIVAN.

Mr. COPLEY with Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ with Mr. MEAD.

Mr. DYER with Mr. SHERWOOD.

Mr. FAIRFIELD with Mr. SCULLY.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont with Mr. MAHER.

Mr. HAMILTON with Mr. MCKINIRY.

Mr. HOUGHTON with Mr. MCGLENNON.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky with Mr. EAGLE.

Mr. MCKINLEY with Mr. GRIFFIN.

Mr. RODENBERG with Mr. EAGAN.

Mr. HUTCHINSON with Mr. MCCLINTIC.

Mr. IRELAND with Mr. LESHER.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan with Mr. LEE of Georgia.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois with Mr. MOONEY.

Mr. WINSLOW with Mr. MOON.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana with Mr. MONTAGUE.

Mr. COSTELLO with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. ROWE with Mr. DUPRÉ.

Mr. SANFORD with Mr. DOUGHTON.

Mr. RAMSEY with Mr. GALLIVAN.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa with Mr. LARSEN.

Mr. PLATT with Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina.

Mr. SCOTT with Mr. DOREMUS.

Mr. SELLS with Mr. DOOLING.

Mr. ACKERMAN with Mr. WRIGHT.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my affirmative vote and vote "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. KNUTSON, and he answered "Present."

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye," but I am paired with the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. HULL, and I therefore desire to withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. FIELDS, and he answered "Present."

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye," but I am paired with the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. BOWERS. I desire to withdraw my vote and be recorded as present.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. NEELY, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeper will open the doors. Under the rule the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] in the chair.

FOOD-CONTROL BILL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may file a conference report on the bill (H. R. 8624) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved August 10, 1917, up to 12 o'clock to-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD as late as 12 o'clock to-night the conference report on the food-control bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement to the House.

The SPEAKER. That will not be in order now, as the Chair thinks. The House, under the rule, automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4438) to provide for industrial vocational rehabilitation, with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] in the chair.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will it be necessary to raise the question of the control of the time in the committee before we go into committee?

The SPEAKER. The rule, the Chair understands, provides for it.

Mr. FESS. The rule does not name any particular person in control of the time.

The SPEAKER. Then the House rules provide that one-half of the time be controlled by those favoring the bill and one-half by those opposed to the bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4438, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4438, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4438) to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I object. I have not had time to read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and who are without sufficient means to provide for their own rehabilitation and their return to civil employment, there is hereby appropriated for the use of the States, subject to the provisions of this act, for the purpose of cooperating with them in the maintenance of vocational rehabilitation of such disabled persons, and in returning vocationally rehabilitated persons to civil employment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the sum of $500,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the sum of $750,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and annually thereafter the sum of $1,000,000. Said sums shall be allotted to the States in the proportion which their population bears to the total population in the United States, not including Territories, outlying possessions, and the District of Columbia, according to the last preceding United States census: Provided, That the allotment of funds to any State shall not be less than a minimum of $5,000 for any fiscal year. And there is hereby appropriated the following sums, or so much thereof as may be needed, which shall be used for the purpose of providing the minimum allotment to the States provided for in this section, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the sum of $66,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the sum of $46,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and annually thereafter the sum of $34,000.

All moneys expended under the provisions of this act from appropriations provided by section 1 shall be upon the condition (1) that for each dollar of Federal money expended there shall be expended in the State under the supervision and control of the State board at least an equal amount for the same purpose: Provided, That no portion of the appropriation made by this act shall be used by any institution for handicapped persons except for the special training of such individuals entitled to the benefits of this act as shall be determined by the Federal board; (2) that the State board shall annually submit to the Federal board for approval plans showing (a) the kinds of vocational rehabilitation and schemes of placement for which it is proposed the appropriation shall be used; (b) the plan of administration and supervision; (c) courses of study; (d) methods of instruction; (e) qualification of teachers, supervisors, directors, and other necessary administrative officers or employees; (f) plans for the training of teachers, supervisors, and directors; (3) that the State board shall make an annual report to the Federal board on or before September 1 of each year on the work done in the State and on the receipts and expenditures of money under the provisions of this act; (4) that no portion of any moneys appropriated by this act for the benefit of the States shall be applied, directly or indirectly, to the purchase, preservation, erection, or repair of any building or buildings or equipment, or for the purchase or rental of any lands; (5) that all courses for vocational rehabilitation given under the supervision and control of the State board and all courses for vocational rehabilitation maintained shall be available, under such rules and regulations as the Federal board shall prescribe, to any civil employee of the United States disabled while in the performance of his duty.

SEC. 2. That in order to secure the benefits of the appropriations provided by section 1 any State shall, through the legislative authority thereof, (1) accept the provisions of this act; (2) empower and direct the board designated or created as the State board for vocational education to cooperate in the administration of the provisions of the vocational education act approved February 23, 1917, to cooperate as herein provided with the Federal Board for Vocational Education in the administration of the provisions of this act; (3) in those States where a State workmen's compensation board, or other State board, department, or agency exists, charged with the administration of the State workmen's compensation or liability laws, the legislature shall provide that a plan of cooperation be formulated between such State board, department, or agency, and the State board charged with the administration of this act, such plan to be effective when approved by the governor of the State; (4) provide for the supervision and support of the course of vocational rehabilitation to be provided by the State board in carrying out the provisions of this act; (5) appoint as custodian for said appropriations its State treasurer, who shall receive and provide for the proper custody and disbursement of all money paid to the State from said appropriations. In any State the legislature of which does not meet in 1919 or 1920, if the governor of that State shall accept the provision of this act, such State shall be entitled to the benefits of this act until the legislature of such State meets in due course and has been in session 60 days.

SEC. 3. That the Federal Board for Vocational Education shall have power to cooperate with State boards in carrying out the purposes and provisions of this act, and is hereby authorized to make and establish such rules and regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry into effect the provisions of this act; to provide for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons and their return to civil employment and to cooperate, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, with such public and private agencies as it may deem advisable. It shall be the duty of said board (1) to examine plans submitted by the State boards and approve the same if believed to be feasible and found to be in conformity with the provisions and purposes of this act; (2) to ascertain annually whether the several States are using or are prepared to use the money received by them in accordance with the provisions of this act; (3) to certify on or before the 1st day of January of each year to the Secretary of the Treasury each State which has accepted the provisions of this act and complied therewith, together with the amount which each State is entitled to receive under the provisions of this act; (4) to deduct from the next succeeding allotment to any State whenever any portion of the fund annually allotted has not been expended for the purpose provided for in this act a sum equal to such unexpended portion; (5) to withhold the allotment of moneys to any State whenever it shall be determined that moneys allotted are not being expended for the purposes and conditions of this act; (6) to require the replacement by withholding subsequent allotments of any portion of the moneys received by the custodian of any State under this act that by any action or contingency is diminished or lost: Provided, That if any allotment is withheld from any State, the State board of such State may appeal to the Congress of the United States, and if the Congress shall not direct such sum to be paid, it shall be covered into the Treasury.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the certification of the Federal board as provided in this act, shall pay quarterly to the custodian of each State appointed as herein provided the moneys to which it is entitled under the provisions of this act. The money so received by the custodian for any State shall be paid out on the requisition of the State board as reimbursement for services already rendered or expenditures already incurred and approved by said State board. The Federal Board for Vocational Education shall make an annual report to the Congress, on or before December 1, on the administration of this act, and shall include in such report the reports made by the State boards on the administration of this act by each State and the expenditure of the money allotted to each State.

SEC. 5. That there is hereby appropriated to the Federal Board for Vocational Education the sum of $200,000 annually for the purpose of making studies, investigations, and reports regarding the vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons and their placements in suitable or gainful occupations, and for the administrative expenses of said board incident to performing the duties imposed by this act, including salaries of such assistants, experts, clerks, and other employees, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere as the board may deem necessary, actual traveling and other necessary expenses incurred by the members of the board and by its employees, under its orders, including attendance at meetings of educational associations and other organizations, rent and equipment of offices in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, purchase of books of reference, law books, and periodicals, stationery, typewriters and exchange thereof, miscellaneous supplies, postage on foreign mail, printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office, and all other necessary expenses.

SEC. 6. That the Federal Board for Vocational Education is hereby authorized and empowered to receive such gifts and donations from either public or private sources as may be offered unconditionally. All moneys received as gifts or donations shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and shall constitute a permanent fund, to be called the "Special fund for vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons," to be used, under the direction of the said board, to defray the expenses of providing and maintaining courses of vocational rehabilitation in special cases, including the payment of necessary expenses of persons undergoing training. A full report of all gifts and donations offered and accepted, together with the names of the donors and the respective amounts contributed by each, and all disbursements therefrom shall be submitted annually to Congress by said board.

With committee amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to suggest the advisability in the main of agreeing as to who shall have charge of the time for and in opposition to the bill. The rule provides that those in opposition shall have one hour and fifteen minutes and those in favor of the bill shall have one hour and fifteen minutes, and ordinarily some member of the minority would have charge of the opposition time. The Chair understands that all the members of the commitee are in favor of this bill. The Chair hopes, in order to expedite the consideration of the bill, some arrangement will be entered into as to who shall have charge of the opposition time. That will relieve the Chair.

Mr. FESS. The Rules Committee thought it well not to name any particular person opposed to the bill or to provide for time to be controlled by those opposing, because there is no one that I know of in opposition to the bill. The rule therefore was left open, and it was thought that the Member whom the Chair recognized in opposition to the bill would have control of the time on that side.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be quite agreeable to the Chair, but the Chair thought it would be more expeditious to have it done in the other way.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, after I make a preliminary statement, then the Chair may recognize whomsoever he desires in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. In view of the fact that the gentleman from Ohio could not be recognized for more than an hour, if no one opposing the bill claims the right to be recognized, I ask unanimous consent that half the time be controlled by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] and the other half by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS].

Mr. WALSH. Well, I am opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. It is not intended, is it, that the gentleman from Ohio is to occupy an hour, but that the Chair will recognize Members pro and con, five minutes at a time?

The CHAIRMAN. No; this is general debate. The gentleman from Ohio has one hour and a quarter at his disposal, and the gentleman in control of the opposition will have an hour and a quarter.

Mr. RAKER. That is satisfactory.

Mr. WALSH. It is not very satisfactory, but it is provided in the rule.

Mr. FESS. Gentlemen of the committee, this legislation is designed to complete a program of legislation that has had some recognition in this body for the last few years. This particular bill, looking toward the reeducation, retraining, or rehabilitation of those crippled in industrial pursuits, is not purely a Federal proposition, except as it is done in cooperation with the various States under or with the approval of the Federal Board of Education.

The value of this sort of work is hardly questioned by those who have made a sympathetic study of the problem. We very readily took to the rehabilitation of the soldiers. There was very little opposition to that. At the same time there are more crippled in industry every year, if all injured are included, than there were crippled in the military service. It is true that these cripples are not all what you would call total disabilities. A very careful investigation was made by the Federal Government, and the report is to the effect that there are 22,500 total disabilities resulting from such injuries every year. If we take the total number who suffer both total and slight disability it will approach very close to 300,000 per year. It is stated that a man's life in activity is something like 20 years. So, taking the average of the age of those crippled, it would seem that it occurs along between 20 and 30, and if you could have 20 years of activity you will immediately see what a loss this total number of disabled people are to the country, and what an advantage it would be if the Government could take that same group and through their rehabilitation put them on their feet as self-supporting. In this case it would have an economic value as well as an altruistic.

I do not think it is necessary for me to enter upon a discussion of the value of this sort of legislation. That was all thrashed out in the rehabilitation legislation of the last Congress. The only question here is whether it is worth while for the Government to appropriate, out of the Federal Treasury, a certain fund to be administered in cooperation with the various States for this work. Personally I am convinced that it is a very useful function. I recognize the viewpoint of those opposing it.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Will it disturb the continuity of the gentleman's argument?

Mr. FESS. It will not.

Mr. WALSH. Did the committee take into consideration the question of the constitutional right of Congress to appropriate money for this purpose? And under what clause of the Constitution would you appropriate it?

Mr. FESS. Our committee did not go over that at all in the consideration of the measure, the same question having been thrashed out back in the eighties, in the discussion of the famous Blair educational bill; and then later, in 1917, when we passed the Smith-Hughes Act, the matter was thoroughly thrashed out in the committee and also on the floor of the House. So I have no doubt whatever as to the constitutional sanction for this legislation.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend.

Mr. BEE. Is there not a provision in the Constitution of the United States for the diffusion of knowledge? And would not the diffusion of knowledge cover the Smith-Hughes bill and the Blair educational bill, as contradistinguished from this bill, which has no constitutional support whatever? I just ask that of the gentleman as a student of history.

Mr. FESS. I am not at all disturbed about the constitutionality of the application of the fund on matters of education. It seems to me that is entirely cleared up.

Mr. BEE. I agree with the gentleman as to matters of education, absolutely.

Mr. FESS. I think my friend means that this is questionable as to whether it is education or not?

Mr. BEE. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Education is not simply a matter of reading and writing. It is not confined to intellectual acumen. Education has to do with the training of the body as well as of the mind. This is rehabilitation of the human frame that has been injured to the point of uselessness in its efforts for service.

Mr. BEE. In support of the constitutional educational bill, is not the language "diffusion of knowledge" confined to educational matters in the accepted sense of the term?

Mr. FESS. I do not know of anything being said about the diffusion of knowledge in the Constitution of the United States, as my friend the distinguished judge from Virginia [Mr. WATSON], well recognizes. There is a general-welfare clause that probably would bring it within the range.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DENISON. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he recognizes at all any difference between the principle or the duty of the Federal Government to contribute money or to appropriate money to rehabilitate soldiers who are disabled in the defense of the country, and the rehabilitation of those who are injured, perhaps by their own carelessness, by accident in private industry?

Mr. FESS. There is a broad difference. In the first place, the disabled soldier is purely a Federal function with which the State has nothing to do, while this is not only a Federal function but a State function, and the Federal Government does not do anything except to contribute to the fund administered by the State with the approval of the Federal authority that has charge of the fund.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a fact that the various educational institutions of to-day give credit for various kinds of athletic training in the regular course of the institution?

Mr. FESS. A great many do.

Mr. BLANTON. In other words, they take into account the training of the physical body as well as the mental?

Mr. FESS. My friend is correct in that statement. Education to-day goes much more largely into the training of the body than in years past. We are coming to recognize that value as we did not before.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman further yield?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. DENISON. Can the gentleman inform the House as to what States have rehabilitation laws?

Mr. FESS. Thirty-eight States have compensation departments, in some of which they may have some form of rehabilitation. Rehabilitation, as I have said already, appears as a new field of compensation, not yet entered upon. However, laws are provided in 38 States looking to recompense rather than to replacing the injury by training. That has not been carried on as largely as, of course, it will be from now on. This is a stimulation for that purpose.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to inquire of the chairman of this committee whether this bill was heard by the Committee on Education or by the joint Committee on Education and Labor. I sent to the committee for the hearings, and was given a copy of the hearings on Senate bill 4921, of the Sixty-fifth Congress. Has there been any hearings on the bill now before us?

Mr. FESS. This bill is very similar to the bill of the last session that was introduced by my colleague on the committee, Mr. BANKHEAD. Upon that bill we had full hearings by the Senate and House committees. This bill is, with a few minor changes, the bill upon which the hearings were had.

Mr. TREADWAY. The hearings are practically on this bill?

Mr. FESS. The hearings are applicable to this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Smith-Hughes bill already provides for vocational education?

Mr. FESS. Applied to pupils in schools.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is the purpose of this bill, or one of the purposes, to provide compensation for disabled or injured persons?

Mr. FESS. Oh, no.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Suppose he did not have money enough to go to school?

Mr. FESS. He would be unfortunate, that is all. Would my friend from Michigan go to that extent, to vote sufficient money to enable the person to educate himself?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No.

Mr. FESS. I do not know to what limit the charge on the Treasury might be if you started on that policy.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is why I made the inquiry.

Mr. FESS. We are trying to protect the Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This is, in fact, for a beneficial purpose as well as a financial purpose. Would it not be well some time to include people who were born disabled to give them an education and afford relief?

Mr. FESS. The States are caring for those unfortunate people.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The States have compensation laws that take care of those injured in industries, too, do they not?

Mr. FESS. Paying a man who is injured is one thing, and training him so that he does not need the pay is another thing. That is what we are trying to do here. My friend will immediately recognize that we could not do anything better, if it is within our power, than to take the cripple who is useless, who is on the junk heap, with no hope, and by some training put him on his feet, make him a self-supporting man, respectable, who can look the world in the face and ask a favor of no man.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I agree with that proposition.

Mr. FESS. I think I ought to state that there is a misconception in the minds of some Members in that many think we are giving money to people who are going to train themselves. The Federal board does that under the rehabilitation act. We do not do that here. All we do is to stimulate the States to train, by giving to the States a certain proportion of money, if the State will raise the same amount, to be applied to the payment of teachers, not to the equipment of a school, but to the payment of teachers and the training of teachers to do the work, and that is all.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the State or the Federal board prescribe the training that shall be given?

Mr. FESS. It must be done upon their approval.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The approval of the Federal board or the State board?

Mr. FESS. Upon the approval of the Federal board.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. What I would like to understand is whether or not there will be any provision at all for the disabled man who is not able, unless he can live without food and clothes, to get this vocational training.

Mr. FESS. We make no provision at all for the payment of money to anyone.

Mr. LAYTON. That man or woman who is able to maintain himself or herself in the meantime can take advantage of the vocational training.

Mr. FESS. That is one of the inequalities of life that you can not correct by law.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. What important advantage does the gentleman expect to gain through Federal financial contribution over what he would get if he left the entire expense to be borne by the State?

Mr. FESS. Our experience in the land-grant college work has been that the dollar originally paid, to be matched by the State, has been matched many times beyond itself by the States. In other words, when we first began it we gave dollar for dollar, and now the States are contributing something like ten dollars to the one that the Federal Government contributes. The same thing is true of the Smith-Hughes Act. We started out dollar for dollar, and I venture to say it will not be 20 years until the States will give in their contribution far beyond the amount given by the Federal Government, and the same thing ought to be done here.

Mr. HUSTED. Is it the gentleman's idea that you can encourage the States to enter into this work by a contribution of a dollar which eventually comes out of their own pocketbooks, anyway?

Mr. FESS. Precisely so. If the Government will give a dollar to be matched by another dollar, ultimately the stimulation will bring more than the one dollar.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The same thing is true of the highways.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The same result is obtained with respect to the improvement of highways.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] just remarked that. So far as I know, there is no Federal stimulation that has not sufficiently stimulated the States to make it vastly greater than was originally intended when the law was enacted.

Let me, if gentlemen please, analyze the bill so that I may not consume too much time. The first section of the bill shows the breadth of it.

It was first thought that it ought to be limited to industry. Then it was thought that if rehabilitation of persons in industry was left, why not extend it, why not let it include the farm, commercial work, or what not, so we amended it in the committee and said, "Rehabilitation of persons disabled in industrial pursuits, including agriculture, trade, commerce, manufacturing, mining, transportation, and all the mechanic arts." There was some objection to the qualification or the limitation where we would not take in persons who were capable financially of doing it themselves. That provision is written in the law. I know there is considerable objection to that provision, although there was a reason for placing it there.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I do.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Other than this provision to which the gentleman has just referred, who is excluded? I see it covers agriculture and so on.

Mr. FESS. Our purpose was not to exclude anyone.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is what I wanted to know, if it is to include all who are injured?

Mr. FESS. If the injured person was wealthy——

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I understand, but other than that?

Mr. FESS. He would be, under the law, excluded, but it was not meant to exclude any injured persons.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. GARNER. I notice the gentleman has not included stock raisers.

Mr. FESS. Would not that be included under farm, agriculture?

Mr. GARNER. No; many stock raisers are not farmers.

Mr. FESS. I think my friend is wrong about it.

Mr. GARNER. No; there are many stock raisers who are not farmers.

A MEMBER. Would it come under the class of agriculture?

Mr. GARNER. I doubt it.

Mr. FESS. I think it is included; it was meant to be.

Mr. LEA of California. I would like to know if the gentleman would not consider a professional person to be excluded from the benefits of this bill?

Mr. FESS. I am rather inclined to think that a professional man is excluded.

Mr. LEA of California. Such as a school-teacher?

Mr. FESS. This is intended to be vocational habilitation. There was some discussion about that. If a professional man is engaged in any of these industries he would be included. We do not make the appropriation, but simply authorize a minimum of $500,000 and a maximum of $1,000,000 to be reached within three years. Then, we make the provision that no State shall receive less than $5,000, because if it is less than that it will be so spread out it will not amount to anything at all. We make a special appropriation, or authorize it, the first year for $66,000, the next $46,000, and then thereafter continuously every year $34,000 to care for this minimum.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. If my friend will just wait a moment. In order to take care of States like Arizona, which would have gotten $1,000 on the general estimate under this law if we did not put that $5,000 provision in. The Government makes up $4,000. In reference to Colorado, the Government would have to make up $1,000 or about that. Delaware, the Government would have to make up $4,000; Florida, the Government would have to make up $1,250; Idaho, $3,500; and so on. This will sum up just about $66,000 the first year.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to ask the gentleman what interpretation the committee gave in lines 7 and 8, page 1, to the words "who are without sufficient means to provide for their own rehabilitation." Now, suppose a man had enough to take care of himself and the ordinary living of his family, but not enough so that he might go to school. He would not be excluded?

Mr. FESS. That would have to be left to the board to determine. There has been a serious and considerable contention that that ought to come out, but I have not given my assent to taking it out, and the House will have to do as it pleases about that on the basis that we do not care to enter upon the rehabilitation of somebody who can easily pay for it themselves.

Mr. RAKER. I think the question of discretion should be used. The intention does not confine it to paupers.

Mr. FESS. Oh, no.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. BRIGGS. I notice the bill originally carried the expression "industry or otherwise," and the committee strikes that out and substitutes specifically certain trades, agriculture, and other branches of employment.

Was it the intention of the committee that all those who were disabled in industries or otherwise should have the benefit of this bill? The reason I ask is that only within the last day or two there was called to my attention the case of a constituent of mine who wanted to know whether he could take advantage of the vocational education provided now by the Government for the soldiers; that he was a druggist and had become paralyzed, and wanted to know if he could not get the benefit of an instruction that would fit him for earning a living in some capacity in his line. I do not believe that under this bill as it is drawn it will be possible for him to do so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It says in specific terms that it allows the training of those engaged in trade and commerce.

Mr. BRIGGS. I do not know as the term of "trade and commerce" would include a druggist.

Mr. FESS. Trade, industry, or otherwise is the storm center around which the whole discussion on this bill has raged. It was thought it would be much better to specify, and that is why the limitation was placed there.

Mr. BRIGGS. I favor the provisions of this measure, and I think the limitation placed on there ought to apply to those who need it and to whom the Government should really try to give the benefits of the act.

Mr. FESS. Let me state that——

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Let me state to the committee that I am consuming more time than I should, because I want to yield to my colleagues; and if the committee members will just excuse me a minute until I state what the bill is, then I will yield.

Mr. HICKS. Just one moment about this question here. Is it not true at the present time that the definition of the word "commerce" covers practically every pursuit in which a man is engaged?

Mr. FESS. I do not know how you would limit it, I confess. On page 3 the Members will note what the Federal board will require a State to do in order to get the money, and it is specifically stated so that there can be no doubt about it, and it is not necessary for me to read it.

Section 2 is one of the sections about which much dispute has arisen recently. It provides what the State legislature must do in order to be eligible to be a beneficiary of this fund, and in line 16, page 4, it reads:

> In those States where a State workmen's compensation board or other State board, department, or agency exists, charged with the administration of the State workmen's compensation or liability laws, the legislature shall provide that a plan of cooperation shall be formulated between such State board, department, or agency, and the State board charged with the administration of this act, such plan to be effective when approved by the governor of the State.

That is so as to make it operative. There has been a considerable objection to this bill on the ground that the State board interferes with the compensation commission. We specifically provide in the bill that States—and there are 38 in number which have the compensation commissions—will have a cooperative arrangement through the legislature between the State board of education and this compensation commission. So there can not be any ground for the statement that any particular State can not get this fund, such as has been stated in letters to Members. I have received such statements myself.

Mr. BRIGGS. As I understand it, this bill does not in any wise interfere with the State industrial accident organizations or boards. It is something entirely different and apart from that and in addition and supplementary thereto.

Mr. FESS. Exactly right. Another thing ought always to be carried in mind, that the Federal board is not stepping over into the States. The Federal board is contributing a certain amount of money to be applied by the States, of course on the approval of the Federal board. That is, the State must do it in order to meet the requirements that are published. So the idea that the Federal board is going out of its way is not pertinent at all, as is also this suggestion that the Federal board is not functioning as it ought. There is no objection to this bill on the ground that the Federal board has been in the slightest degree lax on the soldiers' disability bill. There the Federal board has all that to do, while in this bill it is the State's doing, using the Federal Government's money on the approval of the Federal board. People have not differentiated between the two.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is it contemplated in this measure that the national board in charge of vocational education for the soldiers and sailors shall administer this act, or is there to be a different board, separate and apart from this present one?

Mr. FESS. It would be the same board. I do not think Congress would agree to create more commissions.

Mr. BRIGGS. It is contemplated that the same privileges now accorded to soldiers, sailors, and marines under the present vocational bill would be accorded civilians under this bill?

Mr. FESS. Oh, no.

Mr. BRIGGS. This is more limited in its scope and is only to aid and give assistance to the States in arranging this character of relief?

Mr. FESS. The gentleman has characterized it exactly. We give under this bill nothing like we give under the bill for disabled soldiers.

I am taking so much time, and as there are members of the committee who want to be heard, I will reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has used 30 minutes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the balance of my time, and later on I will endeavor to answer questions.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is familiar with this subject. Before he yields up his time may I ask him what is the objection to striking out all the limitations in the first section and simply saying "Rehabilitation of any disabled person, disabled in any lawful business or vocation." Is not that what we ought to do?

Mr. FESS. I think we ought to leave the discretion somewhere with somebody, which should be the Federal Board; and it would be better, it seems to me, to define in the law precisely what we expect to do. I realize that what the gentleman says is a subject of interest that has been discussed in the corridors of the House Office Building for some time. It has come to me. But under the five-minute rule I hope opportunity will be given for full discussion.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a motion that the committee rise?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules it is provided that the time shall be divided.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to speak if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] wants to move to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire the floor?

Mr. WALSH. No. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4438) to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FOSTER, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. SCOTT (at the request of Mr. MAPES), on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks made in connection with the parliamentary questions that were under discussion to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, October 10, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation required for expenses incident to the international conference of labor, authorized by Senate joint resolution 80 (H. Doc. No. 260), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9036) to repeal and annul certain parts of the charter and lease granted and made to the Washington Market Co. by act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington Market Co.," approved May 20, 1870, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 364), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, from the Committee on Rules, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 329) providing for the consideration of the conference report on House bill 8624, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 366), which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 330) providing for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 90, a resolution restoring American citizenship to Frances Scoville-Mumm, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 367), which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 331) providing for the consideration of the conference report on House bill 6810, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 368), which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. KNUTSON, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 90) to readmit Frances Scoville-Mumm to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 363), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9727) granting an increase of pension to Josiah J. Sikes; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 9520) granting a pension to Euphrates Huff; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 9731) granting an increase of pension to William D. Reed; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. NEELY: A bill (H. R. 9818) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Chester, Hancock County, W. Va., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. EVANS of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 9819) authorizing the Winnebago Tribe of Indians of Wisconsin and Nebraska to submit claims to the Court of Claims; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MAPES: A bill (H. R. 9820) to create a rent commission in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. GOULD: A bill (H. R. 9821) to amend an act entitled "An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1901, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. ROGERS: A bill (H. R. 9822) to authorize the President of the United States to arrange and participate in an international conference to consider questions relating to international communication; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 9823) for the repeal of certain legislation connected with the upbuilding of the American merchant marine, and providing for the disposition, regulation, or use of the property built or acquired by the United States under such acts, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 9824) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Revere, in the State of Massachusetts, cannon, helmets, or any other form of trophies of the present war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. EVANS of Montana: A bill (H. R. 9825) authorizing any land-grant railroad company, or its successors, to convey for public-road purposes, certain parts of its right of way; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. RIDDICK: A bill (H. R. 9826) to validate certain declarations of intention to become citizens of the United States; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota: Resolution (H. Res. 328) for the appointment of a committee of three to investigate the charges of political influence in appointments for commissioned officers of the Army and Navy; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. WHALEY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 226) authorizing the establishment of a free port at Charleston, S. C.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RIDDICK: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 227) for the relief of the Fort Peck Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. AYRES: A bill (H. R. 9827) for the relief of E. H. Wolf; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DRANE: A bill (H. R. 9828) granting an increase of pension to James H. St. Clair; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9829) granting a pension to James D. Smith; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. EMERSON: A bill (H. R. 9830) granting a pension to Fred R. Rife; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 9831) granting an increase of pension to George Milton Frye; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina: A bill (H. R. 9832) granting an increase of pension to Victor Fousse; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9833) granting a pension to Hugh T. Roberts; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9834) granting a pension to Mary C. Herrington; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9835) granting a pension to Charles Anderson; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9836) granting an increase of pension to Frank L. Yost; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARDY of Colorado: A bill (H. R. 9837) granting an increase of pension to Irving Reed; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAYS: A bill (H. R. 9838) granting a pension to John Johnson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9839) granting an increase of pension to John Hutchison; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota: A bill (H. R. 9840) for the relief of E. V. Dickson; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 9841) for the relief of Nehemiah Purdy; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KENDALL: A bill (H. R. 9842) granting an increase of pension to Thomas E. Sutton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MICHENER: A bill (H. R. 9843) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Myron C. Bond, Guy M. Claflin, and Edwin A. Wells; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RICKETTS: A bill (H. R. 9844) granting an increase of pension to James F. Comley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VARE: A bill (H. R. 9845) granting a pension to Alice J. Goeble; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of Mr. F. DeW. Armour, president, Branch No. 1, New York National Association of United States Civil Service Employees, Navy Yards and Stations, favoring an increase of not less than 40 per cent in salaries of all clerical employees of the various naval establishments; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of Snoqualmie Tribe, No. 5, Improved Order of Red Men, asking Congress to grant to all American Indians full rights of American citizenship; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, petition of Rev. John Field Speel, of Albany, N. Y., relating to the withdrawal of the British troops; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petition of the First Christian Church of Ashland, Ohio, favoring full citizenship for all American Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CURRY of California: Petition of Sacramento (Calif.) Valley Development Association, in favor of the development and equipment of the United States arsenal at Benicia, Calif., as a manufacturing arsenal; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FOCHT: Papers to accompany House bill 9679, granting a pension to Belle Thompson Alter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. IGOE: Petition of sundry ex soldiers, sailors, and marines, urging Congress to grant an additional bonus to honorably discharged ex-service men; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa: Petition of United States Naval Training Station, Great Lakes, Ill., favoring legislation to increase pay of United States civil-service employees at the navy yards and stations; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of Lawton Camp, No. 2, United Spanish War Veterans, to incorporate in bill to appropriate public moneys for the purpose of giving a bonus of $30 per month to each soldier, etc., of the World War, a like provision for the soldiers, etc., of the Spanish-American War; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MacGREGOR: Petition of American citizens of Lithuanian origin, appealing to the President of the United States and the United States Congress to give moral support to the Lithuanian people in their struggle against the Bolsheviki and Polish militarism by recognizing the Lithuanian Republic as an independent State; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees and Railway Shop Laborers, of Detroit, Mich., protesting against the passage of the so-called Cummins bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. RAMSEYER: Petition of Lawton Camp, No. 2, United Spanish War Veterans, asking that all soldiers, sailors, and marines who served their country during the War with Spain and the Philippine insurrection be given a bonus of $30; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania: Resolution adopted on October 6, 1919, at a regular monthly meeting of Perkiomen Post, No. 184, of the American Legion, East Greenville, Pa., indorsing and approving the action and purpose of the congressional investigating committee to place responsibility for unnecessary wrongs inflicted against officers and soldiers of the American Expeditionary Forces; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, statement presented by Joseph Mather, clerk of the Middletown monthly meeting of Friends, at Langhorne, Pa., and signed by Arthur Edwin Bye, Wilhelmina B. Ivins, and Marion H. Longshore, protesting against Senate bills 2691 and 2715, providing for compulsory military training; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WHITE of Maine: Petition of the Yarmouth Board of Trade, favoring the passage of House bill 6814 with amendments so as to make the duty on potato starch and potato flour 3 cents per pound; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. YATES: Petitions of W. F. Hall Printing Co., Chicago; Noll Hauworth Co., Quincy; Variety Manufacturing Co., Chicago; Illinois Tool Works, 154 East Erie Street, Chicago; American Building Foundry Co., Chicago; Morden Frog & Crossing Works, Chicago; Morman Manufacturing Co., Quincy; American Distilling Co., Pekin; Wilson Provision Co., Pekin; John A. Gauger & Co., Chicago; and George D. Roper, Rockford, all of the State of Illinois, protesting against the closed shop; to the Committee on Labor.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, October 10, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, justice and judgment are the habitation of Thy throne, and Thou hast called us to be coworkers together with Thee to establish the great principles upon which Thy kingdom rests in the earth. We pray Thee to help us to be willing and glad servants of Thine, to perform the duties that are upon us as in Thy sight, and to receive at the close of each day of our labor the consciousness that we have wrought in harmony with the will of God. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	Moses	Smith, Ariz.
Ball	Harris	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Harrison	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Henderson	New	Smoot
Calder	Hitchcock	Newberry	Spencer
Capper	Kellogg	Norris	Stanley
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Overman	Sutherland
Culberson	Keyes	Page	Thomas
Curtis	King	Phelan	Townsend
Dial	Kirby	Pittman	Trammell
Elkins	Knox	Poindexter	Underwood
Fernald	La Follette	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Lenroot	Reed	Walsh, Mass.
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Robinson	Walsh, Mont.
Gay	McCormick	Sheppard	Warren
Gerry	McCumber	Sherman	Williams
Gronna	McNary	Shields	Wolcott

Mr. PHELAN. I desire to announce that there is an important meeting of the Committee on Immigration and that Senators GORE, DILLINGHAM, COLT, and NUGENT are in attendance on that committee, who requested that the fact be reported to the Senate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to state that the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] are absent on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] are absent on official business.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] are detained by illness in their families. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day. I also wish to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] are detained on official business. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is necessarily detained from the Senate in attendance on a meeting of the Committee on Education and Labor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

CLAIM OF ROBERT A. LAUGHLIN (S. DOC. NO. 125).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting, pursuant to law, a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of Robert A. Laughlin amounting to $215.76 and requiring an appropriation for its payment, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SCHEDULES OF CLAIMS (S. DOC. NO. 126).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting schedules of claims in the amount of $353,920.50 allowed by the several account officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 28, 1874, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7779) to repeal the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CURTIS. I present resolutions in regard to increased pensions for Indian war veterans, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS.

The Indian war veterans in convention assembled do hereby resolve: That mindful of the courtesies extended to the organization by the citizens of Wichita, Kans., and proud of the fact that they have materially prospered, hereby extend our thanks for the courtesies received.

Be it further resolved, That we look with pride upon the material growth of the great States west of the Mississippi in which the organization had a part. We see the evidence of this material growth in the city of Wichita, in that portion of Kansas recognized as the great wheat belt, which prosperity is evidenced in the great wheat show now in progress, and we take pride in the fact that we made it possible for this condition to exist.

Be it further resolved, That we look with pride upon the services rendered by the veterans of the World War who have returned from overseas crowded with the laurels of victories won. The State convention of the American Legion now in session at Wichita, Kans., is evidence of the fact that these boys realize the strength of organization, and that they are determined to prove their loyalty to their country in peace as well as in war. We thank the American Legion for the courtesies extended to us in inviting us to participate in their parade and to share with them the honors of their great meeting. Proud as we may be of the services which we rendered in the early days of the frontier, we are prouder still of the services rendered by the American soldiers on the battle fields of France.

Be it further resolved, That we believe it to be to the best interests of the Nation to recognize the valuable service rendered by the Indian veteran fighters of the frontier, who made possible this great material prosperity, and who turned the wastes of the prairie and the mountains into fertile farms and homes.

They should be recognized generously in the way of pensions sufficient in amount to support them and keep them from want during their declining years. With this end in view, we ask our Congressmen from the various States to recognize the Indian fighters by giving them a generous pension in recognition of the services rendered to civilization on the western frontier.

JOHN MADDEN, Wichita, Kans.,
J. D. BRADLEY, Attica, Kans.,
RAY ANTHONY, Dodge City, Kans.,
A. E. CASE, Marion, Kans.,
CHARLES MAUCH, Poplar Bluffs, Mo.,
ROBERT JOHNSON, Robinson, Ill.,
H. J. HINKLEY, Texarkana, Tex., Committee.

Mr. ELKINS presented a petition of sundry employees of the St. Marys Pearl Button Factory, of West Virginia, praying for a tariff on the importation of pearl buttons, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Republican Publicity Association. This is a well-considered editorial on the movement of anarchy and attack upon personal and property rights, being so widely advocated in this country.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ORGANIZED INTIMIDATION INTOLERABLE.

WASHINGTON, October 5.

The Republican Publicity Association, through its president, Hon. Jonathan Bourne, jr., to-day gave out the following statement from its Washington headquarters:

"Demands of certain labor organizations for special Government favors and threats which constitute a menace to the welfare of the country demonstrate the desirability of immediate enactment of drastic laws making it a crime with heavy penalty for any person or group of persons to advocate or undertake, through violent resistance to law, impairment of interstate commerce, destruction of life or property, or overthrow of the established form of government.

"In a nation whose very beginning was founded upon the desire for personal liberty there can be no toleration of organized intimidation on the part of a small part of the population for the purpose of infringing upon the personal liberties of the great majority. Protection of the personal liberties of all its citizens is one of the first duties of any government. Of primary and vital importance in the exercise of personal liberty is the right of the individual to seek and secure employment in legitimate occupation, when and where he chooses. Government fails in its duty and liberty ceases to exist when it lies within the power of one man or group of men to deny to any other man or group of men the right to seek and accept such employment as they desire. It follows, therefore, that it is the duty of the Government to enact effective laws for prevention of violence or threats of violence which will interfere with the individual's right to work for the support of himself and those dependent upon him. The police power of the Government, in its broadest sense, must rise superior to the commercial force of society, either labor or capital, or the inevitable result must be overthrow of government.

"Never in the history of the world was there greater need for useful production than there is to-day. There must be uninterrupted and unimpaired production of the necessities of life or widespread suffering must ensue. From the general welfare standpoint, therefore, an honest day's work is no less essential than an honest day's pay. From failure of an honest day's pay only the individual suffers; from failure of an honest day's work the entire community suffers, because of the resultant underproduction, the scarcity of commodities, and the lowering of the plane of physical, mental, and moral development.

"In the exercise of his personal liberty any employer should be free, if he so desires, to employ only members of a labor organization. He should also be free to employ men who are not members of any organization. Whenever the Government, through any of its agencies, or by direct or indirect exercise of any of its powers, limits employment to the members of specified labor organizations it violates that section of the Constitution which assures to all persons within the jurisdiction of the Government the equal protection of the laws. Whenever a labor organization, by any means whatever, is able to bar any person whatever from employment, there is set up in this country a tribunal superior to the Government, which makes nonmembership a crime and condemns the nonmember without trial to the punishment of unemployment, with consequent want, suffering, and even death.

"This Nation is now confronted with the question whether the Government can protect its citizens in the enjoyment of personal liberty, or whether it must acknowledge the superior jurisdiction and power of the labor unions, composed of the small minority of the entire population."

TELEGRAM FROM FRANK P. FLINT AND OTHERS.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a telegram from Los Angeles, Calif., signed by Frank P. Flint and others, dated October 9. This is the telegram, apparently, which was referred to, and from which an extract was read to the Senate the other day by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], to which at the time I made reference, that Senator indicating that I had received a telegram which was not reported to the Senate. I desire to point out that this telegram is dated October 9 and was received this morning. I am very glad to present it. At the time I made some comment, and I will reserve the privilege of making further comment at a later date.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., October 9, 1919.

Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned citizens of California respectfully request that you cast your vote in the Senate in favor of the pending amendments and reservations proposed by the majority of the Foreign Relations Committee. Our national honor is compromised and our vital interests are disregarded and neglected in the proposed league and treaty. We can see no consistency in denouncing the Japanese in California while tolerating them in Shantung, thus making of them a greater menace. We can not conceive how any sterling American can stand for six or more votes for the British Empire to one for the United States. We urge you to join HIRAM W. JOHNSON in the brave and patriotic fight he is making for the preservation of American ideals and institutions.

(Signed) FRANK P. FLINT,
CORNELIUS M. COLE,
JOHN D. WORKS,
MILTON K. YOUNG,
JOSEPH H. CALL,
MEYER LISSNER,
(And 50 others).

PROPOSED RESERVATION TO PEACE TREATY.

Mr. CURTIS. I submit a proposed reservation and ask that it be read and printed as a reservation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Reservation to be proposed by Senator CURTIS to the treaty of peace with Germany, to follow the reservation recommended by the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"5. The United States construes subdivision 'C' of article 23 to mean that the league shall refuse to recognize agreements with regard to the traffic in women and children, and that the league shall use every means possible to abolish and do away with such practice."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed reservation will be printed.

INJUNCTION AGAINST STRIKING SRTEET CAR MEN.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a telegram bearing upon an injunction issued by the Federal court of California and asking for an investigation. I request that the Secretary read the telegram, if there be no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

OAKLAND, CALIF., October 9, 1919.

Hon. JAMES PHELAN,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the parent bodies of organized labor of Alameda County, with a membership of 75,000 workers, respectfully request you to investigate the following immediately: If we are at war, and with whom? If we are not at war, we ask that the action of District Judge William Van Fleet be investigated by Congress at once for having issued an injunction against striking street car men, based upon war-time measure, classifying street car lines a war-time utility. If we are not at war, Judge Van Fleet exceeded his jurisdiction in issuing a sweeping injunction which affects the public generally, and we petition you to have Congress investigate fully.

CENTRAL LABOR COUNCIL OF ALAMEDA COUNTY.
BUILDING TRADE COUNCIL OF ALAMEDA COUNTY.
METAL TRADE COUNCIL OF ALAMEDA COUNTY.
WILLIAM A. SPOONER.
S. W. LORE.
JOHN MORGANTHELER.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask that the memorandum attached to the telegram, giving the terms of the injunction, be published in the RECORD, if there be no objection, and I ask the reference of the telegram to the Committee on the Judiciary, for the purpose of eliciting an opinion for the information of the Senate upon the law involved. I understand that the Federal court declared the street car line of Alameda County to be a war-time utility, in view of the fact that they were serving the shipyards, where the Government is building a large number of ships for the merchant marine service of the United States under the auspices of the Shipping Board.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The injunction was directed to the Amalgamated Association of Street and Railway Engineers, with which the carmen's union of Oakland is affiliated. It restrains members from—

(a) "Inducing or coercing or attempting to induce or coerce by any kind of intimidations, threats, force, or fraud any employee of the San Francisco & Oakland Terminal Railways to quit its employment.

ACTS OF INTIMIDATION PROHIBITED BY ORDER.

(b) "Preventing by any speeches of intimidation, threat, force, or fraud any person from entering the employ of the aforesaid company.

(c) "Committing any and all acts of intimidation against any employee.

(d) "Trespassing or entering upon the grounds or premises of the company; entering upon its trains or cars or trestles, terminal works, or rights of way.

(e) "Using abusive language or by any such means persuading any employee of the company to refuse or fail to perform their duties as employees.

(f) "This order shall be in force and binding upon all members of the union and any member not named specifically in the order."

United States Marshal James B. Holohan was authorized to enforce the injunction and hale offenders before the United States district court for prosecution.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from California the fact, which he well knows, that our judicial system provides a very prompt and speedy remedy to determine whether or not Judge Van Fleet exceeded his jurisdiction. This is a Government of law, and I do not think we need investigations every time it is urged that some judicial officer has exceeded his authority.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegram will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LANDS IN OREGON AND CALIFORNIA.

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2798) authorizing the removal of stumps from cut-over Oregon and California lands, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 257) thereon.

RED RIVER BRIDGE, TEXAS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 8986) granting the consent of Congress to the Paris-Hugo Bridge Co. to construct a bridge and approaches thereto across Red River, near Arthur City, Lamar County, Tex., and I submit a report (No. 258) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Paris-Hugo Bridge Co., a corporation, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate at a point suitable to navigation interests a bridge and approaches thereto across Red River from a point on its south bank, north of and near Arthur City, in Lamar County, Tex., to a point immediately north of said beginning and located in Choctaw County, Okla., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred, as follows:

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3203) granting an increase of pension to Phillip T. Knowles; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 3204) fixing the salary of the district attorney for the eastern district of Tennessee; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 3205) for the relief of the widow of Rudolph H. von Ezdorf, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 3206) to amend paragraph 1 of section 3 of an act of February 5, 1917, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States"; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. FALL:

A bill (S. 3207) to authorize the Governor of the Territory of Hawaii to acquire privately owned lands and rights of way within the boundaries of the Hawaii National Park;

(By request.) A bill (S. 3208) to amend the act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, approved April 30, 1900; and

(By request.) A bill (S. 3209) to amend section 73 of an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended by an act approved April 2, 1908, and as further amended by an act approved May 27, 1910; to the Committee on Territories.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000 to reimburse United States District Attorney Clarence L. Reames, of Portland, Oreg., for extra and special services in the prosecution of certain cases in the northern district of California and in the western district of Washington, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the first deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. SPENCER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8778) to amend and modify the war-risk insurance act, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

PARADE OF THE FIRST DIVISION.

Mr. CAPPER submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 11), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the proceedings in Congress tendering the thanks of the American people and the Congress of the United States and extending a welcome to Gen. John J. Pershing, together with an account of the parade of the First Division in Washington in honor of Gen. Pershing, be printed, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, as a Senate document, with accompanying illustrations, and that 30,000 additional copies be printed and bound, of which 10,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 20,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

SUGAR SHORTAGE.

Mr. SPENCER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 209), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Whereas sugar shortage exists, which not only has greatly increased the cost of sugar but has resulted in a partial sugar famine; and

Whereas saccharin is a sweetening agent widely used in all civilized countries except the United States as a substitute for or auxiliary to sugar as a sweetening agent; and

Whereas saccharin is now permitted by departmental regulation to be used in foods only when such foods are prepared as diet for invalids, but is excluded from foods for persons in a state of health, although no law forbids its general use, and although the Referee Board of Scientific Experts reported to the Secretary of Agriculture, March 6, 1911, that saccharin was harmless in the quantities used in sweetening foods and beverages; and

Whereas the use of saccharin in those foods and beverages in which the added food value of sugar is not desired would release not less than 100,000,000 pounds of sugar per annum for use in foods in which the food value of sugar is necessary: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be requested to investigate and report upon the present status of saccharin under departmental regulation, and upon the feasibility of its wider use in the United States for the relief of the present sugar shortage.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 7779. An act to repeal the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CLASSIFICATION OF SALARIES.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is a question to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate this morning, and it will take only a few moments for me to do so.

In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill which was passed on March 1, 1919, a Joint Commission on Classification of Salaries was created, and in the law there were certain powers granted to that commission. I now desire to read certain extracts from articles which of late have appeared in some of the local newspapers, and particularly to call the attention of the members of that commission to them and ask them whether or not the articles are inspired.

I also desire that the Senate shall understand that there is no power granted to the joint commission to pursue the policy which these articles state is to be pursued under the direction and power of the commission. In the Washington Star of October 6, 1919, I find this statement:

Training of new Government employees for the work they have to do for Uncle Sam will be one of the big matters to be passed upon by the advisory committee on employment policies which is in process of selection to-day by the Joint Congressional Commission on Reclassification of Salaries in the District.

The new committee on employment policies will be a sister committee to the committee on wage policy, formation and personnel of which was announced by the reclassification commission last Saturday. Names of members of the new committee are to be submitted to the commission late this afternoon.

AID TO RECLASSIFICATION COMMITTEE.

The committee on employment policies will be advisory in nature to the reclassification commission, much in the same way that the committee on wage policy is, but the scope of the newer committee is larger than that of the wage policy committee.

All the matters that particularly pertain to the 106,000 Federal and District Government employees here will be considered by the committee on employment policies. The question of training new employees, as stated, will be one of the first questions to be acted upon by the committee. The committee will give advice to the reclassification commission, but will have no power to act, even as the committee on wage policy has none.

NEED FOR TRAINING SCHOOL.

It has long been felt in the Government service here that some sort of training school should be established in the various departments and bureaus to train the new employees in the work they are employed by the Government to perform. Instead of allowing employees to come into their new jobs and get along the best they can, there is a growing feeling that the heads of bureaus should give the new employees some personal training in the work before them.

The advisory committee on employment policies will take under consideration a long line of questions concerning matters which come close home to the bosoms of Government employees in the District. The matter of sick leave, the annual leave, all the hundred and one matters of routine in the service will be gone over by the committee in order to get at the very best procedure to recommend to the reclassification commission.

WILL DEAL WITH PROMOTIONS.

The matter of promotions—something dear and near to the heart of every Government clerk—will come under the scope of the advisory committee on employment policies. Just what will constitute the best form of promotion, so as to be fair to both clerk and Government alike, will be considered.

Retirement plans will be gone over by the committee, and the results of its deliberations laid before the members of the reclassification commission for their consideration. It is out of all these deliberations that all the final policies of the reclassificationists as they will be placed before Congress will grow.

The committee on employment policies and the committee on wage policy together form the two big advisory bodies which will work right along with the reclassification commission in arriving at the results which will finally constitute the commission's report to Congress.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Utah state from what paper he has taken the article which he has just read?

Mr. SMOOT. It is taken from the Washington Star of October 6, 1919.

On the 7th of October I find this in the Washington Post:

Three representatives of the organized Government employees have been appointed by the joint congressional commission on reclassification of the civil service to serve on an advisory committee on wages. They are Luther C. Steward, president of the National Federation of Federal Employees; W. Carson Ryan, jr., president of Federal Employees Union No. 2; and Miss Ethel Smith, executive secretary of the Washington committee of the National Women's Trade-Union League, with which local and national organizations of Federal employees are affiliated

The chairman of the advisory committee is Courtney W. Hamlin, of the reclassification commission, and other members are representative of two groups as follows: Administrative officials. Dr. E. B. Rosa, of the Bureau of Standards; Van. H. Manning, chief of the Bureau of Mines; and Paul F. Myers, chief clerk of the Treasury Department; professional economists, Dr. Francis Walker, of the Federal Trade Commission; Dr. M. L. Jacobson, of the Federal Reserve Board; Dr. Royal C. Meeker, commissioner of labor statistics; and Mrs. Helen Sumner Woodbury, of the Children's Bureau.

The national federation is bending every effort to make sure that the jurisdiction of the commission, at present limited to the District will be extended to cover all employees of the Government throughout the country.

Note the last paragraph of the article:

The national federation is bending every effort to make sure that the jurisdiction of the commission. at present limited to the District, will be extended to cover all employees of the Government throughout the country.

Where is the authority for such a proposition?

Now, Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the powers of the joint commission.

Mr. THOMAS. Its powers under the law.

Mr. SMOOT. Its powers under the law, as the Senator from Colorado suggests. The act creating the commission provides:

It shall be the duty of the commission to investigate the rates of compensation paid to civilian employees by the municipal government and the various executive departments and other governmental establishments in the District of Columbia, except the navy yard and the Postal Service, and report by bill or otherwise, as soon as practicable, what reclassification and readjustment of compensation should be made so as to provide uniform and equitable pay for the same character of employment throughout the District of Columbia in the services enumerated.

The commission is authorized to sit during the sessions or recess of Congress, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ such personal services and incur such expenses as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

The heads of the various governmental services and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall furnish office space and equipment, detail officers and employees, furnish data and information, and make investigations whenever requested by the commission in connection with the purposes of this section.

Mr. President, we find, if these reports are true, Mr. Luther C. Steward—and every Senator knows who he is—directing the policies of this commission which was created by Congress; and, not only that, but making arrangements for the purpose of opening a school to teach the employees of the Government how to carry on the work which the Government has employed them to do and for which it is paying them.

Mr. President, we appropriated $25,000 under the first act for the work of the joint commission. That was thought sufficient to obtain necessary information as required by the act itself; but in the very next deficiency appropriation bill that came before Congress there was a request for $125,000 more. Senators will remember that we gave them $65,000 more; and I say now if these reports be true and the policy outlined carried out we will have another commission on our hands, which will grow and expand until they will be expending nearly a quarter of a million dollars, if not more, each year. It is only another illustration of the camel getting his nose under the tent, and then in a little while getting his whole body in. I consider it to be the duty of Congress, if these reports be true, to say to this commission, "Confine yourselves to the work that you were authorized by Congress to do."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield, who constitute the commission?

Mr. SMOOT. The House members are Mr. Hamlin, of Missouri; Mr. Keating, of Colorado; and Mr. Cooper, of Wisconsin, three former Members of the House who failed of election in November last. I have heretofore called attention on the floor of the Senate to the fact that we were paying Mr. Keating $625 a month as a member of the commission, the same compensation as that received by Senators of the United States, and that he has accepted, while serving on this commission, a position as the attorney for some labor organization.

The Senate members are——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield, I should be very glad to support a resolution directing the commission not to pay him any compensation whatsoever so long as he is receiving compensation from some other source. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I base the statements I have made upon articles I have seen in the newspapers for some time past. Only yesterday morning there was another article of similar character. I have no doubt that they are inspired by Mr. Luther C. Steward. What I want to know is whether or not the commission created by Congress has authorized these statements and whether they are true.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the men and women who are to constitute this new commission are all Government employees, are they not?

Mr. SMOOT. They are all Government employees.

Mr. THOMAS. And presumably they have Government duties to perform. Do they receive their compensation from the Government while neglecting these duties and giving their attention to the work of this new commission?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think under the law that the heads of the various governmental services had a right to detail these employees for this work, and, of course, they are drawing their regular salaries from the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me ask whether, if detailed, they also receive compensation for this other work?

Mr. SMOOT. I doubt whether the joint commission pays them any further compensation.

Mr. THOMAS. I am in sympathy with the Senator's suggestion regarding a resolution; but my impression is the only way to control this ever-increasing tendency to the perpetuation of commissions and bureaus is to repeal the law.

Mr. KING. That is right.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish simply to say in a few words what the result of this program, if carried out, will be. Unless it is checked we will have a report from our commission, prepared in the greater part by representatives of the Labor Department, asking us to pay the salaries covered by the report; and if the commission continues in existence, I wish to say that Congress will be importuned every year for increases. All employees will be experts and all demanding the same wage. There will be no time when the question of salaries in the departments of the Government will be settled; there will be one continual demand for changes, and it will be impossible to tell where it will end. The joint commission was created to secure information as to inconsistencies in salaries paid the employees of the Government in the different departments and to compare those salaries with the salaries paid employees outside of the Government service.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, we have been creating a great many commissions. I should like to have the Senator tell me some commission that has brought about a reform in this country.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from North Carolina has been in the Senate just as long as I have; he has been on the Appropriations Committee the same as I have; and he knows very well, as I know, that there have been but few reforms made by any commission created by Congress.

Mr. THOMAS. I supposed the Senator would answer, the Civil Service Commission. [Laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he takes his seat?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I had to be absent from the Chamber for a moment while the Senator was speaking, but before I left

I heard him read something from a newspaper article about the establishment of a school for the training of Government employees to do their work.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the suggestion in this article, and it is to be under the direction of a commission appointed by the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, and the names of the members of that commission are given.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is there any authority for the establishment of any such school?

Mr. SMOOT. None that I know of. That is what I am complaining of.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator understand that they expect to pay for the maintenance of that school?

Mr. SMOOT. It can not be maintained without some expense.

Mr. THOMAS. Why, of course.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator expect them to pay for the maintenance of that school out of the appropriation that was given for this investigating commission?

Mr. SMOOT. That I can not say, because I have not made any investigation of this subject.

Mr. THOMAS. No; that will come in on a deficiency bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose whatever expense there may be will have to be paid. So far as I am concerned, the only source I know of is the appropriation that was made by the Joint Commission on the Reclassification of Salaries.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. While I have a great deal of sympathy with a good many things the Senator has said, I am inclined to think, nevertheless, that he ought not to base an opinion and form a judgment on what the newspapers have said about the establishment of a school. I do not believe a statement of that kind is adequate authority; and knowing a good many of the members of that commission as I do, I do not believe they are going to violate the law. I think there are some very good men on that commission who are conscientiously trying to do their duty. Before I would take any action I should want to know whether there is any foundation in fact for that report in the Washington papers.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will recall that I said that my statement was based upon the newspaper articles.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. And I will say to the Senator that these are not the only ones.

Mr. NORRIS. I read them; yes. I have read several of them, and my curiosity was aroused.

Mr. SMOOT. The first one that was published some time ago was a little article of about 10 lines.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I think I saw that.

Mr. SMOOT. My attention was called to that, and every day I have seen the program grow and grow and grow. I believe I know who is back of the whole thing. I will say to the Senator that I have not stated this to be true; but an advisory committee is named in the published report, giving the names of each, so there must be something in it.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand, and, of course, they probably have asked for an advisory committee. I think, under the law, there is authority on the part of the heads of departments to detail men to constitute such a committee to help them in every way.

Mr. SMOOT. I called attention to that.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I heard the Senator do that; but I do not believe we ought even indirectly to condemn the members of this commission on a newspaper report of that kind.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have no resolution to offer. I simply called attention to this fact, to the situation that existed, because, if the newspaper reports are true, the work as mapped out is unauthorized by law.

Mr. NORRIS. There is not any doubt that they have not any authority to start a school; and even if this advisory committee recommended doing such a thing, there is not any machinery under the law by which they could do it. I do not believe the members of the commission would stand for that. They have a very difficult work to perform, and a very important one. Everybody realizes that we appointed them because we realized that the discriminations and the differences in salaries that various people were getting for performing the same kind of work were not right. We wanted to rectify that situation, and we appointed the commission for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the idea has been discussed for at least a year past that I know of; and I believe, I will say, that good would come from such a school. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. NORRIS. There are lots of schools, without the Government starting one.

Mr. SMOOT. But the question in my mind is, Why begin to organize one here for that purpose, when under the law no one has the power to do it?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think they will. I do not think there is any danger of it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, right on the point that the Senator from Utah has mentioned, I will state that there is now a proposition before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations to provide by appropriation for the establishment of such a school as is mentioned in this article. I quite agree with the Senator that no authority such as he has related has ever been given. I have been hoping to hear from the members of that commission in the Senate.

ROBERT A. MINOR.

Mr. TOWNSEND obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, has the morning business closed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No.

Mr. KING. I offer the resolution, which I send to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 208) was read as follows:

Whereas the Senate on the 31st day of July last agreed to and adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of War report to the Senate whether or not Robert A. Minor, an American citizen, accredited as a war correspondent in the military zone in France, was arrested by military authorities of the American Expeditionary Forces for circulating seditious publications and propaganda among the soldiers of the American Expeditionary Forces, or for any other cause, and that if said Minor was arrested as aforesaid, to report to the Senate the particular nature of the charges upon which he was arrested, and whether or not said Minor has been discharged from custody, and the reason therefor, if such action was taken."

And

Whereas the Secretary of War has made no report to the Senate in the premises: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is directed to forthwith report to the Senate upon the matter referred to him by said resolution of July 31.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no objection if the resolution does not call for debate.

Mr. KING. I do not think it will call for any debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of House joint resolution 151.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	Myers	Smith, Md.
Ball	Gronna	Nelson	Smoot
Bankhead	Hale	New	Spencer
Beckham	Harding	Newberry	Stanley
Brandegee	Harris	Norris	Sutherland
Calder	Henderson	Overman	Thomas
Capper	Hitchcock	Owen	Townsend
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Page	Trammell
Colt	Kendrick	Pittman	Underwood
Curtis	Keyes	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Dial	King	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	Knox	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Elkins	La Follette	Sheppard	Warren
Fernald	McCormick	Sherman	Williams
Fletcher	McCumber	Shields	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	McNary	Smith, Ariz.
Gay	Moses	Smith, Ga.

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] are detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. KEYES. I was requested to announce that the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT], the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], and the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] are detained on official business.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that my colleague, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], is detained on account of illness in his family. I ask that this notice may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I want to take just a moment to call the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], in connection with the resolution which has just been adopted, to the fact that this man Robert Minor, referred to in the resolution, who was arrested in France for attempting to arouse sedition in the American Army and preaching communistic propaganda to American soldiers in France, has not ceased his activities.

He has returned to the United States and is creating a situation that is somewhat parallel to the situation that resulted from the action of the Government of the United States in intervening in behalf of Leon Trotski. Leon Trotski was a well-known Russian revolutionist residing in the United States. He left the United States en route to Russia. He was arrested by the Canadian authorities because, knowing his views and activities, they regarded his voyage to Russia during the war as a menace. He was detained for a considerable period of time by the Canadian authorities. The Government, of the United States intervened in Leon Trotski's behalf, and by bringing its influence to bear upon the Canadian Government succeeded in having his passport accepted. He went to Russia, and the result is well known. He was one of the principal factors in bringing about the establishment in Russia of that régime which has led to Russia's destruction and in bringing about the betrayal of the allied cause and the near victory of Germany through the abandonment by Russia of the cause of her allies at a critical period in the war.

So it is with Minor, who, by some authority evidently above Gen. Pershing, was released from the custody of the courts-martial of the American Expeditionary Forces, set free, and allowed to return to America to continue his revolutionary activities here, with what consequences the future remains to tell.

I notice in a recent issue of the Topeka Daily Capital an account of some of the activities in which this man Minor is now engaging in the United States as a reward to the United States, I suppose, for the liberality with which he has been treated by the American Government and for the favor which has been shown him in picking him out among all the criminals who had been subjected to military discipline—making an exception of him and setting aside the processes of justice and of military law in behalf of a particular individual while visiting its punishment upon others. This article says:

FRIEND OF LENIN TALKS SOVIET RULE FOR AMERICA—SENSATIONAL AGITATOR DEFENDS RUSSIAN REDS—PREDICTS AN UPHEAVAL IN THIS COUNTRY ON OCTOBER 8 THROUGH A NATION-WIDE STRIKE.

Government of the people, by the people, and for the people is doomed to give way to "industry for the workers," to the complete annihilation of the employing class, if Robert Minor's dream of soviet rule in America comes true.

Mr. Minor is a sensational spellbinder of the "soap-box" type, who went to Europe as a newspaper correspondent and landed in a French jail, from which he was rescued by President Wilson.

I do not vouch for the statement in regard to the President's intervention. I only read what is stated in the newspaper, although it is perfectly evident that his release was from some high authority, else it could not have been effected.

He boasts of being a friend of Lenin and Trotski, of Russia. He spoke at the city auditorium last night to an audience of 200, mostly laboring men.

The upheaval, so says Mr. Minor, is to come on October 8, when a Nation-wide strike aimed at the "ruling class" is to start. All industries will be affected. The purpose of said strike is to force the release from the jails of such men as Thomas Mooney—

We know the efforts which the American Government has made along those lines, in pursuance of the object here stated by Robert Minor for the release of Thomas Mooney. He proceeds:

Eugene V. Debs, a horde of conscientious objectors, and all military prisoners, who are serving time "because they have a friendly interest in labor."

SOVIET IN TOPEKA.

Mr. Minor painted a vivid picture of what would happen if the soviet form of government was installed in Topeka.

The few employers present heard what would happen to them if a soviet was formed. They would give over their business to the workers and either take a job and go to work or receive but one-fourth pound of bread a day. The workers would be paid in flour, butter, and sugar, each man receiving one sack of flour on pay day for himself and wife, with an additional sack for each child.

If the former employer was considered intelligent enough to hold the position of superintendent or foreman he might be appointed. In that case he would have the use of an automobile, with a worker to drive it for him. The profits would be divided among the workers.

Mr. Minor told of the workings of the soviets in Russia, characterizing them as the greatest ruling power in the world. They will maintain a government after all the prevailing Governments of Europe are overthrown, he declared.

He declared that the Italian Government will fall within three weeks, the Spanish Government is on its last legs, the French Government is hysteric, and Great Britain has given the workingmen a soviet form of government more nearly revolutionary than even in soviet Russia.

It would be a crime, he said, for the Allies to aid Gen. Kolchak in Russia. If the revolutionary government is allowed to work out its own destiny the working class of all the world will take heart and overthrow the capitalistic class.

HE LOVES RED GUARD.

The Russian Red Guard were warmly defended by Mr. Minor. He declared that murder and pillage were only resorted to in the attempt to secure food and to wipe out the "White Guard," which he characterized as a far more serious menace to civilization than the Reds.

Misrepresentation of facts by newspapers and correspondents was asserted by the speaker. He, of all the correspondents who entered Germany and Russia, came home to tell the truth, he modestly admitted—

Although failing to state that he was enabled to do so by having been released from custody as a criminal without trial and without any effort to punish him. The article proceeds:

As a money getter Minor is some capitalist himself. An admission fee was charged at the door, pamphlets were sold before the address began, and a collection was taken up afterwards.

I assumed it might be of some interest to the Secretary of War, who apparently has declined for over two months after the resolution was passed by the Senate to give this information, to know the result of his or some one else's beneficence toward this individual.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington will not find me defending the activities of the extremists and radicals who have been connected with the executive departments and agencies of the Government during the past two or three years. I express just as strong condemnation of the conduct of certain executive authorities in countenancing the activities of these radicals as does the Senator from Washington. I have heretofore criticized some branches of the Government for their employment of men whose views were hostile to our republican form of government. There have been radical socialists and men who followed the principles of Bolshevism who have had places within executive branches of the Government, and they have brought discredit to the administration and have proven to be instruments of harm to the Government itself. There have been too many men of the type of Bullitt, Minor, and Steffens who have crept into some of the departments and agencies of the Government, particularly since we have been at war with Germany. There have been men whose radical and destructive views were known to the public who have been retained in positions of trust and responsibility. It is regrettable that this should have been the case. It is highly improper, in my view, to place men in positions of responsibility who disbelieve in our form of government and who would countenance its overthrow.

The Senator from Washington has just called attention to an address delivered by Mr. Minor at Topeka, Kans. As the Senate knows, Minor was recently in Europe. It was reported that he spread seditious literature not only among the soldiers of the Allies, but also among the soldiers of the American Army. We were informed that he was carrying on a Bolshevik propaganda, for the purpose of demoralizing the allied troops and spreading revolution among them. His activities were so pernicious, the reports stated, as to lead to his arrest. We were further informed that he had violated military laws and was to be tried by court-martial. Without any reason being assigned, we were later informed that he was released, and, as I recall the newspaper accounts, it was claimed that his release was ordered by some American high in authority in the United States. I made diligent inquiry to ascertain the reason of the discharge of Mr. Minor and what causes led to the abandonment of his prosecution. Getting no information, some time ago I introduced a resolution calling upon the Secretary of War to furnish this information. The Secretary has thus far neglected to comply with the request of the Senate as expressed in the resolution. I have just offered a resolution calling attention to the one just alluded to and asking that the Secretary of War forthwith submit the information required. This resolution has been unanimously adopted, and I hope that the Secretary of War will no longer ignore the action of the Senate.

After Mr. Minor was released from his imprisonment in France he returned to the United States. Only a day or two ago he participated in a meeting held in the city of New York. Yesterday morning's papers refer to the meeting. The account of the proceedings show that it was a riotous assembly. Mr. Minor addressed the crowd, eulogizing the soviet form of government and proclaiming, as I understand, that it would overthrow this Republic. The meeting was also addressed by a man by the name of Dudley Field Malone. I am told that this man at one time masqueraded as a Democrat.

Mr. President, there are thousands of aliens within the United States who should be deported. The act of Congress approved October 16, 1918, states, in substance, that aliens who are anarchists and who believe in and advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of government or laws, or who disbelieve in or are opposed to all organized governments, or who advocate or teach the assassination of public officials or the unlawful destruction of property, or who are members of or affiliated with any organization that entertains a belief in, teaches, or advocates the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or all forms of law, or that entertains or teaches a belief in or opposition to all organized government, or that advocates or teaches the unlawful destruction of property, shall be excluded from admission into the United States.

The law also provides that any alien who at any time after entering the United States is found to have been at the time of entry or to become thereafter a member of any of the classes of aliens just referred to shall be taken into custody and deported by the Secretary of Labor.

As stated, there are many aliens in the United States who come within these specifications. Aliens who are members of the I. W. W. and aliens who believe in Bolshevism are covered by the terms of the statute just referred to. They not only believe in but they advocate the overthrow by force and violence of our Government, and they also disbelieve in and are opposed to all organized government. Many of them advocate the assassination of public officials. They advocate and teach the unlawful destruction of property and all forms of sabotage. The I. W. W.'s and a number of organizations in the United States believe in and teach the overthrow by force and violence of all government, as well as of all forms of law.

It is admitted that those who believe in Russian Bolshevism not only entertain but teach belief in and opposition to all organized government. Thousands of these aliens are traveling throughout the United States inciting riots, provoking strikes, teaching the destruction of all government, and urging workingmen to violently overthrow this Republic and establish a dictatorship of the proletariat.

I repeat, these individuals come within the terms of the statute and are subject to deportation. I have heretofore called attention to the activities of Mr. Martens, who claims to be the representative of the Russian Bolsheviks. Some time ago in a written communication I directed the attention of the Labor Department to Mr. Martens and to the aliens in the United States who were subject to deportation as prescribed by the act of October 16, 1918. I also communicated with the Attorney General and urged that steps be taken to deport Martens as well as other aliens who were seeking the overthrow of our Government. A vigorous enforcement of this law is required, and I regret that there is so much delay in applying its provision and driving from our shores those aliens who are abusing our hospitality and are attempting to spread anarchy and destroy law and order.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator allow me to suggest to him that if many of these had been deported the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations would have been deprived of some of the star witnesses that were called against the league of nations?

Mr. KING. I make no comment with respect to the last observation of the Senator, and I leave the Senate and the public to determine the character of some of the witnesses who appeared before that committee.

Mr. MYERS obtained the floor.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator from New Hampshire wishes to address any remarks to the matter that has been immediately under discussion, I will yield to him, because I wish to discuss another matter.

Mr. MOSES. I am very much obliged to the Senator for his courtesy. I merely wish to say that I hope the Senator from North Dakota did not really mean that he wished to deprive the Nation of the gayety created by some of the witnesses who have been before the Committee on Foreign Relations. While I am saying that I wish to add my concurrence in everything that has been said by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], except that I do not think those to whom he has referred as holding high and responsible positions in the administration have crept in or have come there by stealth. Their reputations were too well known to be concealed from the appointing power, and their selection in so many departments of the Government for so many places of importance and authority must lead to the conclusion that they were picked out to be the special pets of the administration, upon whose head now recoil the consequences of their revolutionary activities.

INCREASED PAY OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 151) to provide additional compensation for employees of the Postal Service, and making an appropriation therefor.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, addressing myself to the joint resolution before the Senate, I understand that the measure, if enacted, would result in an increased expenditure by the Government of $38,000,000 annually over and above the present expenses of the Post Office Department. There have been read to the Senate some letters from the head of that department, the Postmaster General, objecting very earnestly to the measure and to the proposed expenditure, and asserting that the sum of $2,000,000 additional per annum would be sufficient to remedy all cases of injustice and inequity in the pay of postal employees and to obtain sufficient help of the proper kind for the conduct of the department's business. I do not believe that at this time Congress would be justified in voting an expenditure of $38,000,000, in the face of the opposition of the head of the department, who certainly has a better understanding of the needs of the department than has Congress.

The great cry from both political parties is for economy in public expenditures. We are constantly admonished that we must economize and retrench in expenditures. Everybody seems to admit it; everybody seems to assent to it; nobody denies it. If that be true, where are we going to begin and when are we going to begin? We are not economizing by paying out $38,000,000 of increased appropriation for the maintenance of one of the executive departments, when the head of that department, who is charged with the proper administration of the affairs of that department, comes to Congress and says that the expenditure is not needed and that $2,000,000 would be amply sufficient.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] yesterday laid before the Senate, while discussing this measure, a number of telegrams from postmasters in Ohio, stating that they did not have sufficient help. There may be, and I doubt not there are, occasional instances, sporadic instances, where post offices in certain cities and towns here and there do not have sufficient help or help of the right kind. That is true to-day of all lines of business, public or private. However, when it comes to the affairs of the Post Office Department as a whole, I believe the head of the department has a greater comprehension and more reliable knowledge of the condition of its affairs and the needs of the department than has any postmaster here and there, at random, throughout the country, be he in Ohio or anywhere else. I believe the Postmaster General competent and efficient, and I believe he knows the business of his department and its needs.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope the Senator does not get the idea that the conditions, so far as they relate to Ohio, are sporadic. The facts which I gave yesterday portray the general condition in nearly every industrial center in Ohio. I feel very deeply upon this subject when I know that in the post offices in these industrial cities and towns they have not had the help they ought to have had, and their men have not been paid what they ought to have been paid.

Mr. MYERS. Is the Senator prepared to say that that condition of affairs exists in every State of the Union?

Mr. POMERENE. I am not. I spoke with special reference to Ohio.

Mr. MYERS. I dare say it exists in Ohio, if at all, in comparatively few places only, and then solely in a few of the busier cities.

Mr. POMERENE. In the industrial cities.

Mr. MYERS. The Postmaster General says an appropriation of $2,000,000 would be sufficient to remedy the state of affairs existing in occasional instances. If that be true, why should we appropriate $38,000,000 when the head of the department only calls for $2,000,000? I do not call that economy. To my mind, that is the wrong way to begin to economize in public expenditures.

Notwithstanding the criticism of the Postmaster General from hostile sources, I believe that he has given the country a good administration of the affairs of that department. I believe the affairs of that department are administered as well and the business of the department is carried on as well under the present head of that department as under other heads of the department in times past. I believe his administration of the affairs of that department will compare favorably with past administrations of the department. I am not in sympathy with the torrent of criticism heaped on the head of the Post Office Department. I think it comes from hostile sources, in the main, and generally from sinister motives. I think the department well conducted.

I understand the communications of the Postmaster General to the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which I have referred, are concurred in by the First Assistant Postmaster General, who has long been an official of that department. He is a hold-over official, for many years back, from previous administrations. I am well acquainted with him and his methods, and his conduct of the affairs of his branch of the Post Office Department, and I believe the First Assistant Postmaster General is a competent official, quite competent to judge of the needs of the business of that department which comes under his jurisdiction.

So I understand we have that attitude, an attitude of opposition to this measure, assumed by the two highest officials of the Post Office Department—the Postmaster General and the First Assistant Postmaster General—and when we have the joint and concurring judgment of those two officials there can certainly be nothing partisan about it. I believe they know what they are talking about. I am willing to trust their judgment as to their own business. I feel they know more than I about it.

The chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations recently carefully compiled and gave out a statement showing that the Government, this fiscal year, will be short three and one-half billions of dollars in its revenues; that it is going to run three and one-half billions of dollars in excess of its revenues this year, with no more unnecessary expenditures, and cautioned the Congress. If that be the case—and I do not doubt it—from where is the money to come? Where are we going to get the money to vote $38,000,000 here and there for different purposes that are not absolutely necessary?

I believe, too, that this matter should not be taken up at this time, especially as there is a joint commission of Congress which is investigating the subject of reclassification of salaries of postal employees. The members of the commission are making a study of the subject; they are diligently engaged at it, I understand; and I suppose in the near future it may be expected that they will report to Congress some comprehensive scheme for the readjustment of the salaries of postal employees, overcoming any inequities and deficiencies that may exist in the pay of the different grades of the service. It does seem to me unbusinesslike and unwise for us to rush in with an appropriation of $38,000,000 of additional expenditure before we can hear from that commission.

Another thing: During the era of the high cost of living that has prevailed for several years, since the European war broke out, Congress each year, in making appropriations at or prior to the beginning of the fiscal year, has taken into consideration the high cost of living and the inadequate compensation of Government employees, and each year has voted a bonus for the ensuing fiscal year, which begins the 1st day of July of each calendar year. That has been done each year for several years past. In accordance with that policy, Congress at the last session voted bonuses of different amounts to the different Government employees for the present fiscal year, which began July 1. To most of the Government employees it voted a bonus of $240 for this year, $20 a month additional pay. To employees of the War Risk Insurance Bureau it voted a bonus of $10 a month, or $120 for the year. Just why that discrimination was made between the employees of the War Risk Insurance Bureau and other employees I do not entirely understand; but it was done by committees after careful investigation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I understand one of the reasons for the apparent discrimination is in the fact that most of the employees of the War Risk Insurance Bureau received higher compensation than those in the regular departments of the Government service. When that bureau was created unfortunately there was no limitation, as I recall the bill, placed upon the officials with respect to salaries. I know that they are paid very much higher compensation than is paid in many of the departments. As a result they took away from various governmental agencies and departments hundreds, if not thousands, of employees because of those increased salaries.

Mr. MYERS. Yes; I had heard something of that, but I am glad to have the explanation. I have no doubt the committee which considered the matter of these bonuses carefully considered that question and adjusted the matter as it thought wise and just, and Congress acted on the recommendation of the committee. The postal employees, I understand, receive this year a bonus of $200 for the year in addition to the $100 increase which each employee automatically received by way of promotion, making $300 additional that each employee of the Post Office Department is receiving for this year, which is $60 more, I believe, than is given by way of bonus to any other class of employees of the Government. When these things are arranged for once a year it does seem to me that they ought to last for the period of one year. It seems to me they should be allowed to remain undisturbed for the short space of 12 months. It seems to me when committees of Congress consider these matters, pass upon them, and make arrangements for the appropriations of Congress for the coming fiscal year they ought to last through that year.

I firmly believe in adequate pay for Government employees. I have heretofore voted for all of the bonuses which have been recommended by committees of Congress in making appropriations for Government expenses for each fiscal year. I have never opposed any of them; but I do believe in some system in these matters. I believe complete and adequate arrangement should be made once each year for the pay of all Government employees, and when once made I think they should continue in force until the beginning of the next fiscal year. Once a year is certainly often enough to revise salaries. It hardly seems to me to be justifiable to be coming to Congress in the midst of a fiscal year and asking for a still further increase for one class of Government employees, to be retroactive; to date back to the beginning of the fiscal year. If we grant an increase in this instance on the united demand of the postal employees, in January the employees of some other branch of the Government may come along and make a united or collective demand for a further increase for them for the present fiscal year, to be retroactive and to date back to the beginning of the fiscal year.

It seems to me it would be setting a bad precedent, and I do not believe we ought to depart from the usual custom of fixing the compensation of Government employees once a year. It does not appeal to me as being justifiable, sound, or businesslike.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], who is in charge of the joint resolution, stated yesterday that it was intended as an emergency measure during the present era of the high cost of living. If it is to last during the prevalence of the high cost of living, I think it will last for a good many years, for I do not believe the cost of living is going to be materially reduced for several years. Indeed, I do not think it has yet reached the apex; I do not believe it has ceased increasing. From present prospects, I think it is likely to keep on increasing for several years.

I have come to the conclusion that the chief cause of the high cost of living is the restriction of production. I believe that restricted production is the principal cause of the present abnormal high cost of living; and just so long as we have strikes and strikes and strikes, and so long as labor unions are permitted continually to demand and obtain increased wages and shorter hours of labor, the present high cost of living is going to continue.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. MYERS. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with the Senator from Montana about the dominant effect of decreased or increased production, one way or the other; but does not the Senator also think—I believe he does; I do—that an important stimulating cause of the advance of prices is the large amount of money per capita now in circulation?

Mr. MYERS. I do. I have not abandoned that opinion by any means. I think it is a vitally contributing cause. That, together with the decreased production of all of the necessities of life, I think, is causing the present high cost of living. We may have committees to investigate and to inquire; we may have testimony from experts and nonexperts; and we may enact laws upon laws, but there is going to be no material decrease in the cost of living until there is some reduction of the circulating medium and a cessation of the studiously decreased production of the country. I think both those causes of the high cost of living will have to be remedied before there will be any material decrease in the cost of living.

The steel workers of the country are now engaged in a strike which I think is absolutely unjustifiable; indeed, in my opinion, it is one of the most unjustifiable strikes that was ever precipitated upon the people of this country. It decreases the production of steel, one of the great industrial essentials of the world. It makes steel high; it makes everything else high; and so it goes. There are strikes continually under way; there are hardly ever less than two or three dozen of them, and of considerable dimensions, going on and in full force in the United States at the same time. Hundreds of thousands of workmen are idle, producing nothing, and consuming all of the time. That condition reduces the production of the essentials of life in the country, and that greatly increases the cost of living.

Recently the bituminous coal miners' unions of the country very carefully and explicitly formulated a series of demands which they made upon their employers. First, they demanded a 60 per cent increase of wages. They are already getting 70 per cent increase over prewar wages, but in addition to that they demand 60 per cent more, which would make an increase of 130 per cent above their prewar wages. They also demand a six-hour day, five work days a week, double pay for holidays and Sundays, and pay and a half for extra time. I suppose we ought to go down on our knees and be thankful that they did not demand anything else; I suppose the country has great cause to be thankful because they did not demand more. Let us be thankful for small favors. Their employers have announced that they would not grant the demands. Of course, they could not grant them. If they should be granted, the cost of coal would be enormously increased. It is estimated that if those demands for an increase of wages and shorter hours and less number of days per week were granted it would increase their wages at least 153 per cent over their prewar wages. The cost of living has not risen to an extent to justify such an extortionate demand. This is attempted extortion, pure, simple, indefensible.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. OWEN. There is great force in what the Senator from Montana is saying with regard to this matter; and some days ago I put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement of George W. Perkins proposing a plan by which labor would be stimulated to make as large an output as possible by arranging a working plan in which labor would participate in the profits over and above what would be regarded as a mere wage. What the Senator says with regard to labor is equally true with regard to many of the employers or many of those interested in so-called monopolies, who limit production in order to expand the opportunity of a larger percentage of profits. That is against the public interest, because they do not stimulate the production as they ought to; they limit production and accomplish the evils which the Senator has pointed out.

Mr. MYERS. It may be that they do; but, if so, that should be remedied; of course, there should be a remedy found for both evils. I shall be pleased, so soon as I may get the opportunity, to read the article to which the Senator from Oklahoma refers.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. KING. Apropos of what the Senator from Oklahoma has just stated, I was interested to read the other day that a number of labor leaders—I do not mean the highest leaders of the organization—opposed the profit-sharing plan, and stated that the employees as a rule did not care for a share in the profits, but were more interested in getting a higher wage and satisfactory hours. I asked one laboring man why the unions did not care to share in the profits, and he said that he believed if the profit-sharing plan were adopted it would lead to a disintegration of the unions, and he believed that many of the leaders of the unions were violently opposed to the profit-sharing plan because, as he stated, it would lead to the destruction of the unions.

Mr. OWEN. If the Senator from Montana will permit me, it would have the effect, undoubtedly, to abate the necessity for leadership when labor was perfectly well satisfied. If it were a participant and shared in the profits, and if in that way it secured abundant reward, there would be no need for organized warfare between capital and labor.

Mr. MYERS. The railroad employees object to participation in profits. A scheme of that kind was provided for in the Cummins railroad bill, but the representatives of the railroad brotherhoods appeared before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, which is considering the bill, and objected to it; and I believe the provision has been or will be stricken out on their objection. Undoubtedly for years and years capital and employers abused their privileges and were tyrannical to a great degree; and not only that, but were rapacious, greedy, and dishonest, and through trusts and monopolies restricted production and fixed prices to such an extent that the public suffered. This continued until the public sentiment of the country rebelled and such a state of feeling was aroused that Congress enacted laws to curb much of that rapacity; and it is by law curbed to-day to a great extent. But as between capital and labor, I do not believe in curbing one and letting the other run riot and unbridled, to work havoc, without any restraint, just because it has the most votes. Both should be made amenable to the law. Labor, as well as capital, should be restrained when indulging in unwholesome excess. I believe the welfare of the people should be considered in connection with both. The rights of the people are paramount to both. Neither should be exempt from the restraining hand of law.

I believe the demand made by the bituminous-coal miners of the country is the most monstrous demand that ever was made upon the industries of this country. They have threatened, if their demands are not granted in toto, 100 per cent, that they will strike on the 1st day of November; go out and tie up the mines of the country on the eve of winter; freeze the people of this country into submission to their tyrannical demands; and not only freeze them, but starve them into submission; for if the coal mines are closed, not only will people freeze, but it will result in starvation, because the railroads can not run without coal. If the railroads can not get coal, there will be no transportation of food from one section of the country to another. I believe the threat of the bituminous-coal miners of the country to strike on the 1st of November, unless they can obtain their outrageous demands in full, is the most brutal threat that ever was made against the people of this country. It is so brutal, merciless, tyrannical, as to be absolutely shocking.

What is causing the high cost of living more than anything else is such outrageous demands for increase in wages and shortened hours and the brutal threat to freeze and starve the people of the country into submission. There are elements of organized labor that seem to think they have a strangle hold on the throat of the country, and apparently they believe in strangling while the strangling is good; and I believe the strangling is good right now. At any rate, it is merrily going on with very little resistance. Here we have the cause of the high cost of living, in the main, in this country, in my opinion.

If the farmers of the country should all adopt an eight-hour day, or a day with any other limit, or if they should restrict their acreage and say, "We will only put in half of the acreage of wheat, corn, cotton, and other necessities of life which we did last year," they could freeze and starve the country into submission to almost any demand they might make or precipitate civil war or a revolution. Happily, though, I am very glad to say the farmers are not doing that. They are taking a more patriotic stand. They limit neither hours of labor nor acreage.

There is another feature of this matter that I do not like, that does not appeal favorably to me. The employees of the Post Office Department are thoroughly organized, and they are nearly all affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, thus giving their moral support to every strike their fellow labor unions precipitate. Strikes lessen production. Thus these Federal employees encourage lessened production and help make hard times and high cost of living. It has been reliably stated that the American Federation of Labor will in a few days call upon each and every member of every union in the country to contribute so much per month for strike benefits for the striking steel workers, the object being to raise a benefit fund of $2,000,000 a month in order to keep up the steel strike, which has already resulted in lawlessness, rioting, defiance of the constituted authorities, and martial law, and which is resulting in industrial paralysis, stagnation, shortage of production, and consequent high cost of living. If that report be true, I suppose that each postal employee of the country who is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor will in a short time be taking a part of the money which this country appropriates for his support, possibly a part of the $38,000,000 which this measure calls for, and paying it to the striking steel workers in order to keep up this strike, which is proving so disastrous to the industry and welfare of the country.

If the bituminous coal miners of the country carry out their threat and go on a strike on the 1st day of November, on the eve of winter, in order to freeze and starve the people of the country into submission to their outrageous demands, I have no doubt the American Federation of Labor will back the strike, and will call upon every member of the American Federation of Labor in the country to contribute so much per capita per month as strike benefits to the striking coal miners; and if that be done I suppose every postal employee of the Government who is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor will, in a little more than a month from now, be contributing a part of this very $38,000,000, if we give it to them—a part of the money voted to them by Congress, the money of the taxpayers—as strike benefits to the striking coal miners of the country, in an effort to help freeze and starve the people of this country; the people whose money they take, the people who are feeding them.

Now, that I do not like nor the prospect of it. It would not be right. I do not believe a Federal employee should be affiliated with any superior body of organized labor. There has been much said in defense of their claim of right to do so. It is said that it results in no conflicting obligation; that it does not conflict with their duties to their Government; and yet I claim that it may. Circumstances may arise where there would be a conflict of allegiance and of duty, and it comes about in instances just like those of which I have been speaking. It comes about, I think, in such an instance as the steel strike. If Federal employees who are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor take a part of the money which is voted them by Congress for their support, part of the taxpayers' money, and devote it to keeping up the steel strike I think they are doing an injustice to the people of their country and to their Government; and if the bituminous coal miners of the country carry out their brutal threat and strike on the 1st of November, in order to freeze and starve the people of this country, and if that strike should be backed by the American Federation of Labor, and every Government employee who is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor should be called upon to pay so much per month out of his salary to support that strike and thereby aid in starving and freezing the people of the country, I think it would be radically wrong and would result in violation of obligations and duties that would be most serious. I think that would be biting the hand that feeds them, that votes money to support them. I believe the Federal employees' unions that are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor should withdraw their affiliation from the American Federation of Labor, just as I understand the policemen's union of the District of Columbia has done, and I think, if true as reported, has done very properly and wisely.

There can be, I think, no serious objection to Federal employees, whether they be policemen or any other class of employees, having their own organization, their own union, to meet and consult about their common good and welfare, and to present requests to Congress for increase of wages or other concessions that they may deem due them; to act by united and concerted action, and present their grievances to the heads of departments and to committees of Congress. I can see no sound objection to that, but I do not believe that they ought to be affiliated with any higher body of organized labor, and I think we are confronted right now with some illustrations and possible illustrations of harm to result therefrom.

I believe, as I have said, in fair and adequate compensation to Government employees. I believe they ought to be fairly well compensated; but it seems to me it should be done in a systematic manner; it should be done once a year, and it should be done when arrangements are made to provide compensation for all. I do not believe it should be done in the midst of a fiscal year, in the face of the stout opposition of the head of the department for which the increase is asked. In this instance the proposed increase, being opposed and declared unnecessary by the Postmaster General and the First Assistant Postmaster General, I believe it would be unwise, improper, and improvident, and setting a bad example, for Congress to grant the increase. I believe the Postmaster General and the First Assistant Postmaster General know what they are talking about, and are acting in the interest of the welfare of their department and the welfare of the Government and the people of the country, when they say that $2,000,000 is all they ask for and all that ought to be appropriated.

For these reasons I shall vote against this measure.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, under the latitude permitted in debate, I desire to submit a few observations relating to present economic conditions and concerning appropriations made by Congress and the lack of appreciation upon the part of the executive and legislative branches of the Government, of the conditions of the Treasury, and the financial resources of the Government.

I have no doubt that many employees of the Government are not adequately compensated. The same may be true of millions of persons employed in private occupations. I think it can also be truthfully said that there should be a more scientific plan adopted to deal with the subject of compensation to be paid those who are employed by the Government. I doubt, however, the wisdom of engaging in general legislation to deal with the question of salaries for the employees of the Government at this particular time. The situation confronting us now is peculiar. The times are out of joint. Everything is abnormal. It could not be otherwise. The great war which shook the foundations of the world was bound to affect the industrial and economic conditions of all peoples. War demoralizes industry, dislocates every part of the economic structure, and it is impossible to readjust conditions and return to normal ways immediately after the termination of the conflict. The activities of millions of men for years were devoted to the prosecution of the war. War became the trade of the world, and whatever ministered to the destruction of human life and the overthrow of opposing armies and nations engaged the earnest attention of the people. Greatly as we were affected by the war, its effects were infinitely greater upon the other side of the Atlantic. Industry that gave employment to the people and supplied them with food and shelter were practically destroyed. Waste and dislocation existed in nearly every country of Europe. Poverty and want stalk through Europe; and to the millions who lost their lives upon the battle field there must be added millions more who went to their graves prematurely because of want and privation resulting from the terrible conflict. We suffered directly and indirectly from the sufferings in Europe. The disturbances there in the industrial and social organisms react to our disadvantage in this land. So interdependent are peoples and nations that it is impossible to disturb industrial conditions in one nation without its effect being felt to a greater or less degree throughout the world. Millions of Americans were withdrawn from gainful pursuits to engage in war activities. This necessarily affected the production of food and clothing and all other things connected with the welfare of the people.

With a diminishing output of food, clothing, and the prime necessities of life high prices in respect to those commodities were inevitable. With the great increase in the circulating medium and with the shortage in production mounting prices were to be expected, and with the rise in the level of prices there was bound to be an advance in the wage scale. In the frenzied efforts which have been made since the war to get back to a peace basis and in the earnest efforts made by farmers, manufacturers, and employers generally to increase production to meet not only the domestic but foreign demands it was impossible for wages to fall below the war level, and indeed in some instances the wages were necessarily increased. Hundreds of thousands of aliens departed from our shores, and this further resulted in scarcity of labor.

There is no question but what selfish and unpatriotic persons have taken advantage of conditions to unfairly and unjustly increase commodity prices. I think it may also be said that in some instances the workmen have also taken advantage of conditions to unduly increase their wages. It is a supreme task to stabilize conditions, to relieve the tense situation, and to guide the activities of the people along rational and safe lines. The situation calls for patience and forbearance, for sacrifice, and the highest form of patriotism. I think it would be wiser if all parties would call a halt in the effort to increase prices and increase wages. Indeed the suggestion has been made repeatedly by labor leaders, as well as by employers, that a truce be called in the demands for price advancements, and that every possible effort be made to effectuate reductions in prices, if not in wages. As the Senator from Montana and others have said, the amount of wage a person receives is not to be determined by the number of dollars paid him, but by what the amount received will purchase. The American dollar has become inflated and its purchasing power thus reduced. Prices of all of the products of toil have risen to extraordinary heights, and reductions must come if we shall have permanent prosperity and industrial peace. The efforts of all patriotic people should now be devoted to the stabilization of conditions. Strikes, lockouts, and the restriction of production all tend to aggravate the situation and make for unrest and discontent, and to augment the difficulties that will be encountered in bringing industrial peace and in maintaining unimpaired the liberties which our form of government provides.

The difficulty that is encountered whenever an attempt is made to deal with wages in one department or section is found in the fact that such increase calls for readjustment and increases in other departments and sections and activities.

A person whom I know stated that he was receiving $250 per month from the railroad. Before the war he was receiving only $100 per month. He expressed dissatisfaction with his present wage, notwithstanding the great increase since the war and since the Government took control of the railroads, because he had discovered that many persons working in the coal mines and some employed in the steel mills were receiving higher wages than those which he obtained.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] stated yesterday that the measure now before us was not a remedy and scarcely a palliative. Whenever wages are increased, such increase is seized upon as a pretext to augment the prices of every article which the wage earner is compelled to purchase. It were the part of wisdom, as I have suggested, if the manufacturer as well as the producer of the raw material, the employer and the employee, and indeed all of the people of our land, by concerted action to seek to curb these pyramidal and pyramiding prices and to emerge from the hysterical, abnormal, and feverish condition in which the Nation now finds itself. I make the prediction that the passage of this bill will lead to demands for millions of dollars of additional appropriations. I am making no criticism of those who are asking for increases. I have no doubt that there are thousands of postal employees who are insufficiently paid. I believe that there should be a reclassification of salaries—a readjustment of compensation. I am only directing attention to the abnormal conditions now existing in order that we may judge what is the wisest course to pursue to meet the exigencies which the war has produced.

I desire to briefly call the attention of the Senate to the large appropriations which are constantly being made by Congress. It is apparently a most pleasant, certainly it is an easy task, to vote money out of the Treasury of the United States. It is refreshing to find a Senator lifting his voice, as the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] has just done, in behalf of economy. I have served in this body for a little more than two years, and I recall but few instances in which there have been pleas for economy in governmental expenditures; seldom indeed has the taxpayer, upon whom the burden rests, been the object of concern or solicitude upon the part of Senators. Our principal concern, apparently, has been to get money out of the Treasury. There has been but little interest shown in ascertaining the ways and means of putting money into the Treasury. It has looked at times as if any appropriation that might be asked, if it were large enough, could receive the approval of Congress. Indeed, it has been said that the larger the appropriation the easier its passage.

The psychology of large appropriations is a phenomenon to me. The small appropriation sometimes leads to an inquiry. It may be rather irrelevant and the reply wholly insufficient, yet, as a rule, it stifles further inquiry and prevents further opposition. A huge appropriation, as I have observed, rarely provokes an inquiry and seldom results in opposition. I have sometimes thought that there was a conspiracy of silence upon the part of Senators when appropriation bills were presented to this body. The interests of the public seem to be disregarded. The taxpayer seems to be voiceless here and to be on trial with none to defend and with a court predetermined to convict. Those seeking appropriations are usually active in advocacy of their demands and eloquent speakers are ready to proclaim the virtues and necessities of the demanded appropriation. I have noticed in many instances organized efforts to obtain appropriations and it is an obvious fact that many seeking appropriations are not concerned in the source from which the money expended must come. I am glad to hear the frank and candid statement of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. On more than one occasion he has spoken in a patriotic way with respect to the problems confronting the American people. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has repeatedly challenged the attention of the country and the Senate, perhaps more so than any other man of the Senate, at least since I have been here, to the problems confronting the American people and to the profligate manner in which appropriations were made by the Federal Government. But these warnings and admonitions fall, I am afraid, upon deaf ears. We persist in our extravagances and ignore the warnings of history and the admonitions of the wise and courageous in our midst.

Mr. President, there were some unthinking people who entertained the view that the greatest dangers to be encountered by our country were those which the war produced. These same individuals fancied that with the termination of the war our Nation as well as other nations would pass from the storm into a placid and pacific sea. They failed to appreciate what history so strongly teaches—that the post-war problems and dangers are even more serious than those to be encountered when nations are at war. This seems so obvious that one can not understand how it could be controverted. When the integrity of the Government is assailed and the standard of war is raised the people come together with an earnestness and devotion not experienced in days of peace.

War produces for the moment a patriotic fervor, and a feeling of sacrifice and service that transforms individuals and nations; and so they do heroic things in a heroic way. But when peace comes the moral stimulus that led them to mighty achievement and self-abnegation seems to subside. Too often the spirit of materialism takes possession of the people; they become mercenary and selfish; greed, cupidity, and avarice find expression in individuals and nations. We are not free from this well-recognized characteristic among nations. We are exhibiting the weakness and selfishness, perhaps the cupidity and avarice, that have followed other nations and peoples in other ages after mighty contests have been concluded. I have sometimes felt that the producers of our country were too selfish and given over to profiteering. Everywhere we hear the cry that those having the power are robbing the people. Upon the one hand, it is claimed that the manufacturers are making enormous profits, that the middlemen and the retailers are robbing and plundering the people, and we hear it said by others that labor is taking advantage of the situation to make exactions that are unfair and unjust. The Senator from Montana has just referred to the reported attempts of the United Mine Workers of America. If the demands are such as have been stated by the Senator, it must be manifest to all that those making them are not concerned in the welfare of the people or of the country and are exhibiting calloused selfishness that is unworthy the just wage earner. I have no doubt that many manufacturers—many who are producing the things essential to life—are making demands for their products that are unfair and indefensible.

The world is on fire. We are not free from its scorching heat. All patriotic Americans, all who love our flag and our country, should so conduct themselve as to not add to the conflagration or increase the difficulties and dangers now confronting this Nation. While historical precedents and the experience of the past are illuminating and instructive, too often they are written in a book which is closed, if not sealed, to the eyes of the people. We forget the law of cause and effect and are unwilling to be guided by the lamp of experience, the teachings that come down from wise statesmen and prophetic leaders who have gloriously served humanity.

Because we think we are standing upon the shoulders of our fathers we believe that we have broader visions than those who lived in the past, and that we will avoid the pitfalls which were in their paths, as well as in the paths of nations. It has been said that the lamp of experience, even if we have it in our hands, is devoid of oil or if there is oil within it we are so indifferent to its worth as to refuse to light it. I am not sure that we are meeting the problems of this hour with greater courage and wisdom than that which guided our fathers and our fathers' fathers. There are some who doubt our ability to satisfactorily meet the evils of this day and to preserve our civilization of our country. I do not share this view. I am of the opinion that each succeeding age records some advancement, however slight, over the preceding one. Humanity's progress is slow; it is a long journey from the darkness of the past into the light of an effulgent and enduring civilization.

But I desire to particularly call attention to one of the evils of most, if not all, nations—that of extravagance and profligacy in dealing with public funds. We have not learned the lesson of economy. The American people, as individuals and as a people, are hopelessly extravagant. The value of money to them is unknown. Thrift is not one of our virtues. Though the people were never so prosperous and wages were never so high, I am afraid that the ultimate savings will be so insignificant as to emphasize the claim that we are an extravagant and thriftless people. The municipalities and counties and States are increasing their expenditures by millions and hundreds of millions. There is no proper ratio between expenditures and benefits and increases in population. I think American government, whether municipal, State, or Nation, is the most costly and extravagant government in the world. Economy, which is urged by all political parties, is a virtue possessed by none. The Democrats when out of power denounce the Republicans because of their profligacy and their waste of public treasure, but when in power I am afraid it is too true that they follow the unworthy footsteps of the Republican Party. When the House and the Senate at the last election were placed in the hands of the Republicans we heard the cry from hundreds of Republican orators that the extravagances of the Democrats had brought the Nation to the brink of bankruptcy, but that now the most rigid economy was to be pursued and the Nation was to be saved, the expenses of the Government were to be reduced, and reforms were to be wrought in all departments of the Federal Government.

Mr. President, these loud cries from our Republican friends seem to have been forgotten; the pledges and promises of economy and reform do not leave even an echo to remind us of these loud vociferations.

If the appropriations made since the Republicans came into power be scrutinized, one will easily be convinced that there has been no reform. There has not been even a spasm of economy. Waste and extravagance have found a place in the measures receiving approval in the legislative branch of the Government. Organized efforts have been more successful in getting money out of the Treasury under the Republican administration than when the Democrats were in power.

Indeed, I believe that there is greater rapacity and effrontery upon the part of organizations now than ever before. Every conceivable scheme is suggested for the purpose of getting Federal aid. Individuals, municipalities, and States are urged to make demands upon the Federal Treasury, and the plainest duties resting upon the sovereign States are ignored in order that the Federal Government may assume obligations which are not within its constitutional power. The Senator from Montana just asked where the money is to come from in order to satisfy the demands that are made upon the Federal Treasury. That question was propounded in the last Congress, when an appropriation bill carrying more than $400,000,000 was under consideration. The distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] replied that that was a question for the Finance Committee. In other words, it is no concern of Senators, except the members of the Finance Committee, as to how money is to be raised to meet the appropriations. Mr. President, I believe that no committee in this body has the right to ask an appropriation without fully canvassing the entire situation and ascertaining the source from which the appropriation will be made. It is a dangerous way to legislate—that is, to appropriate money without any thought of how the appropriation is to be met. This policy has led to enormous deficits in the budgets of municipalities and States and nations. If individuals were so reckless in the conduct of their private affairs they would soon be brought into the courts of bankruptcy. Whenever an appropriation is sought Senators should think of the taxes which it will impose. Whenever we spend we should know where the money is coming from with which to meet the expenditure, and the responsibility of providing the money should not be borne alone by the Finance Committee, but it should be equally shared by all Members of the Senate.

The appropriations which are being made by this Congress are so staggering and so stupendous that the taxes of the Government, in my opinion, will have to be increased, or we will have to resort to another bond issue in order to meet the deficit that our appropriations are creating.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. KING. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. MYERS. I would like to make a suggestion that I intended to make during my brief remarks, but which I overlooked. It is that President Wilson has advised that there should be no further increases of wages or salaries in any of the avocations of life until Congress has a chance to do something in regard to the high cost of living. He took that attitude in an address which he made before a joint meeting of the House and Senate a few weeks ago, at the time a strike of the railroad employees was threatened. He very plainly stated in his address to Congress at that time that it was no time for increasing wages, that people should be content to work for what they were receiving, and do the best they could until better times prevailed. It seems to me if we enact this legislation we will be departing very widely from his advice.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I would be glad if the Senator from Montana would get the address of President Wilson and read it. I think the Senator will find in it a complaint that Congress was not appropriating enough money for some purposes at least.

Mr. MYERS. I have not so understood it.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to have the address read. That would be the best evidence.

Mr. MYERS. I know that the President gave utterance to sentiments of the kind I mentioned in regard to an increase of wages.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am very glad to have the statement made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. But even if the President made that statement as broadly as was stated by the Senator, and there was no qualification of the statement, I do not think it would have the slightest effect in restraining this body from passing this and other appropriation bills which take from the Treasury of the United States.

I was just speaking about the question of taxation. I wonder if Senators reflect as to the source of money with which to meet these stupendous and staggering appropriations. We have proceeded during the past two years, in framing revenue bills, upon the theory that excess profits and incomes would furnish the overwhelming portion of the taxes that would be poured into the Federal Treasury. Mr. President, I make the prediction that with the constant strikes that are going on in our land, and the diminution in productivity in almost every activity of our country, the excess profits for the calendar year of 1920 will be much less than for 1919, and that the number who will pay an income tax during such calendar year will be less than the number who paid an income tax during the year 1919. If we fall down materially in excess profits and in incomes, it is manifest that we will be compelled to resort to other sources of taxation; we may have to lay consumption taxes upon the country, perhaps taxes upon tea, upon coffee, upon many of the things that go into the daily wants and necessities of the people.

We owe a duty to the people, and it is our sworn duty to scrutinize with the utmost care every dollar appropriated from the Public Treasury. Now, more than ever, should the most rigid economy be practiced. The example set by Congress will affect not only the municipalities and States, but will affect the people themselves. If the Government is prodigal and wasteful and grossly extravagant, its influence will be felt by the people. Its evil example will be followed by many, and it will be largely responsible for the dire consequences which will come to individuals as well as to the Nation. A proper budget system might lead to more careful consideration of appropriations and challenge our attention to the profligate way in which we spend the money wrung from the people by burdensome taxation. I repeat again, Mr. President, that we need some one to speak for the taxpayers. This bill calls for $38,000,000. It will be followed by bills calling for millions and tens of millions of dollars for increases in salaries and compensation of Federal employees. I am told that already demands are being made in many of the executive departments for additional appropriations to meet what are denominated "extraordinary conditions." We are constantly importuned to raise the salaries of the employees of the Government, because of the high cost of living or for some other reason. Many of the executive agencies and departments of the Government are demanding additional employees, though we were promised that with the termination of the war many thousands of individuals who were brought into the Government service would be separated from it.

It seems as if everyone is anxious to get money out of the Treasury and that no one is trying to lift the burdens from the taxpayers. The time has come now when we must balance our accounts. We should take stock and ascertain what our assets are, and inquire as to what our liabilities consist of. This is not a partisan matter. We are confronted with a plain business proposition. We are charged with a solemn duty to relieve the people from burdensome taxation and to cut down the expenses of the Government. We are not discharging that duty. We are increasing appropriations along many lines, and will be compelled to increase the burdens of taxation or to resort to further bond issues. I have no doubt but that the Finance Committee shrinks from the supreme task of considering a revenue bill. The members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House unquestionably appreciate the stupendous task which rests upon them.

For the current fiscal year there will be a deficit of considerably more than $2,000,000,000; perhaps it will be $3,000,000,000. It appears now that the deficit will be nearly as great as the cost of the Civil War. Notwithstanding that nearly one year has elapsed since the armistice, we are still spending hundreds of millions of dollars monthly, billions of dollars for the year; and though the taxes imposed upon the people are enormous, we will be confronted with a deficit so huge and enormous as to terrify even the most courageous financier and statesman. Mr. President, I am criticizing the executive departments of the Government and the agencies and instrumentalities of the Government which are calling for such enormous expenditures. Congress should have served notice in no unmistakable way upon the executive departments of the Government that their expenses were too great and that the most rigid economies should be practised. We have not done so, but, on the contrary, we have listened to their pleas for additional appropriations and have answered their demands to meet enormous deficits. Though there is a statute forbidding the executive departments from creating deficits, we have not only winked at the infraction of this statute but have encouraged it by making the most liberal and generous appropriations to meet deficits that covered millions and tens of millions of dollars.

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. KING. Did the Senator rise to interrupt me?

Mr. LODGE. I do not desire to take the Senator off the floor. I only rose thinking the Senator was about to conclude.

Mr. KING. We will have difficulty, Mr. President, in finding the sources of taxation to meet the expenditures of the Government. Indeed, we will be unable, in my opinion, to come within $2,000,000,000 during the coming fiscal year of raising the funds that will be required to meet the expenses of the Government if we continue in this extravagant and prodigal manner of making expenditures. It is possible a bond issue may be averted; but if so, the Treasury will be compelled to issue short-time notes to the extent of two or more billions of dollars. And if we issue bonds, where will be found purchasers for the same? The patriotic spirit which prompted millions of American citizens to purchase Government securities during the war will not reach the high tide that then was experienced. So banks will be in the end compelled to purchase the bond issues. Notwithstanding the great earnings of the people, their savings have been limited, and I do not believe the mass of the people can be expected to purchase any considerable part of any issue of bonds that may be made.

I now yield to the Senator from Massachusetts, as I understand he desires to submit a motion.

CONTROL OF FOOD PRODUCTS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the treaty with Germany in open executive session.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a conference report, and I hope the Senator will yield for a sufficient time to allow me to submit it and have it disposed of. I am sure it will take only a few minutes. It is on the bill which passed the Senate a week ago to-day, the food control and rent bill. There were only three remaining disagreements. The conferees have agreed and the House is very anxious to get the report that it may adopt it to-day.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can not the Senator bring it up in the morning hour to-morrow?

Mr. LODGE. I regret very much, but I do not think I ought to yield for any purpose now.

Mr. KING. I yielded to the Senator from Massachusetts for the purpose of submitting a motion which I understand has precedence.

Mr. LODGE. I have submitted the motion.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask the Senator if he will yield long enough to enable me to present the report and have it printed in the RECORD?

Mr. LODGE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. GRONNA. I was in hopes that the report could be disposed of to-day, but as I can not get consideration now, I submit it and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8624) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel,' approved August 10, 1917," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "section 1;" and, on page 1, after line 2, of the engrossed bill insert the following:

"That this act may be cited as 'the food control and the District of Columbia rents act.'

"Title I. Food control act amendments."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Title II. District of Columbia rents.

"SEC. 101. When used in this title, unless the context indicates otherwise—

"The term 'rental property' means any building or part thereof or land appurtenant thereto in the District of Columbia rented or hired and the service agreed or required by law or by determination of the commission to be furnished in connection therewith; but does not include an hotel or apartment.

"The term 'person' includes an individual, partnership, association, or corporation.

"The term 'hotel' or 'apartment' means any hotel or apartment or part thereof, in the District of Columbia, rented or hired and the land and outbuildings appurtenant thereto, and the service agreed or required by law or by determination of the commission to be furnished in connection therewith.

"The term 'owner' includes a lessor or sublessor, or other person entitled to receive rent or charges for the use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel or apartment, or any interest therein, or his agent.

"The term 'tenant' includes a subtenant, lessee, sublessee or other person, not the owner, entitled to the use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel or apartment.

"The term 'service' includes the furnishing of light, heat, water, telephone or elevator service, furniture, furnishings, window shades, screens, awnings, storage, kitchen, bath and laundry facilities and privileges, maid service, janitor service, removal of refuse, making all repairs suited to the type of building or necessitated by ordinary wear and tear, and any other privilege or service connected with the use or occupancy of any rental property, apartment or hotel.

"The term 'commission' means the rent commission of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 102. A commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the rent commission of the District of Columbia, which shall be composed of three commissioners, none of whom shall be directly or indirectly engaged in, or in any manner interested in or connected with, the real estate or renting business in the District of Columbia. The commissioners shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The term of each commissioner shall be two years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he succeeds. The commission shall at the time of its organization and annually thereafter elect a chairman from its own membership. The commission may make such regulations as may be necessary to carry this title into effect.

"All powers and duties of the commission may be exercised by a majority of its members. A vacancy in the commission shall not impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the commission. The commission shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

"SEC. 103. Each commissioner shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year, payable monthly. The commission shall appoint a secretary, who shall receive a salary of $3,000 a year, payable in like manner; and, subject to the provisions of the civil-service laws, it may appoint and remove such officers, employees, and agents and make such expenditures for rent, printing, telegrams, telephone, law books, books of reference, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, and other supplies and expenses as may be necessary to the administration of this title. All of the expenditures of the commission shall upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the commission be audited and paid in the same manner as other expenditures for the District of Columbia.

"With the exception of the secretary, all employees of the commission shall be appointed from lists of eligibles supplied by the Civil Service Commission and in accordance with the civil-service law.

"SEC. 104. The assessor of the District of Columbia shall serve ex officio as an advisory assistant to the commission, but he shall have none of the powers or duties of a commissioner. He shall attend the meetings and hearings of the commission. Every officer or employee of the United States or of the District of Columbia, whenever requested by the commission, shall supply to the commission any data or information pertaining to the administration of this title which may be contained in the records of his office. The assessor shall receive for the performance of the duties required by this section a salary of $1,000 per annum, payable monthly, in addition to such other salary as may be prescribed for his office by law.

"SEC. 105. For the purpose of this title the commission or any officer, employee, or agent duly authorized in writing by it, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy, any books, accounts, records, papers, or correspondence relating to any matter which the commission is authorized to consider or investigate; and the commission shall have power to require by subpœna the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all such books, accounts, records, papers, and correspondence relating to any such matter. Any member of the commission may sign subpœnas, administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence.

"Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such books, accounts, records, papers, and correspondence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. In case of disobedience to a subpœna or of the contumacy of any witness appearing before the commission, the commission may invoke the aid of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia or of any district court of the United States. Such court may thereupon issue an order requiring the person subpœnaed to obey the subpœna, or to give evidence touching the matter in question. Any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. No officer or employee of the commission shall, unless authorized by the commission or by a court of competent jurisdiction, make public any information obtained by the commission.

"SEC. 106. For the purposes of this title it is declared that all (a) rental property and (b) apartments and hotels are affected with a public interest, and that all rents and charges therefor, all service in connection therewith, and all other terms and conditions of the use or occupancy thereof, shall be fair and reasonable; and any unreasonable or unfair provision of a lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of such rental property, apartment, or hotel with respect to such rents, charges, service, terms, or conditions is hereby declared to be contrary to public policy. The commission upon its own initiative may, or upon complaint shall, determine whether the rent, charges, service, and other terms or conditions of a lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of any such rental property, hotel, or apartment are fair and reasonable. Such complaints may be made (a) by or on behalf of any tenant, and (b) by any owner except where the tenant is in possession under a lease or other contract, the term specified in which has not expired, and the fairness and reasonableness of which has not been determined by the commission.

"In all such cases the commission shall give notice personally or by registered mail and afford an opportunity to be heard to all parties in interest. The commission shall promptly hear and determine the issues involved in all complaints submitted to it. All hearings before the commission shall be open to the public. If the commission determines that such rents, charges, service, or other terms or conditions are unfair or unreasonable, it shall determine and fix such fair and reasonable rent or charges therefor, and / or fair and reasonable service, terms, and conditions of use or occupancy. In any suit in any court of the United States or the District of Columbia involving any question arising out of the relation of landlord and tenant with respect to any rental property, apartment, or hotel, except an appeal from the commission's determination as provided in this title, such court shall determine the rights and duties of the parties in accordance with the determination and regulations of the commission relevant thereto.

"SEC. 107. A determination of the commission fixing a fair and reasonable rent or charge made in a proceeding begun by complaint shall be effective from the date of the filing of the complaint. The difference between the amount of rent and charges paid for the period from the filing of the complaint to the date of the commission's determination and the amount that would have been payable for such period at the fair and reasonable rate fixed by the commission may be added to or subtracted from, as the case demands, future rent payments, or after the final decision of an appeal from the commission's determination may be sued for and recovered in an action in the municipal court of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 108. Unless within 10 days after the filing of the commission's determination any party to the complaint appeals therefrom to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, the determination of the commission shall be final and conclusive. If such an appeal is taken from the determination of the commission, the record before the commission or such part thereof as the court may order shall be certified by it to the court and shall constitute the record before the court, and the commission's determination shall not be modified or set aside by the court, except for error of law. If any party applies to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shows to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material, and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the court may deem proper. The commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which shall be conclusive, and its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original determination, with the return of such additional evidence. In the proceedings before such court on appeal from a determination of the commission, the commission shall appear by its counsel or other representative and submit oral or written arguments to support the findings and the determination of the commission.

"SEC. 109. The right of a tenant to the use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel, or apartment, existing at the time this act takes effect, or thereafter acquired, under any lease or other contract for such use or occupancy or under any extension thereof by operation of law, shall, notwithstanding the expiration of the term fixed by such lease or contract, continue at the option of the tenant subject, however, to any determination or regulation of the commission relevant thereto; and such tenant shall not be evicted or dispossessed so long as he pays the rent and performs the other terms and conditions of the tenancy as fixed by such lease or contract, or in case such lease or contract is modified by any determination or regulation of the commission, then as fixed by such modified lease or contract. All remedies of the owner at law or equity, based on any provision of any such lease or contract to the effect that such lease or contract shall be determined or forfeited if the premises are sold, are hereby suspended so long as this title is in force. Every purchaser shall take conveyance of any rental property, hotel, or apartment subject to the rights of tenants as provided in this title. The rights of the tenant under this title shall be subject to the limitation that the bona fide owner of any rental property, apartment, or hotel shall have the right to possession thereof for actual and bona fide occupancy by himself, or his wife, children, or dependents, or for the purpose of tearing down or razing the same in order immediately to construct new rental property, hotel, or apartment, if approved by the commission, upon giving 30 days' notice in writing, served in the manner provided by section 1223 of the act entitled 'An act to establish a code of laws for the District of Columbia,' approved May 3, 1901, as amended, which notice shall contain a full and correct statement of the facts and circumstances upon which the same is based; but in no case shall possession be demanded or obtained by such owner in contravention of the terms of any such lease or contract. If there is a dispute between the owner and the tenant as to the accuracy or sufficiency of the statement set forth in such notice, as to the good faith of such demand, or as to the service of notice, the matters in dispute shall be determined by the commission upon complaint as provided in section 106 of this title.

"SEC. 110. Pending the final decision on appeal from a determination of the commission, the commission's determination shall be in full force and effect and the appeal shall not operate as a supersedeas or in any manner stay or postpone the enforcement of the determination appealed from. Immediately upon the entry of a final decision on the appeal the commission shall, if necessary, modify its determination in order to make it conform to such decision. The difference, if any, between the amount of rent and charges paid for the period from the date of the filing by the commission of the determination appealed from and the amount that would have been payable for such period under the determination as modified in accordance with the final decision on appeal may be added to or allowed on account of, as the case demands, future rent payments or may be sued for and recovered in an action in the municipal court in the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 111. The determination of the commission in a proceeding begun by complaint or upon its own initiative fixing fair and reasonable rents, charges, service, and other terms and conditions of use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel, or apartment shall constitute the commission's determination of the fairness and reasonableness of such rents, charges, service, terms, or conditions for the rental property, hotel, or apartment affected, and shall remain in full force and effect notwithstanding any change in ownership or tenancy thereof, unless and until the commission modifies or sets aside such determination upon complaint either of the owner or of the tenant.

"SEC. 112. If the owner of any rental property, apartment, or hotel collects any rent or charge therefor in excess of the amount fixed in a determination of the commission made and in full force and effect in accordance with the provisions of this title, he shall be liable for and the commission is hereby authorized and directed to commence an action in the municipal court in the District of Columbia to recover double the amount of such excess, together with the costs of the proceeding which shall include an attorney's fee of $50, to be taxed as part of the costs. Out of any sums received on account of such recovery the commission shall pay over to the tenant the amount of the excess so paid by him and the balance shall be paid into the treasury of the District of Columbia: Provided, That if the commission finds that such excess was paid by the tenant voluntarily and with knowledge of the commission's determination, the whole amount of such recovery shall be paid into the treasury of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 113. If in any proceeding before the commission, begun by complaint or on the commission's own initiative, and involving any lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel, or apartment the commission finds that at any time after the passage of this act but during the tenancy the owner has, directly or indirectly, willfully withdrawn from the tenant any service agreed or required by a determination of the commission to be furnished, or has by act, neglect, or omission contrary to such lease or contract or to the law or any ordinance or regulation made in pursuance of law, or of a determination of the commission, exposed the tenant, directly or indirectly, to any unsafe or insanitary condition or imposed upon him any burden, loss, or unusual inconvenience in connection with his use or occupancy of such rental property, hotel, or apartment, the commission shall determine the sum which in its judgment will fairly and reasonably compensate or reimburse the tenant therefor. In any such proceeding involving a lease or other contract, the term specified in which had not expired at the time the proceeding was begun, the commission shall likewise determine the amount or value of any bonus or other consideration in excess of the rental named in such lease or contract received at any time directly or indirectly by the owner in connection with such lease or contract. The tenant may recover any amount so determined by the commission in an action in the municipal court of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 114. Whenever under this title a tenant is entitled to bring suit to recover any sum due him under any determination of the commission, the commission shall, upon application by the tenant and without expense to him, commence and prosecute in the municipal court of the District of Columbia an action on behalf of the tenant for the recovery of the amount due, and in such case the court shall include in any judgment rendered in favor of the tenant the costs of the action, including a reasonable attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court. Such costs and attorney's fee when recovered shall be paid into the treasury of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 115. The commission shall, by general order, from time to time prescribe the procedure to be followed in all proceedings under its jurisdiction. Such procedure shall be as simple and summary as may be practicable, and the commission and parties appearing before it shall not be bound by technical rules of evidence or of pleading.

"SEC. 116. Any person who with intent to avoid the provisions of this title enters into any agreement or arrangement for the payment of any bonus or other consideration in connection with any lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel, or apartment, or who participates in any fictitious sale or other device or arrangement the purpose of which is to grant or obtain the use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel, or apartment without subjecting such use or occupancy to the provisions of this title or to the jurisdiction of the commission shall upon conviction be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment for not exceeding one year, or by both.

"SEC. 117. The commission shall prescribe standard forms of leases and other contracts for the use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel, or apartment and shall require their use by the owner thereof. Every such lease or contract entered into after the commission has prescribed and promulgated a form for the tenancy provided by such lease or contract shall be deemed to accord with such standard form; and any such lease or contract in any proceeding before the commission or in any court of the United States or of the District of Columbia shall be interpreted, applied, and enforced in the same manner as if it were in the form and contained the stipulations of such standard form.

"The owner of an hotel or apartment shall file with the commission plans and other data in such detail as the commission requires, descriptive of the rooms, accommodations, and service in connection with such hotel or apartment, and a schedule of rates and charges therefor. The commission shall, after consideration of such plans, schedules, data, or other information, determine and fix a schedule of fair and reasonable rates and charges for such hotels or apartments; and the rates and charges stated in such schedule shall thereafter constitute the fair and reasonable rates and charges for such hotel or apartment. The commission's determination in such case shall be made after such notice and hearing and shall have the same force and effect and be subject to appeal in the same manner as a determination of the commission under section 106 of this title.

"SEC. 118. No tenant shall assign his lease of or sublet any rental property or apartment at a rate in excess of the rate paid by him under his lease without the consent of the commission upon application in a particular case, and in such case the commission shall determine a fair and reasonable rate of rent for charge for such assignment or sublease.

"SEC. 119. The public resolution entitled 'Joint resolution to prevent profiteering in the District of Columbia,' approved May 31, 1918, as amended, is hereby repealed, to take effect 60 days after the date of the confirmation by the Senate of the commissioners first nominated by the President under the provisions of this title; but a determination by the commission made within such period of 60 days shall be enforced in accordance with the provisions of this title, notwithstanding the provisions of such public resolution. All laws or parts of laws in conflict with any provision of this title are hereby suspended so long as this title is in force to the extent that they are in such conflict.

"SEC. 120. The sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated and made immediately available to carry out the provisions of this title, one-half thereof to be paid out of money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated and the other one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 121. If any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this title shall be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operations to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

"SEC. 122. It is hereby declared that the provisions of this title are made necessary by emergencies growing out of the war with the Imperial German Government, resulting in rental conditions in the District of Columbia dangerous to the public health and burdensome to public officers and employees whose duties require them to reside within the District and other persons whose activities are essential to the maintenance and comfort of such officers and employees, and thereby embarrassing the Federal Government in the transaction of the public business. It is also declared that this title shall be considered temporary legislation, and that it shall terminate on the expiration of two years from the date of the passage of this act, unless sooner repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"To amend an act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel,' approved August 10, 1917, and to regulate rents in the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

A. J. GRONNA,
HOKE SMITH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
G. N. HAUGEN,
J. C. MCLAUGHLIN,
THOS. L. RUBEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the question be put on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany in open executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany.

Mr. NORRIS addressed the Senate. After having spoken for more than three hours,

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if it will not interrupt the Senator, I do not know how near the conclusion of his speech he may be, but if he desires to yield the floor and finish to-morrow we can take up the treaty and read it now. He has been speaking for about three hours.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I have been speaking for over three hours, and I am a little tired. I could go on for two or three hours longer, but I shall not be able to finish to-night.

Mr. LODGE. Then, if the Senator is willing, he will yield the floor for to-day.

Mr. NORRIS. I am willing to do so.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the following agreement:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that the Senate will now proceed to the reading of the treaty of peace with Germany, subject to speeches and debate upon the treaty; that the so-called "Shantung amendments" (sec. 8, arts. 156, 157, and 158) be passed over until the calendar day of Wednesday, October 15, 1919, to be considered then in block, and that if during the reading of the treaty amendments numbered 45 and 46, on page 261, are reached, they also shall be passed over, to be considered subsequent to and next after the Shantung amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the adoption of the order as read by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. I now ask that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. I now ask that the reading of the treaty may be continued under the unanimous-consent agreement just entered into. I desire to speak briefly on the Shantung amendment myself, but it is so late to-night that I shall not undertake to do so until to-morrow. To-morrow I shall wish to speak upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the order, the Secretary will proceed with the reading of the treaty.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the treaty at the top of page 191, part 5, and read as follows:

"PART V.

"MILITARY, NAVAL AND AIR CLAUSES.

"In order to render possible the initiation of a general limitation of the armaments of all nations, Germany undertakes strictly to observe the military, naval and air clauses which follow.

"Section I.

"MILITARY CLAUSES.

"Chapter I.

"EFFECTIVES AND CADRES OF THE GERMAN ARMY.

"Article 159.

"The German military forces shall be demobilized and reduced as prescribed hereinafter.

"Article 160.

"(1) By a date which must not be later than March 31, 1920, the German Army must not comprise more than seven divisions of infantry and three divisions of cavalry.

"After that date the total number of effectives in the Army of the States constituting Germany must not exceed one hundred thousand men, including officers and establishments of depots. The Army shall be devoted exclusively to the miantenance of order within the territory and to the control of the frontiers.

"The total effective strength of officers, including the personnel of staffs, whatever their composition, must not exceed four thousand.

"(2) Divisions and Army Corps headquarters staffs shall be organized in accordance with Table No. I annexed to this Section.

"The number and strengths of the units of infantry, artillery, engineers, technical services and troops laid down in the aforesaid Table constitute maxima which must not be exceeded.

"The following units may each have their own depot:

"An Infantry regiment;

"A Cavalry regiment;

"A regiment of Field Artillery;

"A battalion of Pioneers.

"(3) The divisions must not be grouped under more than two army corps headquarters staffs.

"The maintenance or formation of forces differently grouped or of other organisations for the command of troops or for preparation far war is forbidden.

"The Great German General Staff and all similar organisations shall be dissolved and may not be reconstituted in any form.

"The officers, or persons in the position of officers, in the Ministries of War in the different States in Germany and in the Administrations attached to them, must not exceed three hundred in number and are included in the maximum strength of four thousand laid down in the third sub-paragraph of paragraph (1) of this Article.

"Article 161.

"Army administrative services consisting of civilian personnel not included in the number of effectives prescribed by the present Treaty will have such personnel reduced in each class to one-tenth of that laid down in the Budget of 1913.

"Article 162.

"The number of employees or officials of the German States, such as customs officers, forest guards and coastguards, shall not exceed that of the employees or officials functioning in these capacities in 1913.

"The number of gendarmes and employees or officials of the local or municipal police may only be increased to an extent corresponding to the increase of population since 1913 in the districts or municipalities in which they are employed.

"These employees and officials may not be assembled for military training.

"Article 163.

"The reduction of the strength of the German military forces as provided for in Article 160 may be effected gradually in the following manner:

"Within three months from the coming into force of the present Treaty the total number of effectives must be reduced to 200,000 and the number of units must not exceed twice the number of those laid down in Article 160.

"At the expiration of this period, and at the end of each subsequent period of three months, a Conference of military experts of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers will fix the reductions to be made in the ensuing three months, so that by March 31, 1920, at the latest the total number of German effectives does not exceed the maximum number of 100,000 men laid down in Article 160. In these successive reductions the same ratio between the number of officers and of men, and between the various kinds of units, shall be maintained as is laid down in that Article.

"Chapter II.

"ARMAMENT, MUNITIONS AND MATERIAL.

"Article 164.

"Up till the time at which Germany is admitted as a member of the League of Nations the German Army must not possess an armament greater than the amounts fixed in Table No. II annexed to this Section, with the exception of an optional increase not exceeding one-twentyfifth part for small arms and one-fiftieth part for guns, which shall be exclusively used to provide for such eventual replacements as may be necessary.

"Germany agrees that after she has become a member of the League of Nations the armaments fixed in the said Table shall remain in force until they are modified by the Council of the League. Furthermore she hereby agrees strictly to observe the decisons of the Council of the League on this subject.

"Article 165.

"The maximum number of guns, machine guns, trench-mortars, rifles and the amount of ammunition and equipment which Germany is allowed to maintain during the period between the coming into force of the present Treaty and the date of March 31, 1920, referred to in Article 160, shall bear the same proportion to the amount authorized in Table No. III annexed to this Section as the strength of the German Army as reduced from time to time in accordance with Article 163 bears to the strength permitted under Article 160.

"Article 166.

"At the date of March 31, 1920, the stock of munitions which the German Army may have at its disposal shall not exceed the amounts fixed in Table No. III annexed to this Section.

"Within the same period the German Government will store these stocks at points to be notified to the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers. The German Government is forbidden to establish any other stocks, depots or reserves of munitions.

"Article 167.

"The number and calibre of the guns constituting at the date of the coming into force of the present Treaty the armament of the fortified works, fortresses, and any land or coast forts which Germany is allowed to retain must be notified immediately by the German Government to the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, and will constitute maximum amounts which may not be exceeded.

"Within two months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, the maximum stock of ammunition for these guns will be reduced to, and maintained at, the following uniform rates:—fifteen hundred rounds per piece for those the calibre of which is 10.5 cm. and under: five hundred rounds per piece for those of higher calibre.

"Article 168.

"The manufacture of arms, munitions, or any war material, shall only be carried out in factories or works the location of which shall be communicated to and approved by the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, and the number of which they retain the right to restrict.

"Within three months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, all other establishments for the manufacture, preparation, storage or design of arms, munitions, or any war material whatever shall be closed down. The same applies to all arsenals except those used as depots for the authorised stocks of munitions. Within the same period the personnel of these arsenals will be dismissed.

"Article 169.

"Within two months from the coming into force of the present Treaty German arms, munitions and war material, including anti-aircraft material, existing in Germany in excess of the quantities allowed, must be surrendered to the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers to be destroyed or rendered useless. This will also apply to any special plant intended for the manufacture of military material, except such as may be recognised as necessary for equipping the authorised strength of the German army.

"The surrender in question will be effected at such points in German territory as may be selected by the said Governments.

"Within the same period arms, munitions and war material, including anti-aircraft material, of origin other than German, in whatever state they may be, will be delivered to the said Governments, who will decide as to their disposal.

"Arms and munitions which on account of the successive reductions in the strength of the German army become in excess of the amounts authorized by Tables II and III annexed to this Section must be handed over in the manner laid down above within such periods as may be decided by the Conferences referred to in Article 163.

"Article 170.

"Importation into Germany of arms, munitions and war material of every kind shall be strictly prohibited.

"The same applies to the manufacture for, and export to, foreign countries of arms, munitions and war material of every kind.

"Article 171.

"The use of asphyxiating, poisonous or other gases and all analogous liquids, materials or devices being prohibited, their manufacture and importation are strictly forbidden in Germany.

"The same applies to materials specially intended for the manufacture, storage and use of the said products or devices.

"The manufacture and the importation into Germany of armoured cars, tanks and all similar constructions suitable for use in war are also prohibited.

"Article 172.

"Within a period of three months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, the German Government will disclose to the Governments of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers the nature and mode of manufacture of all explosives, toxic substances or other like chemical preparations used by them in the war or prepared by them for the purpose of being so used.

"Chapter III.

"RECRUITING AND MILITARY TRAINING.

"Article 173.

"Universal compulsory military service shall be abolished in Germany.

"The German Army may only be constituted and recruited by means of voluntary enlistment.

"Article 174.

"The period of enlistment for non-commissioned officers and privates must be twelve consecutive years.

"The number of men discharged for any reason before the expiration of their term of enlistment must not exceed in any year five per cent. of the total effectives fixed by the second sub-paragraph of paragraph (1) of Article 160 of the present Treaty.

"Article 175.

"The officers who are retained in the Army must undertake the obligation to serve in it up to the age of forty-five years at least.

"Officers newly appointed must undertake to serve on the active list for twenty-five consecutive years at least.

"Officers who have previously belonged to any formations whatever of the Army, and who are not retained in the units allowed to be maintained, must not take part in any military exercise whether theoretical or practical, and will not be under any military obligations whatever.

"The number of officers discharged for any reason before the expiration of their term of service must not exceed in any year five per cent of the total effectives of officers provided for in the third sub-paragraph (1) of Article 160 of the present Treaty.

"Article 176.

"On the expiration of two months from the coming into force of the present Treaty there must only exist in Germany the number of military schools which is absolutely indispensable for the recruitment of the officers of the units allowed. These schools will be exclusively intended for the recruitment of officers of each arm, in the proportion of one school per arm.

"The number of students admitted to attend the courses of the said schools will be strictly in proportion to the vacancies to be filled in the cadres of officers. The students and the cadres will be reckoned in the effectives fixed by the second and third sub-paragraphs of paragraph (1) of Article 160 of the present Treaty.

"Consequently, and during the period above fixed, all military academies or similar institutions in Germany, as well as the different military schools for officers, student officers (Aspiranten), cadets, non-commissioned officers or student non-commissioned officers (Aspiranten), other than the schools above provided for, will be abolished.

"Article 177.

"Educational establishments, the universities, societies of discharged soldiers, shooting or touring clubs and, generally speaking, associations of every description, whatever be the age of their members, must not occupy themselves with any military matters.

"In particular they will be forbidden to instruct or exercise their members, or to allow them to be instructed or exercised, in the profession or use of arms.

"These societies, associations, educational establishments and universities must have no connection with the Ministries of War or any other military authority.

"Article 178.

"All measures of mobilization or appertaining to mobilization are forbidden.

"In no case must formations, administrative services or General Staffs include supplementary cadres.

"Article 179.

"Germany agrees, from the coming into force of the present Treaty, not to accredit nor to send to any foreign country any military, naval or air mission, nor to allow any such mission to leave her territory, and Germany further agrees to take appropriate measures to prevent German nationals from leaving her territory to become enrolled in the Army, Navy or Air service of any foreign Power, or to be attached to such Army, Navy or Air service for the purpose of assisting in the military, naval or air training thereof, or otherwise for the purpose of giving military, naval or air instruction in any foreign country.

"The Allied and Associated Powers agree, so far as they are concerned, from the coming into force of the present Treaty, not to enroll in nor to attach to their armies or naval or air forces any German national for the purpose of assisting in the military training of such armies or naval or air forces, or otherwise to employ any such German national as military, naval or aeronautic instructor.

"The present provision does not, however, affect the right of France to recruit for the Foreign Legion in accordance with French military laws and regulations.

"Chapter IV.

"FORTIFICATIONS.

"Article 180.

"All fortified works, fortresses and field works situated in German territory to the west of a line drawn fifty kilometres to the east of the Rhine shall be disarmed and dismantled.

"Within a period of two months from the coming into force of the present Treaty such of the above fortified works, fortresses and field works as are situated in territory not occupied by Allied and Associated troops shall be disarmed, and within a further period of four months they shall be dismantled. Those which are situated in territory occupied by Allied and Associated troops shall be disarmed and dismantled within such periods as may be fixed by the Allied High Command.

"The construction of any new fortification, whatever its nature and importance, is forbidden in the zone referred to in the first paragraph above.

"The system of fortified works of the southern and eastern frontiers of Germany shall be maintained in its existing state.

"Table No. I.

"State and establishment of army corps headquarters staffs and of infantry and cavalry divisions.

"These tabular statements do not form a fixed establishment to be imposed on Germany, but the figures contained in them (number of units and strengths) represent maximum figures, which should not in any case be exceeded.

"I.—ARMY CORPS HEADQUARTERS STAFFS.

Unit.	Maximum No. authorised.	Maximum strengths of each unit.
		Officers.	N.C.O.'s and Men.
Army Corps Headquarters Staff	2	30	150
Total for Headquarters Staffs	.....	60	300

"II. ESTABLISHMENT OF AN INFANTRY DIVISION.

Unit.	Maximum No of such units in a single division.	Maximum strengths of each unit.
		Officers.	N. C. O.'s and men.
Headquarters of an infantry division	1	25	70
Headquarters of divisional infantry	1	4	30
Headquarters of divisional artillery	1	4	30
Regiment of infantry	3	70	2,300
(Each regiment comprises 3 battalions of infantry. Each battalion comprises 3 companies of infantry and 1 machine-gun company.)
Trench mortar company	3	6	150
Divisional squadron	1	6	150
Field artillery regiment	1	85	1,300
(Each regiment comprises 3 groups of artillery. Each group comprises 3 batteries.)
Pioneer battalion	1	12	400
(This battalion comprises 2 companies of pioneers, 1 pontoon detachment, 1 searchlight section.)
Signal detachment	1	12	300
(This detachment comprises 1 telephone detachment, 1 listening section, 1 carrier pigeon section.)
Divisional medical service	1	20	400
Parks and convoys	.....	14	800
Total for infantry division	.....	410	10,830

"III. ESTABLISHMENT OF A CAVALRY DIVISION.

Unit.	Maximum No. of such units in a single division.	Maximum strengths of each unit.
		Officers.	N. C. O.'s and men.
Headquarters of a cavalry division	1	15	50
Cavalry regiment	6	40	800
(Each regiment comprises 4 squadrons.)
Horse artillery group (3 batteries)	1	20	400
Total for cavalry division	.....	275	5,250

"Table No. II.

"Tabular statement of armament establishment for a maximum of seven Infantry divisions, three Cavalry divisions, and two army corps headquarters staffs.

Material.	Infantry division. (1)	For 7 Infantry divisions. (2)	Cavalry division. (3)	For 3 cavalry divisions. (4)	Two army corps headquarters staffs. (5)	Total of columns 2, 4, and 5. (6)
Rifles	12,000	84,000	.....	.....	This establishment must be drawn from the increased armaments of the divisional infantry.	84,000
Carbines	.....	.....	6,000	18,000		18,000
Heavy machine guns	108	756	12	36		792
Light machine guns	162	1,134	.....	.....		1,134
Medium trench mortars	9	63	.....	.....		63
Light trench mortars	27	189	.....	.....		189
7.7-cm. guns	24	168	12	36		204
10.5-cm. howitzers	12	84	.....	.....		84

"Table No. III.

"Maximum stocks authorised.

Material.	Maximum number of arms authorised.	Establishment, per unit.	Maximum, totals.
		Rounds.	Rounds.
Rifles	84,000	400	40,800,000
Carbines	18,000
Heavy machine guns	792	8,000	15,408,000
Light machine guns	1,134
Medium trench mortars	63	400	25,200
Light trench mortars	189	800	151,200
Field artillery:
7.7 cm. guns	204	1,000	204,000
10.5 cm. howitzers	84	800	67,200

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document an article by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], entitled "The Covenant of the League of Nations: What It Proposes and What It Does Not Propose."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to have published in the RECORD a telegram relating to the league of nations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram is as follows:

SOMERVILLE, TEX., October 8.

MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Care J. P. Buchanan, Washington, D. C.:

Whereas we, the people of Somerville, Tex., after giving patient, solemn, and deliberate thought to the situation, believe that the whole structure of humanity, commerce, industry, labor, and, in fact, the whole social order of the world, and especially of our own beloved Nation, are swinging in the balance with Socialism, Bolshevism, and anarchy on the one end and justice and democracy on the other; and

Whereas it is our opinion that civilization the world over is marking time awaiting ratification by our Senate of the peace treaty and the covenant of the league of nations, and that unreservedly: Now, therefore,

We, the people of Somerville, en masse assembled, do hereby urge, request, and pray the men of the Senate to act like Americans and immediately take a vote and ratify the peace treaty and the covenant of the league of nations without any change whatsoever.

R. A. BRANTLY, Mayor.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate, as in legislative session, adjourned, the adjournment being, under the previous order, until to-morrow, Saturday, October 11, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, October 10, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we rejoice with exceeding great joy that at last and for the first time in the history of our Republic common sense and reason have brought together in a conference the representatives of labor, capital, and the people to discuss the great question between capital and labor, and the people; and we most earnestly pray that good will and earnest efforts may solve the great problem and bring relief to the people involved in the controversy, that common sense, reason, and good will may prevail in all its deliberations, and justice and equity be established for all, and peace prevail throughout the Nation. In the name of Him who taught us to live together in harmony. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department of the House of Representatives, and any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House and the recess of the Congress, and may meet at such places as said committee deem advisable, and compel the attendance of witnesses, send for persons and papers, and administer oaths to witnesses.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What committee is that?

Mr. HASKELL. The Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department. We have reached a point where this authority is necessary. Just before the last recess that we took the Committee on Rules were ready to report a rule favorably for this resolution, but in the rush of business we were unable to obtain action upon it. It is necessary that we should have this authority. The committee have agreed upon it unanimously, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN], the minority members of the committee, are in accord and satisfied to recommend that this action be taken.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the more that these committees have the right to sit while the House is in session the harder it gets to keep a quorum here, and it is almost impossible to keep a quorum now. I believe I will object, temporarily at any rate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

BASEBALL.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, 50 years ago the first famous Cincinnati Red Stockings became the undisputed baseball champions of the world. Yesterday the latest Cincinnati Red Stockings became again the undisputed champions of the world, and to-day, at least in the minds of hundreds of thousands of red-blooded fans and followers of the national game, the good old town of Cincinnati is the capital of the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, of course I do not blame the gentleman from Ohio when once in 50 years something happens that gives him a chance to gloat. [Laughter.] It is very proper that he should pat himself on the back and pat Ohio and Cincinnati; but when you want to get the real thing for a continuous diet, you have got to come to Chicago. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent for one minute to speak about the famous ball club of Michigan. I wish to say——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to any more ball games.

FRANCES SCOVILLE-MUMM.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution, the House shall proceed to consider S. J. Res. 90, being a resolution restoring to American citizenship Frances Scoville-Mumm; there shall be 40 minutes debate to be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the resolution; at the conclusion of the debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the passage of the Senate joint resolution, without intervening motion, except motion to recommit.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. On yesterday afternoon the House adopted a resolution giving consideration to H. R. 4438, providing for two hours and a half general debate, and then consideration for amendments. The general debate under that rule was not concluded at the time the House adjourned. I want to ascertain what will be the parliamentary status of that bill at the conclusion of the measure covered by the proposed rule, whether or not it will be given then instantly the same status that it had before this resolution was taken up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the program is that after the consideration of bills and conference reports under rules to-day the bill to which the gentleman refers will be taken up again.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the rule that I have just submitted makes in order a Senate joint resolution restoring to American citizenship Frances Scoville-Mumm, a former resident and citizen of the State of Kansas. I ask that the resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read Senate joint resolution 90, to readmit Frances Scoville-Mumm to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States, as follows:

Whereas Frances Scoville-Mumm, daughter of C. C. K. Scoville, a citizen of the United States residing in the State of Kansas, being a native-born citizen of the United States, married in 1913 Walter Mumm, an alien of German birth and parentage, but at the time of, and for many years prior to, said marriage a resident of France; and Whereas the said Frances Scoville-Mumm has since returned to the United States and renewed her residence therein and petitioned Congress to be readmitted to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States under and by virtue of the power and laws of the United States of America: Therefore Resolved, etc., That Frances Scoville-Mumm, daughter of the said C. C. K. Scoville, be, and she is hereby, on her own application unconditionally readmitted to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the circumstances leading up to this resolution and the rule making it in order would be interesting if they were fiction instead of fact.

Frances Scoville was a young woman of rare charm and unusual graces. She had also an ample fortune. She traveled much. Her travels took her to Europe. There she met Walter Mumm. He was handsome, rich, and of ancient family. All the circumstances were favorable to a romantic international marriage, which followed in due time. Mr. Mumm was by birth and parentage a German citizen. He resided in France, where his business was, and on marriage his wife took his citizenship. They resided in France. She invested a portion of her fortune in a home in Paris, and furnished it. They resided there until the outbreak of the World War.

It is unfortunate perhaps that all international marriages are not happy. The dreams of youth picture a state of happiness that does not last. This case was no exception. During the period of gestation and motherhood, when the husband's affection and tender attentions were most needed by his wife, he yielded to the beguilements of the gay capitals of the Continent. He gambled without a limit. He did not omit wine and women in his excesses. He forfeited his right to the affections of his wife.

The World War broke out. The necessity of making a change in the place of residence of the Mumm family was imperative. They must either move to Germany or be interned in France. So Mrs. Mumm went to Germany with her husband, to a country she did not like and with a man who had forfeited his right to her affection. She resided there for a time under intolerable conditions. She then went to Berne and resided in Switzerland until the close of the war. Then the State Department permitted her to return to the United States, her native land and the land she loved. Now, it is important to her and to her child that she be in a position to assert her rights to her property in France.

She has large property interests in her husband's estate. Her own property is there, her household goods and much of her wearing apparel are in Paris. She can not even secure a handkerchief from her personal effects, all the property being in control of the alien-property custodian in France, and she being rated as a German citizen can not assert her rights to it.

The Government of France is to-day disposing of much of the property of the Mumm estate. She can not by proper proceedings protect her interest in that estate because of her citizenship. If she were an American citizen, the courts of France would give recognition to her claim, so she could protect her interests in her own property and her interest in the property of her husband. That is the purpose for which this application for the restoration of her citizenship is made. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Texas for a question.

Mr. BLANTON. I wish to inquire as to the necessity for the word "unconditionally" preceding "admitted," with respect to her being readmitted. In other words, when we admit a citizen to the United States we do not admit him unconditionally.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will say that it is the purpose of the word "unconditional" to admit Mrs. Mumm to citizenship at once.

Mr. BLANTON. But why not readmit her, as all other citizens are, without the word "unconditionally"? It might carry with it rights that we did not wish to give.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no; the purpose I assume that the Senate had in inserting the word "unconditional" was to obviate any period of residence or complying with the usual statutory conditions.

Mr. BLANTON. One other question. This case is a sample of the history of all or nearly all of the international marriages, and has not the time come, at least in taking action by Congress, in such cases to give the American girls to understand that whenever they contract these international marriages they must bear the burden of them?

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I want to ask the question for information as to the legal status. At first blush I would think that the rights of the authorities in Paris for the possession of this property would be fixed and determined at the time it took possession and that any subsequent action by change of citizenship would not change the legal status of the rights.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The very eminent lawyer in Paris who has charge of the matter states that her interest can be protected if her citizenship is restored to her in the United States.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Was it not brought out in the hearings that if Mrs. Mumm is not restored to American citizenship within 90 days there is a possibility of her losing her entire fortune?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; every day of delay endangers loss to her estate.

Mr. CARSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will yield to the other gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. CARSS. Has Mrs. Mumm secured a divorce?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. She has secured a legal separation and has instituted proceeding for a divorce.

Mr. CANDLER. What has become of Mr. Mumm?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. He is living probably in Germany or some city of Europe to which he has access as a German citizen.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. GARD. I would like to understand what distinction the gentleman makes, legally and in the forum where the case is tried, between what the gentleman says is a legal separation and the filing of an application for a divorce?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In most Catholic countries a legal separation is recognized which does not give the right of marriage to either party to the separation.

Mr. GARD. I understand that, but I am speaking about the legal status.

Some time ago I had a rather similar case—and this was a German—where the State Department ruled at that time that the procuring of a divorce from one foreign-born husband automatically restored the citizenship to a citizen of the United States who had married a German subject.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Attorneys in Paris thought, after mature consideration, that the circumstances not only warranted but required the action now being taken. The property involved makes this action at this time necessary.

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. POU. I want to ask the gentleman if there is not debate allowed on the resolution, and if there will not be ample time under the resolution which the gentleman has presented to discuss the various phases in general debate?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There will be 40 minutes' debate, if it is desired. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. How long did Mrs. Mumm live in Germany after her marriage?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. She never resided in Germany at all. She resided in France, and did not go to Germany until after the outbreak of the World War, and then remained there only a few months.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. How long did she remain in France?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. She was married in 1913, and remained in France until the outbreak of the war.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Then, if she had been an American citizen—in other words, if she had not married a German subject—she would have come under the provisions of the act that we passed some years ago that would take away, if she were a naturalized citizen, her citizenship because of her residence continuously for more than five years abroad.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is correct; but, in addition, there is the provision of our law that transfers the citizenship of the wife to that of the husband upon her marriage.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. I wondered if the husband bore arms against the United States in the late war.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I understand he did not.

Mr. CALDWELL. What was his age?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Somewhere in the thirties.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. I understand the gentleman from Kansas makes the statement that she has a legal separation from her husband?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. And that action for divorce is pending?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Suppose the divorce case should fail, what would then be the legal status? Would one spouse be a citizen of the United States and the other of Germany?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Under the circumstances of the case, that would be the citizenship relation. In some countries the citizenship of the wife does not follow that of the husband, and I do not see any reason why we should be particularly interested that it should in this case.

Mr. MILLER. I understand that this would be the situation: The husband in Germany would be a citizen of Germany and the wife a citizen of the United States.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Residing in the United States under legal separation.

Mr. MILLER. Where is this divorce case pending?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In Berlin.

Mr. MILLER. There will be some complication, I imagine, in respect to the offspring in this case.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I understood the gentleman to say that this matter had been called to the attention of the State Department.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; on Mrs. Mumm's application to reenter the United States.

Mr. TREADWAY. My question is, Has the State Department called it to the attention of the Congress through the Rules Committee? Is this action in any sense official?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; the State Department immediately granted Mrs. Mumm the right to reenter the United States, although she was rated as a German citizen. That is the way the State Department's attention was called to this case.

Mr. TREADWAY. Has the department had anything to do with the hearings before the gentleman's committee?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then it is entirely at the request of Mrs. Mumm that this resolution is before us?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes. This bill passed the Senate unanimously; was reported unanimously by the Senate committee. It was also unanimously reported by the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and also by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CARSS. Has the American Alien Property Custodian taken over any property that belonged to this man Mumm in the United States; and if so, how much?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. He did not have any property in the United States, but I understand there were some unallotted claims that have been seized.

Mr. CARSS. Has she any property in the United States?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; her property is in France.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did this lady undertake to secure her reinstatement as an American citizen prior to her difficulties in respect to property?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. She came home. Afterwards this question of citizenship arose on account of her property. She found it was necessary that she have a restoration to her citizenship.

Mr. CONNALLY. So the whole question is one of her property?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; but her American citizenship is necessary to secure her own property and that of her child.

Mr. CONNALLY. But for that she would not have been concerned about her citizenship?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, yes; very deeply concerned about it. She has all of the patriotic impulses of a Kansas or a Texas woman for her native land.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is she now, in the eyes of the law of France or Germany or of both, a citizen of France or of Germany?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Of Germany. She has taken the citizenship of her husband.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I understood the gentleman to say that they were married in France.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They were married in England. Her husband was a citizen of Germany by birth.

Mr. KINCHELOE. And she is now considered a citizen of Germany?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; by France, under the law.

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania. I understand the present citizenship of the wife has been determined by the marriage status.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think that the French courts would insist on the dissolution of that marriage vow before they recognized a different citizenship?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; they recognize a legal separation in France. A letter that I read yesterday from a French attorney, whose name is known to most American lawyers, states that this action on the part of Congress will restore her to her rights, and that it is necessary in order that she may assert her rights.

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania. Even before the divorce is obtained?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. When did the marriage occur?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In 1913.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Before the war?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; before the war.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Has the Alien Property Custodian of this country any of her property, either real or personal?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no; none whatever.

Mr. KINCHELOE. She has none in this country?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. None, but some jewelry, money, and personal effects.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARD. I would like to ask the gentleman if he and his committee had given consideration as to what would be the effect, conceding that we pass this act, if the divorce suit severing the marriage relations which the gentleman says is now applied for in Germany should be decided adversely to the contention of Mrs. Mumm and the divorce refused?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. She would simply be denied the right to remarry, as would her husband, and she would still have the legal separation that has been granted to her, which is the custom in most of the countries where man and wife disagree and separate.

Mr. GARD. I understand that; but what I am concerned with is not a question of the matter of the application of the law and semiecclesiastical law to citizenship, but what is her status in the event we pass this enabling act saying she is an American citizen and the German court denies her application for divorce, and that decree in a forum which can properly separate a husband and wife being final, will she still remain a German subject because she is the wife of a German?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not at all; we are restoring her to American citizenship, as we have the right to do.

Mr. GARD. I know we have the right to do that. But suppose the German court refuses to give that divorce to her?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That would not affect our action.

Mr. GARD. I think it would.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not at all. She can assert her rights to her property under a legal separation if she is an American citizen.

Mr. WELLING. The report of the committee seems to indicate that Mr. Mumm is a French citizen and not a German citizen.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The report may indicate that; but the fact is that he is a German citizen, and went to Germany immediately on the outbreak of the World War on the alternative of either being interned in France or going to Germany. He went to Germany.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. If by this act we will restore her to the status such as to permit her to regain her property in Paris and then the court or tribunal in Berlin which has jurisdiction of her divorce case should deny her the decree of divorce, then under the laws of Germany what right of control, if any, would her German husband have over this property that we help her to regain?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. None whatever, nor over the child, because that matter is settled by the decree of separation.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman know whether it is her intention to come and live in the United States?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I know it is her intention to live in the United States. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. According to the rule, the resolution is called up, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Frances Scoville-Mumm, daughter of C. C. K. Scoville, a citizen of the United States residing in the State of Kansas, being a native-born citizen of the United States, married in 1913 Walter Mumm, an alien of German birth and parentage, but at the time of, and for many years prior to, said marriage a resident of France; and

Whereas the said Frances Scoville-Mumm has since returned to the United States and renewed her residence therein and petitioned Congress to be readmitted to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States under and by virtue of the power and laws of the United States of America: Therefore

Resolved, etc., That Frances Scoville-Mumm, daughter of the said C. C. K. Scoville, be, and she is hereby, on her own application unconditionally readmitted to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Under the resolution there are 40 minutes' debate provided for, 20 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas and 20 minutes to those opposed to the resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the Speaker put the question on the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. If nobody desires time the Chair will put the question.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman defer that for a moment and make it on the joint resolution? The gentleman from New York makes the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I withdraw the point for the present.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order. I think we ought to have a roll-call vote on this measure. We ought to teach rich American girls and their ambitious mothers seeking titled husbands a lesson in regard to foreign marriages, and let them understand that when they buy such a foreign bed with its consequent great responsibilities and troubles they must lie in it, and then they will more highly appreciate American husbands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas renews the point of order——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker. I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is withdrawn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 14.

So the joint resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 7478. An act to amend sections 5200 and 5202 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by acts of June 22, 1906, and September 24, 1918.

CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE RESOLUTION 329.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 329.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed with the consideration of the conference report agreed upon by the managers on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on H. R. 8624, being an act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved August 10, 1917. That all points of order on said conference report shall be considered as waived. That there shall be one hour of debate to be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the conference report. That at the conclusion of debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the conference report, without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order on the resolution. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I submit that it is not within the province of the Committee on Rules on a conference report which involves the questions in controversy between the two Houses and which have been compromised by managers appointed for that purpose to bring in a rule which provides that all points of order shall be considered as waived. Now, points of order are not the action of the House, but they are the action of an individual Member, and I contend that the Committee on Rules have no authority to bring in a resolution to say that if an individual Member desires to make a point of order that it shall be considered as waived. In reporting resolutions which make legislation in order, or which provide for an order of business, the custom has been and the decisions of the Chair have been that in reporting the resolution the Committee on Rules must specify the amendments which shall be in order and which would have been out of order but for the resolution.

Now, I submit in a matter of as much importance as a conference report that it is improper for the Rules Committee to say that points of order shall be considered as waived.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman admit if the Rules Committee had indicated and specified certain points in the conference report and said that they should be in order, that that would have been in order?

Mr. WALSH. No; I am not willing to concede that for the present, Mr. Speaker, but I am directing my argument to the committee's position. If this were a bill, and it contained matters which were out of order under the rules of the House, if the Rules Committee desired to make them in order the resolution would be framed so that not all points of order would be considered as waived but that certain provisions of the bill should be in order, any rules of the House to the contrary notwithstanding, or some similar language.

With reference to the inquiry of the Speaker, as to whether on a conference report the Rules Committee have jurisdiction to provide that no matter what is in the conference report it shall be considered, the rules notwithstanding, I have grave doubts, Mr. Speaker, whether the Rules Committee would have the same jurisdiction over a conference report that they would over a bill which was being taken up in its initial stage. Because in the case of a bill which they have made in order, which has been introduced and referred to committee and reported out, containing matter which it is conceded would be a violation of the rules of the House, the Rules Committee in fixing the procedure of the House has jurisdiction to say that in considering this measure the amendments which are out of order under the rules of the House shall be considered as in order, and it will be proper for the House to consider them. But in case of a conference report the bill has been considered by the House. It has been considered by the other branch. It has come back to the House, and the amendments which the other branch put onto the bill were disagreed to, and the matter sent to conference for adjustment. Now, I doubt whether the Rules Committee can by a special order, which involves not only the action of the House but which involves the action of the Senate under its rules, and which involves conferees on the part of both branches, bring in a rule and say, while this is a conference report that has heretofore been considered by the House and passed by the Senate and sent to conference and has come back in the shape of a conference, that no matter whether this does contain matter that is in violation of the rules of the House, which is put in there not by the House itself but put in by the managers on the part of the House, I say, I doubt whether the Rules Committee can say that what the managers of the House have done, whether it is in violation of the rules of the House or not, shall be in order, and can not be considered by the House, or can not be presented to the House in such shape as the House can say whether it is in conformity to its own rules. Of course, the merits of the matter do not enter into the question.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, information has just reached me that the Senate still has these papers, and that it is not in order, of course, to consider this matter. I therefore withdraw the resolution for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the resolution.

PROHIBITION.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit another privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas, from the Committee on Rules, submits a report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 331.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed with the consideration of the conference report agreed upon by the managers on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on H. R. 6810, entitled "An act to prohibit intoxicating beverages, and to regulate the manufacture, production, use, and sale of high-proof spirits for other than beverage purposes, and to insure an ample supply of alcohol and promote its use in scientific research and in the development of fuel, dye, and other lawful industries"; that all points of order on said conference report shall be considered as waived; that there shall be one hour of debate to be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the conference report; that at the conclusion of the debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the conference report, without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order on the resolution.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman form Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has already made a point of order. The gentleman from Massachusetts will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the same point of order——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty Members are present; not a quorum.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Bell	Brumbaugh	Christopherson
Andrews, Md.	Brand	Cantrill	Clark, Fla.
Anthony	Britten	Casey	Classon
Babka	Brooks, Pa.	Chindblom	Cleary
Collier	Houghton	McPherson	Shreve
Copley	Hull, Iowa	Magee	Siegel
Costello	Husted	Maher	Sinclair
Crowther	Hutchinson	Mann	Sisson
Currie, Mich.	Ireland	Mason	Slemp
Davey	Jefferis	Merritt	Small
Dempsey	Johnson, S. Dak.	Montague	Smith, Ill.
Dewalt	Jones, Pa.	Mooney	Smithwick
Donovan	Kelley, Mich.	Moore, Pa.	Snyder
Doremus	Kennedy, Iowa	Moores, Ind.	Steele
Doughton	Kennedy, R. I.	Morin	Stephens, Miss.
Dupré	Kettner	Murphy	Stephens, Ohio
Dyer	Kleczka	Newton, Minn.	Strong, Pa.
Elliott	Kraus	Olney	Swope
Ellsworth	Kreider	Paige	Taylor, Ark.
Emerson	LaGuardia	Parker	Taylor, Tenn.
Fitzgerald	Langley	Peters	Tinkham
Foster	Larsen	Purnell	Upshaw
Frear	Lea, Calif.	Rainey, H. T.	Vaile
Fuller, Ill.	Lee, Ga.	Reber	Vare
Fuller, Mass.	Lesher	Reed, N. Y.	Ward
Gallagher	Little	Robsion, Ky.	Wilson, Ill.
Gallivan	Luce	Rowe	Wingo
Gandy	McAndrews	Rucker	Winslow
Good	McArthur	Sabath	Wise
Goodall	McClintic	Sanders, N. Y.	Wood, Ind.
Goodykoontz	McCulloch	Scully	Wright
Graham, Pa.	McKinley	Sells	Zihlman
Hernandez	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Sherwood

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and eighty-four Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I direct the Chair's attention to the provisions of paragraph 47 of Rule XI, page 310, section 713, of the Manual:

All proposed action touching the rules, the joint rules, and order of business shall be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Now, I suppose it can not be controverted that this resolution is of double purpose. It refers to the order of business and also is a proposed action touching the rules of the House. The resolution says that—

All points of order on said conference report shall be considered as waived.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are in this situation: Assuming the resolution to be adopted and the conference report laid before the House for consideration and a Member rises and says, "Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order on the conference report," the Chair under this resolution would say, "Well, under the rule the points of order are considered as waived." Now, that is not changing the rules of the House which prohibit the matter to be included in the conference report. The Speaker simply says to the Member, "Your point of order is considered as waived." I submit that the Committee on Rules can not bring in a rule which says to the individual Member that any point of order he may lodge shall be considered as waived, because it does not change the rules of the House, and it does not make in order under the rules that which would be out of order but for the resolution from the committee.

Now, heretofore there have been certain forms followed in making in order legislative provisions which violate the rules of the House. They usually specify the provisions or they usually say the House may consider them as if the same were not subject to a point of order. Then the House is in this situation, that a Member rises after the adoption of such a rule and says, "Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the provision," and the Speaker, of course, is compelled to say, "The gentleman's point of order can not be sustained, because the rule has made it in order."

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that, so far as precedents are concerned, there is no instance where there has ever been an effort to make in order by a rule a conference report confessedly out of order. The custom has been uniformly to present a concurrent resolution for that purpose.

Mr. WALSH. I had directed the attention of the Chair to the fact that this had not been in accordance with the practice in the case of conference reports, according to the RECORD, and attention was called to the fact that the provisions in question were the result of the action only of the managers of the conference.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. If we presented a concurrent resolution it would be necessary to present a rule to make the concurrent resolution in order, so we are accomplishing the desired end in a quicker way.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, the gentleman says that we are accomplishing the fact sought to be accomplished and are saving time; but we should not save time at the expense of the rules of the House, and particularly not in a case where we are attempting to enact something which has been agreed upon simply by three Members of the House and three Members of the coordinate branch, and which has not been considered in the House, and to which under the rules no consideration can be granted if the gentleman desires to move the previous question immediately after the reading of the conference report or the statement.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in a matter as important as a conference report, which has only been reported recently, the Committee on Rules have gone beyond their province and jurisdiction under the rule which says, "All proposed action touching the rules, joint rules, and order of business shall be referred to the Committee on Rules," in reporting the resolution which says that "All points of order are considered as waived," because if I want to make a point of order against this conference report I do not believe the Committee on Rules can say in their resolution, if the House adopts it, "Why, your point of order is considered as waived," because that does not dispose of the point of order, and it is depriving the individual Member of a right that he has under the rules; and I insist that the only way that they can get around a situation such as that is by reporting a resolution and having it adopted to the effect that the matters in the conference report shall be considered in order, the rules of the House to the contrary notwithstanding, or shall be considered the same as if they were not subject to a point of order. Then a Member is left with his right to make a point of order, and while he arrives at perhaps the same result and is left in the same situation, he is entitled to make the point of order, and the Chair is then sufficiently authorized under the resolution to overrule it. But according to this the Chair is not even entitled to make a ruling on the point of order, and the man who makes it is met with the answer, "Your point of order is considered as waived" when the man who makes it does not waive it, and is entitled to insist upon it under the language of this resolution.

I therefore insist upon what I referred to at the outset, because this also touches the action agreed upon by the managers of the two Houses that it is not within the province of the Committee on Rules to report a resolution making in order that which is the joint action of a small body delegated to meet and smooth out the differences by way of compromise and report back to the House for action.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman support or oppose the point of order?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I oppose the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would prefer to hear some one in favor of the point of order. Is there anyone who wants to be heard in favor of the point of order? If not, the Chair is ready to rule.

This is a novel point. The Chair has been unable to find any precedents upon it. It is undoubtedly true, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] suggests, that the usual practice has been to avoid points of order by a concurrent resolution. That, of course, does not prove that there is no other method of doing it, and on the general principle the Chair sees no reason why each House separately can not by a rule determine its own action. Each House has until quite recently had very different rules about conference reports. The Senate rule was, until their recent change, much more liberal than the House rule, which seems to confirm the opinion of the Chair that each House has the right to determine separately its own limitations on conference reports and that the use of a concurrent resolution is not exclusive. The gentleman from Massachusetts contends that the provision in the rule that "points of order shall be considered as waived" takes away from a Member of the House his constitutional right to make a point of order. The Chair is disposed to agree with the gentleman that that is not a fortunate choice of language. It would have made the ruling easier if the precedents had been followed. As the Chair recollects the ordinary custom is to say—

Shall be considered without the intervention of points of order.

It seems to the Chair that it would have been better to have followed the precedents. On the other hand, the purpose of the rule seems very clear, that it simply means that points of order shall not be raised. It means to dispose of points of order, and although, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has stated, the language is subject to criticism, yet it seems to the Chair that the real intent and purpose of the phrase and not the verbiage should be considered. So, inasmuch as in the opinion of the Chair the House has a right to provide by a rule that points of order shall not be made against a conference report, and inasmuch as this language was evidently intended and may fairly be construed to accomplish that result, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON and others) there were—ayes 98, noes 31.

Accordingly the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, there are 40 minutes of debate.

The SPEAKER. Certainly, if it is desired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I wish to make a brief statement, and then will yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU]. This resolution brings before the House for consideration the conference report on the prohibition bill. In the opinion of the majority of the Committee on Rules the House had a right to consider the conference report notwithstanding points of order. It brings the matter before the House for its consideration, to vote it up or down as it may determine.

The rule provides for debate, and makes it out of order to raise points of order against matters that otherwise would be subject to a point of order, which the Committee on Rules, I submit, has a perfect right to do.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state what was the particular emergency which resulted in the committee reporting a rule making in order matter in a conference report which otherwise would have been subject to a point of order, upon this great piece of legislation?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The conference, in adjusting the differences between the two Houses, found it necessary to take up the questions in dispute, and to clothe them in just a little different language, to accomplish the common purpose that was sought by both Houses of the Congress.

Mr. WALSH. Was that the representation that was made to the Committee on Rules, that they simply clothed these things in a little different language?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is the understanding of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WALSH. Well, the gentleman must admit that they went beyond that and included matters over which they had no jurisdiction.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KAHN. What does the gentleman say about this provision in the rule—

There shall be no intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

How can you recommit a conference report?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That can be done if the conferees have not been discharged by either House.

Mr. KAHN. But I understand the other House has acted.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then the motion would not lie.

Mr. KAHN. I do not know. If the rule provides for a motion to recommit, and the motion is made, then the motion would lie; and the other House having already acted on this proposition, it seems to me the rule as it now stands would bring about a condition that would be rather awkward, to say the least.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is doubtful if the gentleman from California could get a motion to recommit agreed to by the House.

Mr. WALSH. He could make the motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. He might make the motion. It would simply take the time of the House in voting the motion down.

I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] five minutes.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is one that has been under discussion for probably half a century. It reached its culmination here when we voted for national prohibition. I voted for national prohibition on the theory that in order to save from destruction those who are unable to control themselves in the habit of drinking, it was necessary to deny the clubman his highball and champagne and cocktail, and the family their case of cold beer. Now we are confronted with a situation which is rather at variance with the idea I had in mind when I voted for prohibition. My idea was that the way to determine whether it was possible to destroy the demon alcohol was to enforce national prohibition and wipe out the whole thing.

Now, what happened? Here is a newspaper printed by a decidedly prohibition editor, at Lewistown, Pa., sent to me by my very dear friend, Mr. William Eckbert. I want to say that the editor of this paper is a very good friend, a man of high class, one of the best citizens of central Pennsylvania. Yet in his Daily Sentinel of Lewistown, on September 22, we find an advertisement which reads like this:

A. PH. TONIC APPETIZER.

This is a Tonic Bitters and when taken before meals stimulates the appetite, tones up digestion and gives strength to entire system.
The Alcoholic contents are just sufficient to dissolve and preserve the medical ingredients (Alcohol 11%). A Bottle has Convinced Thousands of the Merits of this Tonic. Try a Bottle Yourself—it Probably is Just What You Need. At Eby's Drug Store.

Yet under the provisions here it is proposed that you can not have even a bottle of beer that contains 2¾ per cent alcohol, a beverage pure and made under Government control, certified by great chemists. Yet they are allowed to sell in Eby's drug store in Lewistown an alcoholic decoction that might tear the lining out of your stomach.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Under the rule now before the House, is it in order to debate an extraneous subject?

The SPEAKER. The Chair must admit that he was consulting the parliamentary clerk and can not state what the gentleman was discussing.

Mr. BLANTON. The debate was concerning intoxicating liquors.

Mr. FOCHT. That is what I am discussing. I hope this will not be taken out of my time. The gentleman has taken too much of the time of the country already and should not thus interrupt Members.

Mr. BLANTON. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the subject of intoxicating liquor is extraneous to the discussion of the rule now before the House.

Mr. FOCHT. I am willing to submit to the House whether what I am discussing is germane.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think, if that is what the gentleman is discussing, that it is in order, because this is a rule making in order a bill with reference to intoxicating liquor.

Mr. FOCHT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of another newspaper printed by another estimable gentleman who never took a drink in his life, the Belleville Times, published in Belleville, Mifflin County, Pa., in which I find an editorial which reads:

Quite well do we remember Hostetter's Stomach Bitters more than 40 years ago. This tonic is still on the market and contains only 25 per cent of alcohol.

I would like to ask where those of us who went so far as to deny so many good people, rich and poor alike, the right to have a glass of beer containing 2¾ per cent alcohol, or a drink of good whisky manufactured out of the grain that grew on the sunny hillside, and yet allow newspapers to print advertisements to be sent abroad advertising brain-crazing and kidney and liver perforating dog medicine, which much that is sold really is. [Laughter.]

Will the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL], or the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], clear this matter up before the people and let them know what compensation there is for denying so many citizens who hoped that the whole thing might be redeemed before it went so far that a greater evil than was ever known in the whole country is perpetrated on the people, and where such advertisements are printed in the newspapers inviting and enticing people to drink a worse poison known as Coca-Cola? It is a common rumor that the manufacturers of these decoctions were active for national prohibition, and, in all seriousness, possibly some Member can tell all about the extent of their activities, and whether we are really going to have the cleaner put on the whole business, which was my idea when I voted for national prohibition, or whether poisonous substitutes are to without hindrance supplant beer and whisky. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, the House should understand exactly what it is doing if it shall decide to adopt this rule. We at least ought to do it with our eyes open. Here is the situation. The prohibition bill was sent to conference. The conferees have added onto the bill matter which was not considered in this body, which was not considered in the coordinate legislative branch, and now by the terms of the rule the right of the individual Member to make a point of order against any of the matter written into the bill for the first time by the conferees is taken away.

Gentlemen of the House, if conferees are permitted to do that in this instance it sets another precedent which I respectfully submit is fraught with danger. We have certain rules which are intended to safeguard legislation. Legislation which takes money out of the Treasury must proceed along a certain parliamentary avenue. It must be considered in the House in Committee of the Whole. It is open to amendment. After this procedure it is reported to the House and the House accepts or rejects the legislation considered in this careful manner. In that way certain very wise safeguards are thrown around legislation.

But here you set a precedent which allows three Members of the House of Representatives and a like number of representatives of another body to write into the bill entirely new matter. It is brought back to the House, and their reports must be either voted up or voted down.

The merits of the prohibition question are not involved at all. It is a question of safe and orderly legislation. Somebody said awhile ago that there is a precedent for just such a rule as this. That is true; but because there is one precedent for it is no reason why we should set two if the first is bad. I submit that the position of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] carries great force. A point of order was made by him and overruled by our conscientious and able Speaker; but now the question is whether or not we will permit the conferees of the House and Senate to write into this bill anything that they may see fit and nobody be permitted to make a point of order against it.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Why does not the gentleman specify the exact language that the conferees added outside of the matter in conference?

Mr. POU. My friend from California will not deny that there has been included in this conference report legislation which has never been considered in either body. If he can deny that I will take my seat and not utter another word. We all know that it is so. If you can add on two words not considered by either House you can add on 20 words. If you can add one dollar you can add one million, and if you can add $1,000,000 you can wreck the Treasury of the United States provided you could get a majority of the House to accept the report of conferees of the two bodies.

Gentlemen, speaking in all seriousness, there is no necessity to set this additional precedent. There is no reason why we should ride roughshod over the rights of the individual Member. You have got the votes here. You have an ample majority to do anything you want to in the regular legislative way. Why is it that you must resort to this arbitrary action and set another precedent that just as sure as the sun shines will come home to plague the men who are in control of this House and trying to protect the Treasury.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I will.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Was the gentleman a member of the Committee on Rules in 1912?

Mr. POU. I was.

Mr. ALEXANDER. At that time the conference report on the Panama Canal Act——

Mr. POU. Did just what we are doing here to-day.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Contained added matter, and a point of order was made against the report that it contained matter beyond the jurisdiction of the conferees. Pending the consideration of that question and before it was decided by the Chair, the Committee on Rules brought in a rule making the subject matter in the conference report in order, the rule as to points of order to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. POU. I said that if we have set one bad precedent, that was no reason why we should set two. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, my objection to this rule is one of substance and not one of form. So far as the form of the rule is concerned, it could have been better phrased, but it is not on that that I desire to speak. I merely desire to emphasize the thought which has been expressed by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], and I do this notwithstanding the precedent which has been cited by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER].

There is legislation brought in here by the conferees which was not in dispute between the two bodies. At least, I assume that to be true; otherwise this rule would not have been sought. That being true, it is legislation which has not been considered by this body and which can not as an independent proposition be considered by this body under this rule. I undertake to maintain that that is a dangerous policy to lay down. The method which should have been pursued in this case and in another case, because there is another rule of exactly the same character on another conference report that will soon be called up, is the old policy that was pursued for long years of bringing in a concurrent resolution authorizing the conferees to place the language in the bill. One of the precedents cited in Hinds' compilation is when the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], then the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, brought in such a concurrent resolution authorizing the conferees to put the language in the bill. That concurrent resolution being considered by the House, of course, was open to amendment, and it gave to the House the opportunity to consider the legislation and perfect it. Under this rule there is no chance for this House to consider the legislation except, I may say, in a purely negative way. This conference report must be either voted up or voted down as a whole.

Some suggestion was made about passing a rule authorizing amendments to the conference report. That would have been absurd, of course, because an amendment to a conference report would be equivalent to its rejection. I do not know what the legislation is that the conferees have put into the bill, because I have not had the opportunity of examining it, but it is legislation that this body has never considered. Whether the other body has ever considered it, I do not know. We ought not to delegate our power. There is criticism and there has been again and again in this country criticism of Congress because it delegated to conferees this power of legislation. This legislation, whatever it may be, has never been considered by any committee and has never been considered by the House. It is a thing that will rise to plague us and bring criticism on the Congress as a body again and again if the unfortunate example now being set shall be followed in the future.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I indorse heartily all that has been said in opposition to this rule. It occurs to me that this dry conference of dry conferees has taken advantage of the House and has reported a dry conference report through a dry Committee on Rules, or at least a majority of which committee is dry, and that then they have brought it in here to a dry House and are going to gag us and put it through.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And give it to a dry country.

Mr. CALDWELL. Oh, no! I have just traveled through the State of Kansas, which is supposed to be very dry, and I found more wet oases in Kansas than I found in any other State of the Union, and I assure you and I assure the Members of this House that there is not any kind of legislation that you can force upon the people of this country which will make them dry, because the people of America are a liberty-loving people, and no law can be enforced that is not supported by the people of America. In my travels throughout this country, and I have been over more than half of it in the last two weeks, I found a unanimous feeling among the business people of our country, the bankers, the insurance men, the manufacturers, the people of affairs, the men who control all of the great civic organizations, chambers of commerce, and boards of trade, that this legislation is vicious and ought not to be passed. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] states that he found wet oases in Kansas. I know men who have been looking for a drink in Kansas for 20 years, who would give the gentleman from New York a reward if the exact location of those oases which he found traveling through there on a Pullman train could be given them. Much is made of what the House is about to do. The only language that this conference report makes in order is that which provides that the cost of the analysis of beer, to ascertain whether it contains one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol, shall be taxed as the costs in the case, and that the beer shall be in sealed containers until the analysis is made, and after. Those are the important things that are about to revolutionize the procedure in the House of Representatives, that are made in order by this rule. I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and with others that this is not the most desirable procedure on a conference report, and I want to serve notice now upon conferees that they must not bring conference reports to the Committee on Rules with a request that their provisions be made in order contrary to the ordinary rules of the House. If it had not been that the matter involved in this instance and in the other instance to which reference has been made, comprises merely the incorporation of language that enables the conferees to get together on the matters in dispute between the two Houses, I doubt very seriously if a rule would have been agreed to making the report in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York indicated a moment ago that in his opinion the American people would not respect this law should Congress pass it. I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas if that is his opinion of the American people?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No, Mr. Speaker; the American people are a law-abiding people, and the revolutionists in the country are diminishing in number every day. Intolerance of law will not be tolerated by the American people. There is no reason why this rule should not be agreed to. It simply makes a new precedent to accomplish a usual purpose.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time, six minutes, to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I want to say, if the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] would devote to his friend, who has not been able to get a drink for 20 years in the State of Kansas, one-half of the same energy he applied toward getting the fortune of the founder of "Mumm's Extra Dry" brought back into this country, his friend in his own State of Kansas would not suffer from this 20-year thirst. [Laughter and applause.] Independently of the merits of this legislation we are now facing a proposition to do indirectly that which we may not do directly, and I am glad the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules has faced this question with the utmost candor, because he says it is an unwise proceeding and he desires to serve notice on conferees that this sort of legislation shall not be repeated, if I may use his language, at least this sort of legislation shall not be encouraged. And, indeed, that is true, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, because when you consider this matter in its finality the House of Representatives has had taken away from it one of its prerogatives. Every man who is elected a Member of the House of Representatives has a right to make his voice heard for or against legislation. That is the reason he is sent here. He comes as a representative of his people, and legislation is properly enacted here not only by being passed in one House but by being passed in the other, and the differences reconciled in conference. But there can be no legislation where the conditions are not reconciled in conference, but instead of that the conferees take upon themselves the privilege of being higher than the House and greater than the Senate, and by having three men delegated by the House to represent what it had done we let those three men decide that the House did not do what it wanted to do, and that those three knew better the meaning of the House than did the Members of the House themselves. And so they in their wisdom legislate. They put things upon the conference report not contemplated by the legislation of either House, and then they come in with a rule and say that, notwithstanding that, the House must adopt the conference report here at once and the individual Member has not the privilege of objecting. Indeed, it says for him that all points of order on the conference report shall be considered as waived. Now, that is a dangerous policy. I am not discussing the aspect of the law, but I will when we come to the later proceeding of it; but this, as the chairman of the Committee on Rules says, is a policy not to be encouraged, because in its finality it does exactly what I have stated—it takes away from the House the privilege of saying what it wants the legislation to be. Now, as a matter of fact, gentlemen, this conference report—and I have gone through it with great care—begins in amendment No. 4, with an amendment which would be out of order if the point of order were made upon it. It closes in its Panama Canal amendment, that is practically the big one, in No. 226 with another amendment which is out of order, and of the 44 amendments passed upon by the conferees, 10 are subject to points of order, and this is what the House is doing, and doing with its eyes open, I hope, absolutely forsaking all previous rules, taking not what it did itself or the coordinate branch did, but what three men without delegated authority have done to adjust the differences.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, without reference to the merits of this conference report, and without reference to whether or not the conferees exceeded their powers, I insist that the Committee on Rules has followed a wholesome precedent in bringing in this rule making the conference report in order. The gentleman from Ohio says that the conferees have usurped the powers of the House. That argument is without merit for the reason that if, in the opinion of the House, the conferees have exceeded their powers and have incorporated in this conference report provisions that should not have been incorporated in the conference report, that have not been considered by the House, and do not meet the approval of the House, the House can vote down the rule or it can reject the conference report. In the Sixty-second Congress a conference report was brought in on the Panama Canal bill. In section 5 of the conference report provision was incorporated by the conferees permitting foreign-built ships to be admitted to American register for the foreign trade. That question had not been considered by the House or the Senate. A point of order was made against the consideration of the report upon the ground that the conferees had exceeded their powers. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] were then on the Committee on Rules, and the committee brought in a rule making the conference report in order. The rule—House resolution 699, second session Sixty-second Congress, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 11202—reads as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this order the House shall proceed to consider the report of the managers of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone; that none of the provisions of said report shall be subject to a point of order; that general debate shall continue for two hours, unless sooner concluded; and that immediately upon the conclusion of general debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the motion to agree to the report.

So that the action of the Committee on Rules, in reporting the rule now under consideration, is exactly in line with that precedent. It is for the House to determine whether or not the conferees exceeded their powers by incorporating new matter, if there is any new matter in this report, and if the new matter does not meet the approval of the House the House can vote down the rule or reject the conference report.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 77, noes 44.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that no quorum is present, and the Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 205, nays 75, answered "present" 2, not voting 147, as follows:

YEAS—205.

Alexander	Fess	Kraus	Sanders, La.
Almon	Fields	Lanham	Saunders, Va.
Anderson	Fisher	Lankford	Schall
Andrews, Nebr.	Flood	Layton	Sears
Ashbrook	Focht	Lufkin	Sinnott
Ayres	Freeman	Luhring	Smith, Idaho
Baer	French	McFadden	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Garner	McKenzie	Snell
Barbour	Goodwin, Ark.	McKeown	Steagall
Begg	Gould	McLaughlin, Mich.	Stedman
Benham	Graham, Ill.	Major	Stiness
Benson	Greene, Mass.	Mansfield	Strong, Kans.
Black	Griest	Mapes	Summers, Wash.
Bland, Va.	Hadley	Mays	Sumners, Tex.
Blanton	Hardy, Colo.	Michener	Sweet
Boies	Hardy, Tex.	Miller	Taylor, Colo.
Bowers	Harrison	Monahan, Wis.	Temple
Box	Hastings	Mondell	Thomas
Briggs	Haugen	Moore, Ohio	Thompson
Brinson	Hawley	Moore, Va.	Tillman
Brooks, Ill.	Hayden	Morgan	Timberlake
Browne	Hays	Mott	Tincher
Buchanan	Heflin	Neely	Towner
Burroughs	Hernandez	Nelson, Mo.	Treadway
Butler	Hersey	Nelson, Wis.	Venable
Byrnes, S. C.	Hersman	Newton, Minn.	Vestal
Byrns, Tenn.	Hickey	Nichols, Mich.	Vinson
Campbell, Kans.	Hicks	Oldfield	Volstead
Candler	Hill	Oliver	Walters
Carss	Hoch	Osborne	Wason
Carter	Holland	Overstreet	Watkins
Clark, Mo.	Howard	Padgett	Watson, Va.
Cole	Huddleston	Park	Weaver
Connally	Hudspeth	Parrish	Webb
Cooper	Hulings	Quin	Webster
Cramton	Hull, Tenn.	Raker	Welling
Crisp	Jacoway	Ramseyer	Welty
Dale	James	Randall, Calif.	Whaley
Dallinger	Johnson, Ky.	Randall, Wis.	Wheeler
Darrow	Johnson, Miss.	Rayburn	White, Kans.
Dickinson, Mo.	Johnson, Wash.	Reavis	White, Me.
Dickinson, Iowa	Jones, Pa.	Reed, W. Va.	Williams
Dominick	Jones, Tex.	Rhodes	Wilson, La.
Dowell	Kearns	Ricketts	Wilson, Pa.
Drane	Keller	Riddick	Woods, Va.
Dunbar	Kelly, Pa.	Robinson, N. C.	Woodyard
Echols	Kendall	Rogers	Yates
Elliott	Kiess	Romjue	Young, N. Dak.
Elston	Kincheloe	Rose	Young, Tex.
Evans, Mont.	King	Rubey
Fairfield	Kinkaid	Rucker
Ferris	Kitchin	Sanders, Ind.

NAYS—75.

Bee	Dupré	Lazaro	Ogden
Blackmon	Eagan	Lea, Calif.	Pell
Bland, Mo.	Eagle	Lehlbach	Phelan
Booher	Edmonds	Linthicum	Platt
Browning	Evans, Nebr.	Lonergan	Pou
Burdick	Fitzgerald	Longworth	Radcliffe
Burke	Ganly	McDuffie	Rainey, J. W.
Caldwell	Gard	McGlennon	Ramsey
Campbell, Pa.	Garland	McKiniry	Riordan
Cannon	Glynn	McLane	Rodenberg
Carew	Goldfogle	MacCrate	Rowan
Cleary	Griffin	MacGregor	Sanford
Coady	Hamill	Madden	Smith, N. Y.
Crago	Haskell	Martin	Sullivan
Cullen	Humphreys	Mead	Tilson
Curry, Calif.	Igoe	Minahan, N. J.	Voigt
Denison	Johnston, N. Y.	Mudd	Walsh
Donovan	Kahn	Newton, Mo.	Watson, Pa.
Dooling	Lampert	O'Connell

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2.

Johnson, S. Dak Knutson

NOT VOTING—147.

Ackerman	Esch	Little	Sanders, N. Y.
Andrews, Md.	Evans, Nev.	Luce	Scott
Anthony	Fordney	McAndrews	Scully
Aswell	Foster	McArthur	Sells
Babka	Frear	McClintic	Sherwood
Bacharach	Fuller, Ill.	McCulloch	Shreve
Barkley	Fuller, Mass.	McKinley	Siegel
Bell	Gallagher	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Sims
Bland, Ind.	Gallivan	McPherson	Sinclair
Brand	Gandy	Magee	Sisson
Britten	Garrett	Maher	Slemp
Brooks, Pa.	Godwin, N. C.	Mann	Small
Brumbaugh	Good	Mason	Smith, Ill.
Cantrill	Goodall	Merritt	Smithwick
Caraway	Goodykoontz	Montague	Snyder
Casey	Graham, Pa.	Moon	Steele
Chindblom	Green, Iowa	Mooney	Steenerson
Christopherson	Greene, Vt.	Moore, Pa.	Stephens, Miss.
Clark, Fla.	Hamilton	Moores, Ind.	Stephens, Ohio
Classon	Houghton	Morin	Stevenson
Collier	Hull, Iowa	Murphy	Strong, Pa.
Copley	Husted	Nicholls, S. C.	Swope
Costello	Hutchinson	Nolan	Taylor, Ark.
Crowther	Ireland	O'Connor	Taylor, Tenn.
Currie, Mich.	Jefferis	Olney	Tinkham
Davey	Juul	Paige	Upshaw
Davis, Minn.	Kelley, Mich.	Parker	Vaile
Davis, Tenn.	Kennedy, Iowa	Peters	Vare
Dempsey	Kennedy, R. I.	Porter	Ward
Dent	Kettner	Purnell	Wilson, Ill.
Dewalt	Kleczka	Rainey, H. T.	Wingo
Doremus	Kreider	Reber	Winslow
Doughton	LaGuardia	Reed, N. Y.	Wise
Dunn	Langley	Robsion, Ky.	Wood, Ind.
Dyer	Larsen	Rouse	Wright
Ellsworth	Lee, Ga.	Rowe	Zihlman
Emerson	Lesher	Sabath

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. MAGEE (for) with Mr. GALLIVAN (against).

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (for) with Mr. WARD (against).

Mr. SHREVE (for) with Mr. DYER (against).

Mr. ANTHONY (for) with Mr. HULL of Iowa (against).

Mr. MONTAGUE (for) with Mr. MCANDREWS (against).

Mr. HOUGHTON (for) with Mr. GALLAGHER (against).

Mr. SINCLAIR (for) with Mr. MAHER (against).

Mr. CROWTHER (for) with Mr. LAGUARDIA (against).

Mr. PURNELL (for) with Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania (against).

Mr. FOSTER (for) with Mr. TINKHAM (against).

Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania (for) with Mr. SCULLY (against).

Mr. GANDY (for) with Mr. STEELE (against).

Mr. CARAWAY (for) with Mr. BACHARACH (against)

Mr. BLAND of Indiana (for) with Mr. REBER (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. CHINDBLOM with Mr. WRIGHT.

Mr. ROWE with Mr. MAHER.

Mr. MORIN with Mr. BRAND.

Mr. DUNN with Mr. STEVENSON.

Mr. ESCH with Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi.

Mr. SCOTT with Mr. MCCLINTIC.

Mr. STEENERSON with Mr. LESHER.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee with Mr. LARSEN.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont with Mr. SISSON.

Mr. HUTCHINSON with Mr. OLNEY.

Mr. IRELAND with Mr. EVANS of Nevada.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa with Mr. DOUGHTON.

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island with Mr. DOREMUS.

Mr. COPLEY with Mr. WISE.

Mr. VARE with Mr. KETTNER.

Mr. KNUTSON with Mr. BELL.

Mr. COSTELLO with Mr. WINGO.

Mr. KREIDER with Mr. DEWALT.

Mr. MURPHY with Mr. BARKLEY.

Mr. FORDNEY with Mr. SMITHWICK.
Mr. PAIGE with Mr. BABKA.
Mr. PETERS with Mr. O'CONNOR.
Mr. FREAR with Mr. SMALL.
Mr. PORTER with Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina.
Mr. LUCE with Mr. DENT.
Mr. GOOD with Mr. SISSON.
Mr. REED of New York with Mr. MOONEY.
Mr. MCARTHUR with Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee.
Mr. MCCULLOCH with Mr. DAVEY.
Mr. WINSLOW with Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas.
Mr. MCKINLEY with Mr. COLLIER.
Mr. MCPHERSON with Mr. CLARK of Florida.
Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky with Mr. MOON.
Mr. ZIHLMAN with Mr. GARRETT.
Mr. WOOD of Indiana with Mr. ASWELL.
Mr. GOODALL with Mr. SIMS.
Mr. GOODYKOONTZ with Mr. SHERWOOD.
Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania with Mr. SABATH.
Mr. HUSTED with Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY.
Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio with Mr. LEE of Georgia.
Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota with Mr. UPSHAW.
Mr. MANN with Mr. CASEY.
Mr. DEMPSEY with Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania with Mr. CANTRILL.
Mr. MOORES of Indiana with Mr. BRUMBAUGH.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my vote in the affirmative and answer "present." I am paired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. In the affirmative.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have a pair with the gentleman from New York, Mr. WARD, and I therefore withdraw my vote of "yea" and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. Under the resolution there is one hour of debate, half to be controlled by those in favor and half by those opposing the conference report. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] is recognized.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time be divided between myself and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks that the time be divided between himself and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conference report. Does the gentleman wish the report itself to be read?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement was read.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6810) to prohibit intoxicating beverages and to regulate the manufacture, production, use, and sale of high-proof spirits for other than beverage purposes, and to insure an ample supply of alcohol and promote its use in scientific research and in the development of fuel, dye, and other lawful industries, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 20, 25, 46, 47, 61, 66, 72, 90, 118, 123, 127, 133, 134, 164, 178, 184, 219, 232, and 233.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 23, 24, 26, 27, 29, 30, 32, 33, 34, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 48, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 64, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 73, 75, 76, 78, 79, 82, 83, 84, 86, 87, 88, 89, 92, 93, 94, 96, 97, 98, 100, 101, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 119, 120, 121, 122, 124, 125, 126, 128, 131, 132, 135, 136, 138, 139, 140, 141, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 227, 228, 229, 230, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 282, 283, 284, and 285, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

" : Provided, That the foregoing definition shall not extend to dealcoholized wine nor to any beverage or liquid produced by the process by which beer, ale, porter or wine is produced, if it contains less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume, and is made as prescribed in section 37 of Title II of this act, and is otherwise denominated than as beer, ale, or porter, and is contained and sold in, or from, such sealed and labeled bottles, casks, or containers as the commissioner may by regulation prescribe."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

" : Provided, That the foregoing definition shall not extend to dealcoholized wine nor to any beverage or liquid produced by the process by which beer, ale, porter or wine is produced, if it contains less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume, and is made as prescribed in section 37 of this title, and is otherwise denominated than as beer, ale, or porter, and is contained and sold in, or from, such sealed and labeled bottles, casks, or containers as the commissioner may by regulation prescribe."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following: ", and the commissioner is authorized to make such regulations"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Officers mentioned in said section 1014 are authorized to issue search warrants under the limitations provided in Title XI of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stats. L., p. 217, et seq.)."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "to the end that the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage may be prevented.

"Liquor for nonbeverage purposes and wine for sacramental purposes may be manufactured, purchased, sold, bartered, transported, imported, exported, delivered, furnished and possessed, but only as herein provided, and the commissioner may, upon application, issue permits therefor: Provided, That nothing in this act shall prohibit the purchase and sale of warehouse receipts covering distilled spirits on deposit in Government bonded warehouses, and no special tax liability shall attach to the business of purchasing and selling such warehouse receipts."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following: "use as a beverage, or for intoxicating beverage purposes"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "and preserved sweet cider"; and, on page 11, line 15, of the engrossed bill, strike out the words "other article"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "the articles named in paragraphs b, c, and d of this section which may be"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "29"; and, on page 12, line 7, of the engrossed bill, strike out the words "the person"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "any known principal for"; and, on page 12, line 8, of the engrossed bill, strike out the words "if any"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: ", and except that any person who in the opinion of the commissioner is conducting a bona fide hospital or sanatorium engaged in the treatment of persons suffering from alcoholism, may, under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the commissioner shall prescribe, purchase and use, in accordance with the methods in use in such institution, liquor, to be administered to the patients of such institution under the direction of a duly qualified physician employed by such institution"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "transport liquor, may be issued for one year, and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: ": Provided, That the commissioner may without formal application or new bond extend any permit granted under this act or laws now in force after August 31 in any year, to December 31 of the succeeding year: Provided further, That permits to purchase liquor for the purpose of manufacturing or selling as provided in this act shall not be in force to exceed 90 days from the day of issuance. A permit to purchase liquor for any other purpose shall not be in force to exceed 30 days. Permits"; and, on page 13, line 22, of the engrossed bill strike out the words "Every permit"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In addition to the words proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment strike out, on page 13, line 25, of the engrossed bill the words "and shall not be in force more than"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "ten"; and beginning on page 13, line 25, of the engrossed bill, strike out the words "10 days from the day of its issuance," which end on page 14, line 1; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: ", unless the sale is to be made through a pharmacist designated in the permit and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Nothing in this title shall be held to apply to the manufacture, sale, transportation, importation, possession, or distribution of wine for sacramental purposes, or like religious rites, except section 6 (save as the same requires a permit to purchase) and section 10 hereof, and the provisions of this act prescribing penalties for the violation of either of said sections. No person to whom a permit may be issued to manufacture, transport, import, or sell wines for sacramental purposes or like religious rites shall sell, barter, exchange, or furnish any such to any person not a rabbi, minister of the gospel, priest, or an officer duly authorized for the purpose by any church or congregation, nor to any such except upon an application duly subscribed by him, which application, authenticated as regulations may prescribe, shall be filed and preserved by the seller. The head of any conference or diocese or other ecclesiastical jurisdiction may designate any rabbi, minister, or priest to supervise the manufacture of wine to be used for the purposes and rites in this section mentioned, and the person so designated may, in the discretion of the commissioner, be granted a permit to supervise such manufacture."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 77: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "liquor. And no"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 80: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following: "unless after careful physical examination of the person for whose use such prescription is sought, or if such examination is found impracticable, then upon the best information obtainable, he"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 81: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 81, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In addition to the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment strike out, on page 15, lines 11 and 12, of the engrossed bill the words "its use as a medicine by the one for whom he prescribes" and insert "the use of such liquor as a medicine by such person"; also, on page 15, line 13, after the word "some," of the engrossed bill insert the word "known"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 85: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following: "the purpose or ailment for which it is to be used and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 91: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following: "holding permits to prescribe"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95; That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following: "prescription blanks have been"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 99: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: ", except in cases of emergency, in which event a record and report shall be made and kept as in other cases"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 102: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "the judicial district and within"; and on page 17, line 16, of the engrossed bill after the word "occurred" insert: ", unless the parties agree on another place"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following: ", which shall at all times be open to inspection as in this act provided"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 129: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 129, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "of the"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 130: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 130, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "to purchase or ship the same, together with the name and address of the person using the permit"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 137: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following: "No one shall permit any sign or billboard containing such advertisement to remain upon one's premises."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 142: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 142, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "No"; and on page 22, line 12, after the word "receive" of the engrossed bill insert the following: ", nor knowingly permit his employee to solicit or receive,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 157: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 157, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 23. That any person who shall, with intent to effect a sale of liquor, by himself, his employee, servant, or agent, for himself or any person, company or corporation, keep or carry around on his person, or in a vehicle, or other conveyance whatever, or leave in a place for another to secure, any liquor, or who shall travel to solicit, or solicit, or take, or accept orders for the sale, shipment, or delivery of liquor in violation of this title is guilty of a nuisance and may be restrained by injunction, temporary and permanent, from doing or continuing to do any of said acts or things.

"In such proceedings it shall not be necessary to show any intention on the part of the accused to continue such violation if the action is brought within 60 days following any such violation of the law."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 163: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 163, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following: ", the containers thereof," and on page 27, line 17 of the engrossed bill, strike out the words "other property" and insert "such property so"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 165: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 165, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "unless the court shall otherwise order"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 166: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 166, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"The term 'private dwelling' shall be construed to include the room or rooms used and occupied not transiently but solely as a residence in an apartment house, hotel, or boarding house. The property seized on any such warrant shall not be taken from the officer seizing the same on any writ of replevin or other like process."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 185: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 185, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "brought for violation of law," and on page 30, line 13, after the word "of" in the engrossed bill, insert ", if not claimed within 60 days from the date this section takes effect"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 195: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 195, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"The penalties provided in this act against the manufacture of liquor without a permit shall not apply to a person for manufacturing nonintoxicating cider and fruit juices exclusively for use in his home, but such cider and fruit juices shall not be sold or delivered except to persons having permits to manufacture vinegar."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 206: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 206, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "reported, provided"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 212: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 212, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "the commissioner or any of his agents or by any public prosecutor or by any person designated by him, or by any peace officer in the State where the record is kept, and copies of such records and reports duly certified by the person with whom kept or filed may be introduced in evidence with like effect as the originals thereof, and verified copies of such records shall be furnished to the commissioner when called for"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 218: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 218, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following: "shall be assessed against, and collected from, the person responsible for such illegal manufacture or sale"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 225: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 225, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: ": Provided, That such liquid may be removed and transported, under bond and under such regulations as the commissioner may prescribe, from one bonded plant or warehouse to another for the purpose of having the alcohol extracted therefrom. And such liquids may be developed, under permit, by persons other than the manufacturers of beverages containing less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume, and sold to such manufacturers for conversion into such beverages"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 226: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 226, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "Credit shall be allowed on the tax due on any alcohol so saved to the amount of any tax paid upon distilled spirits or brandy used in the fortification of the liquor from which the same is saved.

"When fortified wines are made and used for the production of nonbeverage alcohol, and dealcoholized wines containing less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume, no tax shall be assessed or paid on the spirits used in such fortification, and such dealcoholized wines produced under the provisions of this act, whether carbonated or not, shall not be subject to the tax on artificially carbonated or sparkling wines, but shall be subject to the tax on still wines only.

"In any case where the manufacturer is charged with manufacturing or selling for beverage purposes any malt, vinous, or fermented liquids containing one-half of 1 per cent or more of alcohol by volume, or in any case where the manufacturer, having been permitted by the commissioner to develop a liquid such as ale, beer, porter, or wine containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume in the manner and for the purpose herein provided, is charged with failure to reduce the alcoholic content of any such liquid below such one-half of 1 per cent before withdrawing the same from the factory, then in either such case the burden of proof shall be on such manufacturer to show that such liquid so manufactured, sold, or withdrawn contains less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume. In any suit or proceeding involving the alcoholic content of any beverage, the reasonable expense of analysis of such beverage shall be taxed as costs in the case."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 231: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 231, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: ", except such executive officers as may be appointed by the commissioner or the Attorney General to have immediate direction of the enforcement of the provisions of this act, and persons authorized to issue permits, and agents and inspectors in the field service"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 234: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 234, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "required," and on page 37, line 5, after the word "act" in the engrossed bill, insert: "including personal services in the District of Columbia, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000,000 for the use of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and $100,000 for the use of the Department of Justice for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, including personal services in the District of Columbia and necessary printing and binding"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 257: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 257, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "the use of any scientific university or college of learning, any laboratory for use exclusively in scientific research, or for use in any hospital or sanatorium"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 281: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 281, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 20. That is shall be unlawful to import or introduce into the Canal Zone, or to manufacture, sell, give away, dispose of, transport, or have in one's possession or under one's control within the Canal Zone, any alcoholic, fermented, brewed, distilled, vinous, malt, or spirituous liquors, except for sacramental, scientific, pharmaceutical, industrial, or medicinal purposes, under regulations to be made by the President, and any such liquors within the Canal Zone in violation hereof shall be forfeited to the United States and seized: Provided, That this section shall not apply to liquor in transit through the Panama Canal or on the Panama Railroad.

"That each and every violation of any of the provisions of this section shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding six months for a first offense, and by a fine not less than $200 nor more than $2,000 and imprisonment not less than one month nor more than five years for a second or subsequent offense.

"That all offenses heretofore committed within the Canal Zone may be prosecuted and all penalties therefor enforced in the same manner and to the same extent as if this act had not been passed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

A. J. VOLSTEAD,
DICK T. MORGAN,
E. Y. WEBB,
Managers on the part of the House.
THOMAS STERLING,
KNUTE NELSON,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House, at the conferene on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 6810, the national prohibition act, submit the following statement:

The word "That," commencing 64 different sections of the bill, has been stricken out, and the following amendments make only changes in language or punctuation: Nos. 8, 9, 10, 13, 18, 23, 24, 27, 37, 38, 45, 48, 51, 53, 54, 57, 64, 89, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 101, 103, 106, 119, 120, 121, 125, 148, 149, 154, 155, 158, 159, 169, 171, 172, 174, 175, 176, 177, 179, 180, 183, 191, 192, 193, 194, 205, 206, 207, 208, 212, 215, 216, 241, 247, 248, 253, 254, 256, 259, 268, 271, 285. In addition to the foregoing changes, many of the sections have been renumbered, but such renumbering does not change the effect of the bill. No further notice of these amendments will be taken in this statement.

Amendment 1 provides that the short title of the act shall be "The national prohibition act."

Amendment 2 makes the limitation of one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol in liquors apply only to beverages of the class enumerated in section 1 of the bill by inserting the word "such" before the word "beverages" therein.

Amendments Nos. 4 and 22 modify the definition of intoxicating liquor. They require near beer, dealcoholized wine, and similar beverages to be manufactured under the provisions of section 37, title 2, in conformity with the requirements of the bill as it passed the House and require that these beverages be sold in or from such containers as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe. The provision in regard to sweet cider contained in these Senate amendments was made a part of amendment No. 44, which permits the sale of preserved sweet cider, subject to the limitations contained in section 4, title 2.

Amendment No. 7 eliminates the provision that creates a lien on property for the fine and cost imposed on the occupant for the illegal use thereof if the owner suffers the property to be used illegally after he has reason to believe that it is so used.

Amendment No. 12 strikes out the requirement that a bond in an amount equal to the full value of the property alleged to be a nuisance, required as a condition for regaining possession of property enjoined, must be given, and substitutes a bond of not less than $500 nor more than $1,000. This makes the provision correspond with a like provision contained in title 2 of the bill.

Amendment No. 28 strikes out of the provision granting power to make regulations the words "so as to afford safety to the revenues and adequate protection against diversion of liquor for illegal uses."

Amendment No. 29 changes the word "shall" to "may," which effects no real change.

Amendment No. 31 permits officers named in section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to issue search warrants.

Amendments 33 and 34 strike out the provision making it unlawful to give away or receive liquor.

Amendment 35 makes a slight change in the language of section 3, title 2, and makes it legal to purchase and sell warehouse receipts of liquor in Government bonded warehouses.

Amendments 39, 40, and 41 strike out the word "nonpotable" contained in the bill as a limitation upon the character of certain medicinal, toilet, and antiseptic preparations.

Amendment 42 strikes out the requirement that the alcoholic contents of certain of these preparations must be stated on the label.

Amendment 43 requires that flavoring extracts and sirups shall be unfit for use as a beverage as well as unfit for intoxicating beverage purposes.

Amendment 44 permits the manufacture and sale of preserved sweet cider. In lieu of Senate amendment No. 44 there has been added to section 29, title 2, a provision giving a right to manufacture nonintoxicating cider and fruit juices for sale and delivery to persons holding permits to manufacture vinegar.

In defining what alcohol may be used in manufacturing extracts, sirups, and certain medicinal, toilet, and antiseptic articles the bill provided that the limitations should apply to all such articles capable of being used for beverage purposes. Amendment No. 45 limits this to certain articles which may be so used.

Amendment 58 permits hospitals and sanitoriums for the treatment of inebriates to use liquor as heretofore.

Amendments 61, 62, and 63 give to manufacturers and persons permitted to sell liquor permits to purchase liquor that may remain in force not to exceed 90 days; other permits to purchase are limited to 30 days.

Amendment 60 allows annual permits issued after the 31st day of August in any year to be extended until December 31 of the following year, without requiring a formal application and new bond.

The House conferees have accepted amendments 67, 68, 69, 70, and 71, and the Senate recedes from amendment No. 72. These amendments effect no change except in language.

Amendment No. 73 gives a person who has been refused a permit an opportunity to have such refusal reviewed in court.

Amendment 74 provides for the manufacture, purchase, and sale of wine for sacramental purposes. It is a substitute for a like provision in the bill as passed by the House, and was agreed to with a slight amendment.

Amendment 78 permits physicians to prescribe liquor without making an examination of the person for whom he prescribes upon the best information obtainable if such examination is found impracticable.

Amendment 82 eliminates the requirement that each prescription must contain a statement of the ailment for which the liquor is prescribed.

Amendment 83 permits liquor for external use to be prescribed in addition to the 1 pint allowed in any 10-day period by the bill as it passed the House.

Amendment 85 requires physicians to state in their records of prescriptions the "purpose or ailment" for which the liquor is prescribed.

Amendment 86 eliminates the requirement that the physician's record of prescriptions shall show the druggist to whom the prescription was addressed.

Amendment 87 eliminates section 7½. This section was designed to prohibit physicians who have their office in, or in rooms connected with, drug stores from prescribing.

Amendment 99 allows physicians in case of emergency to issue prescriptions on blanks not furnished by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, but requires a record and report of such prescriptions.

Amendment 102 adds to the provision defining the limit within which a hearing can be had on an application to vacate a permit the further limitation that it must be within the judicial district unless the parties agree on another place.

Amendments 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, and 111 do not materially change the effect of the bill as it passed the House except in that they strike out the provision requiring periodical reports of records kept by persons manufacturing, purchasing for sale, selling, or transporting liquor, and specify more in detail the character of the records to be kept.

Amendment 114 makes it unnecessary for a manufacturer to attach to a container of liquor a copy of the permit for its manufacture, but in place thereof requires that the number of the permits shall be so attached.

Amendment 115 requires the label attached by a manufacturer to a container to state the quantity of liquor.

Amendment 117 strikes out the provision in section 13, title 2, requiring a carrier to have a permit to transport liquor.

Amendment 122 strikes out the affidavit required to be presented by a consignee to the carrier before obtaining delivery of a consignment of liquor, and allows such delivery on presentation of a verified copy of the permit to purchase the liquor.

Amendment 124 gives the agent of the carrier power to administer oath to the consignee in verifying his copy of the permit to purchase.

Amendment 128 makes it unnecessary to state on the label attached to a consignment of liquor the name of the person receiving the liquor.

Amendment 129 requires upon such label the number of the permit to purchase or ship the liquor, and name, and address of the person using the permit.

Amendment 136 makes it unlawful to advertise liquor anywhere or by any means or method, and strikes out provision against circulating price lists or order blanks for liquor.

Amendment 138 strikes out provisions requiring billboards to be removed by the owner of the property, and permits alcohol to be advertised in certain trade journals, and makes the provisions of the bill and of the Post Office appropriation act, approved March 3, 1917, inapplicable to newspapers published in foreign countries.

Amendment 139 strikes out prohibitions against advertising liquor by means of pictures.

Section 18 prohibits advertising, manufacturing, selling, or possessing for sale certain preparations and compounds designed for the unlawful manufacture of liquor. "Utensils, contrivances, and machines" designed for the like purpose are added by amendment No. 141 to the prohibited list.

Amendment 142 has been agreed to with an amendment that in effect restores the House provision. The section is designed to prohibit employers from permitting their employees to act as agents for the unlawful sale of liquor.

Amendment 143 eliminates section 20. This section made it unlawful to drink liquor or be intoxicated on cerain public conveyances.

Amendment 146 makes a person unlawfully selling liquor liable in damages to anyone injured by reason of the intoxication of any person whether resulting in his death or not.

Amendment 147 strikes out the provision that the right of action against persons injured by an intoxicated person, or by reason of the intoxication of a person, shall be in addition to the right of action against the intoxicated person. Effects no material change.

Amendment 157 strikes out a provision making it the duty of prosecuting officers to institute proceedings to abate a nuisance if in a criminal suit one is found to exist, and makes the evidence of conviction in such suit evidence in a civil suit.

Amendment 160 strikes out the provision for the enforcement of an injunction, as contained in title 2 of the bill, and substitutes for it the like provision contained in title 1.

Amendment 163 struck out the provision expressly authorizing the seizure under a search warrant of the containers in which liquor might be found. This was agreed to with an amendment which in effect restores the language of the bill as passed in the House.

Amendment 165 authorizes courts to dispose of property taken on a search warrant otherwise than by destruction of the property.

Amendment 166 defines private dwelling as including rooms occupied not transiently but solely as a residence in an apartment house, hotel, or boarding house.

Amendment 170 changes the following language on page 34, "bond with two or more sureties" to "bond with sufficient sureties."

Amendment 173 strikes out the limitations imposed by the bill as it passed the House on the power of the court to exempt from sale a vehicle used in the unlawful transportation of liquor. As agreed to, the court may exempt for any "good cause."

Amendments 184 and 185 give anyone claiming liquor, heretofore seized in any suit or proceeding, 60 days in which to claim it. If not so claimed, it may be confiscated and disposed of. This carries out more effectually the purposes of the bill as passed in the House.

Under the language of the bill, as passed by the House, a special penalty was prescribed against manufacturers and wholesale and retail druggists for unlawfully selling liquor. This provision has been broadened by amendment 190 so as to apply to any person who may sell unlawfully.

Amendment 195 gives permission to manufacture nonintoxicating cider and fruit juices for exclusive use in the home. To this amendment has been added the provision above referred to authorizing the sale and delivery of such cider and juices to anyone who has a permit to manufacture vinegar. This last provision is a substitute for Senate amendment No. 44.

Amendment 200 strikes out the provision allowing prosecution in counties through which liquor may be transported.

Amendment 205 strikes out "January 16, 1920," and inserts "the date when the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States goes into effect."

Amendments 206 and 207 make a change in phraseology designed to more clearly forbid the use of liquor kept in the home except for consumption of the family and its bona fide guests therein.

Amendments 209, 210, and 211 eliminate the requirement that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue keep a record of reports made to him. It authorizes the commissioner to call for copies of any record and makes copies of records and reports properly certified evidence with the same effect as the originals thereof, and makes more ample provisions than the House bill for inspection of records by officers authorized to enforce the act, including peace officers of the State where the records are kept.

Amendments 218 and 219 were agreed to with an amendment restoring the language stricken out and adding thereto in modified form the language of the Senate amendment. The effect of this is to make the fine and cost assessed against a person unlawfully manufacturing or selling liquor collectible only from the guilty person.

Amendment 224 permits fortification of wine in the development of dealcoholized wine.

Amendment 225 allows, under bond and regulation, any liquor to be transported from one bonded plant or warehouse to another for the purpose of removing the alcohol therefrom.

Amendment 226 permits credit on the tax assessible on alcohol recovered from any liquor equal to the sum paid as a tax on the alcohol used for fortification, and provides that no tax shall be paid on fortified wines used for the production of nonbeverage alcohol or dealcoholized wine; and that such wines shall only be taxed as still wines. That part of amendment No. 226 which strikes out the provision in regard to the burden of proof has been agreed to with an amendment that places this burden on the manufacturer to show that the beverage he produces or sells contains less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol, and makes the expense of an analysis of any liquor taxable as cost in any suit or proceeding involving the alcoholic contents thereof.

Amendment 231 excepts from the civil-service act employees who have immediate direction of the enforcement of the act, persons authorized to issue permits, and inspectors in the field.

The Senate recedes from its amendments Nos. 232, 233, and 234, but in lieu thereof an appropriation is made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, of the sum of $2,000,000 for the use of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and $100,000 for the use of the Department of Justice, in place of the appropriation of $3,500,000 provided in the Senate amendments.

Amendment 245 strikes out "January 16, 1920," and inserts "the date when the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States goes into effect."

Amendment 255 adds to those who may obtain alcohol tax free municipal subdivisions of States and Territories.

Amendment 257 adds to those who may obtain tax-free alcohol under existing law sanatoriums and hospitals conducted for profit.

Amendment 263 strikes out a provision that declares regulations made under title 3 to have the force and effect of law.

Amendments 266 and 267 strike out a provision allowing release from or refund of taxes for loss of alcohol occurring in its use.

Amendment 268 substitutes for the word "shall" the word "may" so as to give a discretion in refusing to permit release from or refund of taxes in certain cases.

Amendment 280 strikes out a provision that the act may be cited as the national prohibition act.

Amendment 281 prohibits in the Canal Zone the manufacture, sale, and other disposition of intoxicating liquor.

Amendment 285 strikes out "on and after January 16, 1920," and inserts "from and after the date when the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States goes into effect."

A. J. VOLSTEAD,
DICK T. MORGAN,
E. Y. WEBB,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I wish only to make a few observations with reference to the report. It has been suggested that the conferees have made many, or at least a number of changes that are outside their province and not permitted under the rule. Attention has been called to amendment No. 4 and also to the Panama Canal amendment as instances. The Panama Canal amendment was made by the Senate, and there was ample authority to put that into the bill. The conferees amended it by striking out a number of provisions that had application to other matters than alcoholic liquors and simply retained a provision in the Senate amendment that covered the alcoholic liquor traffic in the canal. Amendment No. 4, I believe, is clearly within the power of the conferees to add to the bill, and I shall not apologize for it; no rule was needed to make that particular amendment in order. It is simply a modification of the Senate amendment, and clearly germane to the bill itself, and clearly germane to the particular Senate amendment for which it is a substitute.

I am not going to go over these amendments in detail. There were three or four of them of which I had doubts. I personally consulted with a number of men in this House, men I consider very good parliamentarians, both before and after the report was made. Some thought that one or two of these amendments might be out of order, while others expressed the conviction that they were strictly within the rules. But here was a report covering 285 amendments. True, a number of them cut no figure, but there were at least 200 amendments that we had to deal with in some fashion or other.

It would be surprising if in some of these we might not be found to have exceeded the authority that we have under the rules, especially in view of the fact that many of the changes were resisted very strenuously by the Senate conferees, and that as a consequence we had to accommodate ourselves to the circumstances in which we found ourselves. I believe that if a person will examine the report carefully he will find that in no instance has there been an attempt to drag in new matter, but simply to carry out the purpose had in view by the House in passing the bill.

The one real difficulty that we encountered was this: For the first time, I believe, we have written into a prohibition bill the permission to make near beer. In practically every State in the Union where they are attempting to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquor they absolutely prohibit anything like beer, ale, or wine. We permit it expressly under this bill, but we permit it under the limitation that it must contain less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol. Great difficulty must result from the attempt to distinguish between the kind that has one-half and the kind that has less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol. I think we have solved it in a practical fashion. We have tried honestly to do so. We do not feel as though we ought to pursue the policy that has been pursued by States generally, to make the man guilty if he sells near beer and suffer him to sell it in violation of the law; that has been the policy that has been pursued practically all over this country. We did not believe that the National Government should sanction that course. We believe that we should specify in the law just what might be sold and not place a person who sells near beer or any other soft drink in a position where he is at the mercy of a crank or an enemy.

I do not want to take any more time at this time. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, the conference report, I regret to say, as I have regretted many other things during the progress of the debate, is not explained with the degree of particularity which I think the House is entitled to by the gentleman who is chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. Therefore, with the indulgence of the membership of the House, I will endeavor to discuss what is in the conference report, since I suspect that the membership of the House desire to know that upon which they are voting.

It is unfortunate, I think, that the course of legislation in the House concerning this measure has been such that discussion was sought to be eliminated rather than encouraged. You all remember that this discussion began on the 8th of July of this present year, and that the bill passed the House on the 22d day of July. We considered it with lapses of two or three days between, but always the most insistent cry was the droning chant of a motion to close debate, a motion to restrict debate, any sort of a motion which would prevent the bill from being known to the membership of the House.

Now, the same thing arises. We come in here with a rule, a rule after the conference report is made, and the rule gives those who seek information about the bill, or who seek to disclose information, a pitiful 30 minutes on each side, and then all you can do is to vote up or down the conference report. I suggest that such form of legislation is unfortunate, because legislation should seek the light rather than hide itself in darkness.

Now, I say that this bill as it comes from the conference committee had better consideration than it has ever had, and had before a limited body, the body of conferees.

There were 331 amendments to this bill. When it left the House it was in such conglomerate shape that nobody knew what was in it, and I do not believe that the bill was ever considered, in the light of fair consideration, until it reached the conferees, where the power of the gag could not be invoked, as it was in this House. There were 331 amendments to this bill put on by the Senate, and I desire to have the House know what the conferees did. The Senate receded from 19 amendments, and they were the most immaterial amendments, mostly matters of phraseology, while the House receded from all the remainder save these 19.

After this bill passed through the House under the whip and spur of a legislative and parliamentary gag, the House abandoned everything it had put in and accepted what the Senate did. I say to the membership of the House that I think the bill is in much better shape than it was when it left the House. There is a principle involved, which principle is unnecessary of enunciation in legislation. That principle was decided by this body and ratified by the States. That was the principle that liquor should not be manufactured or sold for beverage purposes. That is the principle, and nobody can now find fault with it. In this bill we are writing a form of enforcement of that constitutional amendment, it being thought necessary to change certain particulars and things which the Senate found objectionable, and things which the House agreed were objectionable when they got where there was a fair hearing. The administrative features in this bill were so drastic that they provided traps for those who would be entirely innocent of wrongdoing under the law. So, in the consideration of the conference report, as I say, 19 Senate amendments, altogether textual, were receded from by the Senate, and the remainder were accepted by the House.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Oh, yes; I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Does the gentleman know that there are only 285 amendments instead of 331?

Mr. GARD. No; I have stated the number advisedly.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The gentleman can see for himself if he wants to, because they are all numbered; and does he know that a great many important Senate propositions were stricken out?

Mr. GARD. I know what I am talking about. If the gentleman had kindly explained the bill when he had the floor—something which Members here have a right to ask the chairman of the committee to do—then we might have had a better understanding of it, but the gentleman leaves the matter entirely without explanation. The gentleman seeks to hide behind the conference report, so it is well for the country to know exactly what has been done. That is all I am trying to tell. I desire to discuss the matter fairly. There is no question about the number of amendments. As the statement of the House conferees makes known, there were 85 amendments which applied only to changes in language or punctuation. Then there were 44 other amendments which were passed upon by the conferees, to which the conferees added something and then placed them back in the bill in some form or other. Then there were a number of other amendments from which the House receded entirely, and I think properly receded. I have no fault to find with that, because the bill, as I have already stated, has been cleared, and property cleared, by the elimination of a number of drastic and unnecessary administrative features which were calculated only to harass the people of the United States and to maintain legal traps for those who were entirely innocent of all wrongdoing.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell us some of these drastic provisions that were eliminated by the Senate?

Mr. GARD. Yes; I will be glad to do that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not mean at this moment, but as he goes along.

Mr. GARD. I will be glad to discuss them as I come to them.

The matter coming as it has now presented itself, for approval or disapproval of the conference report, I call attention, first, to the statement of the gentleman as to the number of amendments. In the report of Senator STERLING, which I have in my hand, it is disclosed that the Senate receded from 19 amendments, that the House receded from 268 amendments, that other amendments, from 4 to 280, inclusive, and 44 in number, were amended by the conferees. Now, 19 and 268 and 44 make a total of 331, as I make the calculation.

The bill is now in three parts, as it was when it left the House. The first part deals with war prohibition. It is but just to say that the war-prohibition part was considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, and when it now comes back from conference it comes back with but few necessary amendments; while Title II, which never had its origin in the Committee on the Judiciary, comes back with a number of amendments, nearly all of which are agreed to by the conferees.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I want to ask why Title II did not come from the Committee on the Judiciary just as much as Title I. Was not the gentleman present in the committee?

Mr. GARD. I did not say it did not come from there. I said it did not originate there.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will say that Title I did not originate with the Committee on the Judiciary either.

Mr. GARD. I am not disposed to bicker with the gentleman, and if he is proud that section 1 did not come from the Judiciary Committee he exhibits a pride in something which I do not care to discuss.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RANDALL of California. The gentleman has made a large number of complimentary remarks about the improvements made on this bill. I should like to know if the gentleman intends to vote for it?

Mr. GARD. I will vote for the bill. I will vote for any reasonable enforcement bill. My attitude has been all along that I wanted a reasonable and proper enforcement bill. As I have stated, when a constitutional amendment is passed, I think it is the duty of the legislative body to write an enforcement bill, and so long as the bill is proper and the best bill I can obtain I will vote for it.

At this time, in view of the extraordinary proceedings, I should like the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

On page 3, line 15, the words "reason to believe" in connection with the use of property as a nuisance are stricken out, while on page 28, in line 10, under the title of "General prohibition," the same words, "reason to believe," remain in.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The gentleman can readily understand why.

Mr. GARD. I can not.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There was no amendment on page 28, while there was on page 3.

Mr. GARD. The same principle applies, if the gentleman makes it apply, to war-time prohibition; why not to general prohibition?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We had no power to deal with it.

Mr. GARD. The rule puts in everything; you could do everything you wanted to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We did not get the rule until the report came here.

Mr. GARD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to another thing. Amendment 49, if the gentleman will give heed, the matter in conference was this: The House put in "subject to penalty in section 30," and the Senate amended it by putting in section 25. The conferees—I do not know whether intentionally or unintentionally—put in section 29, entirely without authority. I do not know now whether it means 25 or 29.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The conference report says it means 29. We amended the bill by striking out one section, and we had to make a change of renumbering the sections. That is how we make so many concessions to the Senate striking out the word "that," and all that sort of thing.

Mr. GARD. I am not speaking about concessions to the Senate; I am glad the gentleman did make concessions to the Senate. I say, for the first time the bill has been properly considered by a body where the gag rule was not invoked. The bill was open before the rule came in to at least 10 or 12 points of order. The points of order have been eliminated by the adoption of the rule, and so it is unnecessary to discuss longer that proposition.

The changes made in the bill to which I desire to call attention are changes in the administrative features of it, changes which the House, when the matters were brought to them, either rejected on votes after practically no debate or which were not considered on points of order. But the changes which are now in the bill are, first, that a more liberal construction is given to that which we have heretofore classed as innocent beverages of the household. We have welcomed back into the sacred circle sweet cider, and, indeed, preserved sweet cider. We have provided that not alone can one make sweet cider, but he can sell cider to one who has a license or a permit for the manufacture of vinegar.

The bill strikes out the requirement of a bond, which was in the House bill, to the full value of the property in nuisance cases and substituted a fair and reasonable bond.

Amendment 31, the search-and-seizure section, I confess, I do not understand, although possibly the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary does. It provides in its present form that one under section 1014 may issue a warrant, whereas the amendment of the Senate provided that they might issue and serve a warrant. If the limitation on the bare issuance of the warrant is authorized by the conferees on the part of the House, then it is fair to understand it. I am merely calling attention to it thinking possibly there might be some error in the gentleman's not including that which was included in the Senate amendment and making section 1014 generally applicable.

Section 1014 was rejected in the House, with the approval of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, and is now reinserted by the Senate, except the service of the process is eliminated and we have the bare issuance of the warrant.

Then we had a considerable discussion in the House about the word "nonpotable." It was thought to be essential in matters like the sirups and patent medicines and other things with which some perverts seek to assuage a disordered thirst. Now, the word "nonpotable" is stricken out as an unnecessary limitation on the bill.

Amendments 58 and 59 permit, for what purpose I hardly know, except to follow the ground of reason, the establishment and continuance of hospitals and sanitariums.

Amendment 73, for instance, permits an opportunity to have a refusal of a permit reviewed in court.

Amendment 74 very largely and properly enlarges the question of the sacramental wines, providing for proper manufacture, for their manufacture under supervision, words a great deal better than those used by the House, and I say it with great respect, are now contained therein.

There was a section providing that no physician who had an office in a drug store could write a prescription containing alcohol. That has been eliminated and stricken out. There was a provision inserted with much vehemence that no man could take a drink on the train or a moving vehicle. That has been eliminated.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my time is expiring. We have only 30 minutes' debate, and I have no desire to longer use time. I merely desired to call attention to these changes which were made in conference by those representing the House and the Senate and to advise the House what is the present condition of the bill.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HASKELL].

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am opposed to this conference prohibition report and shall vote against it upon the grounds that I advanced when the bill was originally brought before this House, and upon the further ground that the conferees have exceeded their authority; also, that there are a number of States that yet have referendum votes to take upon this subject. While I will support just and proper measures to enforce the Constitution and will uphold the laws as passed, I shall work for a resubmission of the eighteenth prohibition amendment. I believe that representative government did not come up to its high standard in its action taken on this proposition, and I believe the American people ought to have a direct vote upon it. I ask to-day, as I have before, that Congress take up for consideration House joint resolution 7, which I introduced on the first day of this session of Congress, which, when passed with a two-thirds vote by this Congress and ratified by three-fourths of the States, will allow a referendum vote to the people of America upon this important subject. That resolution is 100 per cent Americanism. Let the vote and the voice of the people of America be heard. I submit that is fair and just. We changed the system with reference to the election of Senators of the United States. There was doubt throughout the country as to whether or not elections by the State legislatures were proper, whether certain influences were injected that were improper. We changed the Constitution to let the people elect their Senators directly. Why not follow the same procedure with reference to prohibition and amend the Constitution again, providing for a direct vote by the people on prohibition?

In the name of constitutional freedom and the preservation of self-determination to the individual upon purely moral questions, I ask that favorable action be taken upon my proposal.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman this doctrine in his platform in his race for county judge of New York?

Mr. HASKELL. I would state to the gentleman that in the primary contest, in which I was a candidate, the issue was injected and the people of Brooklyn, the greatest and most independent county in the United States of America, showed plainly that they wanted a referendum vote by the American people.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman needs it in his campaign, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, little can be said in the last two minutes of debate—I am sorry I have not more time—in opposition to this bill. I want it distinctly understood that I remain now, as I always have been, an antiprohibitionist. I have always voted against prohibition, except upon those times when I was paired with a prohibitionist; that is, when the vote of a prohibitionist was matched off against mine, neither of us voting. And I now register as the final act in this legislation my disapproval of the unfair and un-American method by which the majority of this House has forced upon the people of this country things that many do not want. It is contrary to our American institutions to attempt by legislation to prescribe the personal habits of our citizens. It is wrong, and the men here to-day who are forcing this on our people will live to regret the action that they are taking. It is a stroke at the very foundation of the institution that we call free government, and I protest against the methods that have been adopted. As I pointed out a few moments ago, dry conferees have reported a dry conference report to a dry Rules Committee, and a dry House is trying to make a free people——

A MEMBER. Dry?

Mr. CALDWELL. No; not dry, because you can not ever make the American people do anything that they do not want to do. I will continue—and a dry House is trying to make a free people conform their personal habits to the will of a few, and as I voted against the rule I will vote against the bill.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take advantage of part of the time allotted to me to correct a statement which I made on the floor of this House in my speech on prohibition last July, in which I said, speaking of the officials of the State of Virginia in their indorsement of the prohibition law in that State, that the police of that State entered trains and ransacked the wardrobes of women and committed assaults which bordered on indecency.

That statement was made by me as the result of an article which I saw in the public press at the time. A few days after I made that statement I received a letter from the office of the Commissioner of Prohibition of the State of Virginia, which stated that the newspaper item to which I had referred had been spread broadcast to the detriment of Virginia. As a result a complete investigation had been ordered by the officials of Virginia, and I have the report here in my hand, which completely exonerates any of its officials of that indecent conduct. I wish publicly in this House to withdraw the statement and say that from my information no such incident occurred, and the newspaper item did a great injustice to public officials of the State of Virginia. [Applause.]

Now, a word about present-day conditions since war prohibition has been in effect. In my own city of Boston thousands of persons have become Jamaica ginger addicts, with resultant injury to their systems, while thousands of others have become drug fiends; and this is but the beginning. How much more beneficial to the cause of temperance it would have been to have approached prohibition moderately, as is being done in Norway, rather than adopt the drastic provisions now before us.

This measure discriminates against the poor man at a time that every effort should be made to show that the rich man enjoys no advantages. We are having conferences in this city now between capital and labor, with a view to the amelioration of the conditions of the everyday man. There is too much evidence everywhere about us that a comparatively few have too much while the many have not enough. In a Republic like ours this should not be so. Yet in this very measure before us the rankest discrimination is shown. People who have the money to buy liquors and put them away in their dwelling can have as much as they like for themselves and friends, while the man without money to buy it in quantity must do without it. A dwelling under this act is construed to mean any room in any dwelling or hotel used as a home, and the man of independent means can have a dozen homes if need be, and under this law can store whatever amount of liquor he wishes for his own and friends' use. This is not like America, and yet it will be the law when this bill passes. See the chance for the Bolshevist to stir up trouble among right-thinking citizens on an issue like this. I say to the men of this House that this and other provisions of this bill spell trouble for America. To deny the man or woman in the big city the chance to make beer to drink after a hard day's work while the farmer can make his cider or wine is another act of discrimination perpetrated by this bill. The farmer should have his chance to make his cider and wine, but why deny the ordinary citizen the right to make beer? It is not justice, and unless I miss my guess the American people will say so in no uncertain tones when given the chance. [Applause.]

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I shall of course support the conference report. I want to call attention to the fact that this House has given more careful consideration to this measure, in my judgment, than it has to any measure before the House at this session of Congress, and more time, and that most of that time was consumed by the gentlemen who were opposed to the measure. I do not know that I ever knew of an instance where men opposed to prohibition have taken such an interest in enacting a prohibition law.

I want to predict now that the time will come when the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL], who just addressed this House, will be as anxious to withdraw his remarks from the RECORD as was the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD], who so gladly withdrew his a moment ago. Prohibition is here to stay, and no God-fearing, liberty-loving citizen in 10 years from now will be willing to admit that he ever stood on the floor of the House of Representatives and opposed it.

[By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. TINCHER to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS]. [Applause.]

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the curtain is so nearly down on this controversy that I do not think that there is need for much further speaking on the part of either the friends or the opponents of the conference report.

The American people have decided that they are going to try out this reform in the social life of the Nation. All that has been done, has been in conformity with the requirements of the Constitution with respect to amending that instrument. I can not understand how Members of this body, like our friend from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] can speak of this amendment as an assault upon our democratic theory of government. It is of the essence of democracy. That theory contemplates government as a growth. Progress and development are its handmaidens. Our organic law provides for the changes that new ideas born of progress and experience will suggest, and prescribes the procedure by which amendments shall be adopted. It is impossible for the Constitution to be amended in any hasty fashion, or in response to any sentiment that is not Nation wide in its character. The procedure with respect to this amendment has been taken in strict conformity with the requirements of the organic law. How can the gentleman from New York speak of the successive steps which have culminated in the ratification of the prohibition amendment, as a blow at the foundations of popular government? This experiment may be a wise, or an unwise one. Time alone will definitely tell. But at least it is orderly procedure, resting upon the sure foundation of the approving sentiment of a great majority of the American people. The gentleman from Ohio has, I think, somewhat slurringly referred to the manner in which this measure was prepared and handled in the House as compared with the alleged superior methods of treatment applied in the Senate. I have seen many issues debated in the course of my years of service in this body, but I do not recall any bill to which proportionately a larger measure of deliberation was accorded, and greater opportunity of unrestricted debate was granted, than were afforded during the consideration of the prohibition enforcement bill. If the gentlemen in opposition did not engraft upon it the amendments which they submitted that failure was due to their lack of votes to support their amendments, not to lack of opportunity either to offer, or to debate them. They had their day in court, and an ample hearing. It has been correctly stated, I think by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee and possibly by other gentlemen, that the great bulk of the speeches made during the consideration of this bill in the House were made by the Members who opposed it. If they failed to secure favorable action on their amendments, it was not for lack of much speaking. I do not recall any amendment offered by the opponents of this legislation which was not discussed and voted upon in due and orderly fashion. Every step taken in connection with this legislation, has conformed to the requirements provided by the rules to secure a fair hearing, and impartial consideration of a legislative proposition.

Just a word in response to the intimation of the gentleman from Ohio that this bill was so badly constructed in the House that it had to be reconstructed by Senate amendments. Many of the amendments of the Senate were verbal or textual amendments of the most trivial and unimportant character. I will call the attention of the Members to some of these Senate amendments, in order that they may note their utter immateriality. Looking to page 12 of the bill, you will find that the words "capable of being" were stricken out by the stylists of the Senate, and in lieu thereof the words "which may be" were inserted. Our conferees accepted this amendment without demur. In another place on the same page where the words "and d" occur, these words were stricken out, and replaced by the words "and f." This amendment too, was readily accepted by the House conferees, as a proper consequential amendment due to rearrangements in the bill. Then I turn to the next page, page 13, and find that instead of the word "thirty," the word "twenty-five" appears in the Senate amendment. Later in the conferees' report, I believe my friend from Ohio said that 25 was made "29." Rearrangement of the sections of the bill made necessary the final change to "29."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I look to the next page, and find that the words "as defined in this title the," are stricken out, and the word "The" is substituted therefor. A very large proportion of the amendments of the Senate, were of this character, and it is to the the credit of our conferees, and not to the discredit of the House bill that they were readily accepted.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in conclusion that if there are other amendments of the Senate, which according to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio very much improve the House bill, that I for one am very willing to see our handiwork improved, from whatever quarter that improvement may come, I hope that the measure has been so greatly improved by the collaboration of the Senate that it will now receive the support of the gentleman from Ohio, and his associates in their opposition to this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, the rule that was adopted provides that a motion to recommit may be offered. I shall offer a motion to recommit with instructions to insist upon the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment No. 31. When this measure was before the House the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] offered an amendment, which was adopted in the Committee of the Whole, providing that officers who might make arrests under section 1014 could issue search warrants. That amendment was adopted without debate, but when the House passed upon that amendment, after the Committee of the Whole had reported the bill, a roll call was had and that amendment was rejected by a vote of 285 to 73, and the 285 included the chairman of the committee, Mr. VOLSTEAD, of Minnesota. The Senate, however, reinserted that provision, and the conferees have agreed to the amendment in language somewhat modified but which still gives the officers mentioned in section 1014 the power to issue search warrants. This Congress has always safeguarded that right, and the only time that we passed such a provision was in the espionage law, adopted shortly after the declaration of war against Germany, and that law provides that this search warrant could only be issued by a United States judge or a State court or Territorial court of record or by a United States commissioner for a district. Now, what is proposed to be done by this amendment which the conferees have agreed to in utter violation of a record vote of this House, and in which the gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of the committee, joined? Under that section a search warrant may be issued by any chancellor, judge of a supreme court or a superior court, chief or first judge of common pleas, mayor of a city, justice of the peace, or other magistrate of any State. Now, what can be done under these search warrants? Congress in passing the espionage law confined this power to courts of record. And there was good reason for it.

In this act, which is a Federal act, the conferees are extending the powers of State officials to enforce a Federal law and provide that they may issue search warrants under which houses may be broken into and entered if admittance is refused, and where the application states that the property to be seized is in the house it may be entered in the nighttime. The reason that Congress safeguards this provision, even in the enforcement of the espionage law, was because Congress felt that people should be secure in their papers and that their homes should be inviolate except under the most extraordinary circumstances. And so this very House in this Congress, this session of Congress, in passing upon an amendment to this bill, upon this very measure, rejected the proposition that the authority to issue search warrants should be extended to justices of the peace, many of whom may not be versed in the law, and none of whom maintain courts of record. It was the theory of this Congress, including the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], the chairman of the committee, as shown by this record vote, that this privilege of issuing search warrants should be restricted, should be confined to those who are mentioned now in title 11 of the espionage act, section 1, and that that right should be confined to courts of record.

So, Mr. Speaker, I shall offer this motion to recommit, because I believe that this House will stand by the record vote which was cast on July 21, when by a vote of 285 to 73 they refused to sanction this proposition, which is substantially the one that was offered by the gentleman from Virginia and which was rejected at that time.

I have nothing further to say about this bill. I am opposed to it, and while the Senate amendments have liberalized it the bill is still objectionable. But I believe that these amendments of the Senate have gone far to remove some of the objectionable matter. But this amendment which has been accepted is, to my mind, an extremely objectionable one, and it is one of the few which was voted upon in this House and by an overwhelming majority was rejected. I hope this House will again go upon record against such an amendment as this.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB].

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, the talk we have had about the passage of the bill in the House is like discussing a last year's bird's nest. That is past and gone, and the water is over the dam. And, as observed here, our antiprohibition friends took up more space in the RECORD, probably by 50 per cent, than the dry people in discussing the bill. It was fully and fairly discussed. To-day's debate has been on how the conferees, one of whom I happen to be, had violated the rules of the House, had attempted to overturn the foundations and the policies of the Government in violating some great rule by their conduct in presenting this conference report. I have listened to all this debate, and I have yet to hear the first man lay one objection to anything before the House that the conferees on the part of the House put in the bill.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I yield, and I want my friend to name the language in which we exceeded our authority to which he objects.

Mr. GARD. I can name at least 10 points. As the gentleman says, this is water over the dam, because the resolution the gentleman voted for, declaring all points of order should be waived, makes it unnecessary to say anything about it.

Mr. WEBB. I will tell you what they objected to. Every one of the things they objected to liberalized the bill in favor of the antiprohibition people, and they would all have gladly voted for them if they had been presented in the House. They are objecting to what the wet people want. If anybody objects to the conference report, it ought to be the dry men, and it does not lie in the mouths of the whisky men of this House to come in and object to the liberal acts we reported. When this bill passed the House it provided that every man who was indicted for selling a beverage with one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol should have to prove that he had not done it. The burden of proving the alcoholic content was placed on the defendant. The gentleman from Ohio never did object to that provision, and yet it was a radical change in the proceedings of our courts by placing the burden of proof on the defendant in every such case. When that provision went to the Senate, the Senate struck out the whole of that section, and I am not telling any secret when I say that we stayed in "grips" for two weeks on that burden-of-proof proposition. In order to compromise it and get it back here, we agreed to put the burden of proof on the manufacturer alone, because he is familiar with what goes into the beverage, and we left the burden of proof on the Government as to the retailer, but provided in every case when the alcoholic content was analyzed that the reasonable expense for analyzing it should be taxed as a part of the costs. They say that is in violation of the rule and is about to overturn the Government because we agreed to it.

And the other provision was that the shipment should be in sealed containers or bottles, as prescribed by the commissioner. They are the only two that I know of wherein there is a ground for making the point of order that we exceeded our authority, and if we committed an error it was in behalf of the men who want liquor sold. Yet they are the ones who make the most fuss as to violation of the conference rules by your conferees.

My friend refers to the number of amendments that we yielded on. We yielded on 55 amendments where we struck out "That" at the beginning of each section. The Senate, out of its sense of style, struck "That" out and let the sentence just begin "The." It struck out the word "That" and left in the word "The." We agreed to that 55 times, and thus committed another offense. It was just a question of taste and of style, but we wanted to agree and get down to business, and we agreed to let the Senate have its way there.

Now, before my time expires, I want to discuss this section 1014 of the Revised Statutes, which my friend from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] referred to. When the amendment was offered in the House before and beaten, I want to say that the House did not fully understand it. I do not believe the House understood it, because Members said they did not understand it. It reads like this:

Officers authorized to issue warrants or cause arrests to be made under said section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are authorized to issue search warrants under the limitations provided in Title XI of the act approved June 15, 1917, Fortieth Statutes at Large, page 217, et seq.

What we did in the House, and the reason why the House voted against it, was that the House got the impression——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. WEBB. Has the time of the gentleman from Minnesota entirely expired? Give me one minute more.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. WEBB. The House got the impression that this not only authorized the issuance of search warrants, but arrests by these officers. So it struck out that language and made it read this way:

Officers mentioned in section 1014 are authorized to issue search warrants under the limitations provided in Title XI of the act approved June 15, 1917.

The gentleman from Missouri objects to that. Every State in the Union—and there are 48 of them, I believe—permits its justices of the peace and all other judicial officers to issue search warrants. What objection has a man who lives in a State—and we all do—against a judge issuing a search warrant?

Mr. IGOE. Why did not the committee permit them to do it under the espionage law?

Mr. WEBB. There we were treading on new ground, and the States did not have jurisdiction to enforce it. We could not leave it to the States. Why not trust these State judicial officers? I hope this House will trust them by defeating any motion to strike it out. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I think that instead of being subject to criticism, both the Committee on the Judiciary and the conference committee should receive from this House hearty thanks for performing the very arduous, embarrassing, and difficult work that they have had committed to them.

This legislation, which was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, was the most difficult piece of legislation that has ever been submitted to any committee, at least since I have been a Member of this House. Not only did it have to travel untraversed ground and make new precedents and arrange methods of meeting the duty that was imposed upon them, but it was necessary to meet a conspicuously difficult proposition, because of the fact that we had still under operation in this country the law with regard to war-time prohibition, as it has been termed.

I would have been better satisfied if separate measures had been brought in here, but I recognize the difficulty of the task which the committee had, and I certainly feel deeply under obligations to them for the manner in which they have performed their duty. Not only that, gentlemen, but I think we are under obligations to the committee for the very careful, considerate, and courteous manner in which the majority of the committee conducted the debate in this House during the progress of this legislation through the House. I was certainly surprised that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], who himself was treated with more consideration and courtesy than I ever saw exhibited on the floor of this House to any individual before, who more times secured unanimous consent to extend his remarks than I ever saw granted before to any individual, should object to the way in which that debate was carried on. For three weeks that bill was debated in the House. Every possible objection that the ingenuity of the very ingenious gentleman opposing this measure could suggest was brought forward in the House. They were all met, and, I believe, carefully and graciously. There was ample consideration afforded to every one of them.

I know that it has been said by gentlemen time and time again that this legislation was railroaded through the House. Gentlemen, there never was a piece of legislation placed more conspicuously and directly before the House than this legislation. Members were compelled to act under their constitutional obligations. They were compelled to pass this legislation because it was their duty to do so, and, as I said before, I believe they did their duty honestly and fairly. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in all the history of Congress in my judgment there has been no piece of legislation passed more important to the happiness of the homes in America than this bill.

I want to challenge the statements made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL], "that the American people can not be made by Congress to do anything which they do not want to do," and "that the people will not respect this law after Congress passes it." The characteristic American citizen is a law-loving, law-abiding citizen, and the great majority of American citizens, notwithstanding the fact that many are foreign born, are law-loving, law-abiding citizens and will obey any and all laws passed by Congress. We have passed in the history of this Nation only 18 amendments to the Constitution, and every single one of those amendments has been passed in the identical manner in which this seventeenth amendment was passed—submitted to the States by Congress, and by the legislatures of the various States ratified—and never before in the history of this Nation was any one of the 17 amendments thus far ratified more quickly acted on than this seventeenth amendment; and I want to call your attention to the fact that 44 of the 48 States in less than a year promptly ratified this seventeenth amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] has just complimented the work of the Judiciary Committee on this work it has done in the preparation and enactment of this bill. The members of the Judiciary Committee are no doubt all grateful for the kind remarks of the gentleman from Iowa. The members of the committee generally have done their duty conscientiously. But the work of the preparation of this bill has devolved largely upon one man, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. For months he has given a large part of his time to the work of perfecting this bill. He has done the work efficiently and conscientiously. We are about to take a final vote on our first national prohibition statute. It is a great measure, and for its preparation and its final passage in its present form the country is indebted, above all others, to the gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Hon. ANDREW J. VOLSTEAD.

Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this bill with a great deal of pleasure. In the adoption of the prohibition amendment the American people have taken a great step forward. Few measures have been enacted since the organization of our first Congress which are so far-reaching in influence as this measure will be. It will leave its impress upon the social, moral, and economic conditions of the Nation. It will be felt in every avenue of human activity and in every home. It will mold and modify the Nation at large. Through it a new Nation will be developed. It will be a better Nation. It will be a Nation with less crime, immorality, and injustice. It will be a more efficient Nation. It will be a greater Nation industrially, commercially, and financially. Through it will come better citizenship physically, intellectually, and morally. As a result of this measure there will come a higher standard in our political world. So I hail this measure as the harbinger of a greater Nation, a brighter day, and a better world.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. IGOE moves to recommit the conference report to the conferees with instructions to the House conferees to insist upon the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment No. 31.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is not permissible under the rules. There are no conferees any more on this bill. The Senate has passed this report, and the Senate conferees have been discharged, and this motion is clearly out of order under the rules.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand the gentleman. To be candid, the point of order comes to me as a surprise. I am not going to repeat what has been said about the way this bill has been handled, but the rule just adopted to-day provides not only that points of order can not be made and that the debate shall be limited, but it winds up by saying that one motion to recommit may be permitted. That rule was adopted by the House just an hour ago, and surely the gentleman from Minnesota can not have read the rule. We are bound by it. The majority of this House by a special rule governing the consideration of this conference report has provided for a motion to recommit, and all that I have submitted is a motion expressly permitted in the rule which has just been adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Missouri did not hear what the gentleman from Minnesota said. It was that the conferees on the part of the Senate had been discharged, so that there are not any conferees to whom the motion which he makes could be addressed.

Mr. IGOE. We are governed, as I take it, by this special rule, not by the rules of the Senate, and if this House by a majority vote adopts a rule which is senseless, because of some fact which does not appear in the rule itself, then the fault lies with the House, and we are not to be prejudiced in our right because of some fact which, it seems to me, it was the duty of the gentleman from Minnesota and others who proposed this rule to have informed the House of before the rule was adopted. I think the gentleman is estopped by the rule under which we are acting, which authorizes the minority to present a motion to recommit. What other right have we to secure an expression from the House upon this proposition?

Mr. RANDALL of California. The gentleman has the remedy. Let the House reject the conference report and ask for a further conference.

Mr. IGOE. When we suggested something here a little while ago the gentleman said, "You can vote up the rule and then vote down the conference report." But some Members of this House want an expression of opinion upon one feature of the conference report, a proposition which the House voted down before by a record vote. But the conferees, ignoring that record vote, go into the conference and agree to the Senate amendment setting up the very thing which the House rejected.

Mr. WEBB. I beg the gentleman's pardon. We struck out, and made it very clear that no one but the officers mentioned should issue search warrants. They had the idea that a deputy sheriff might do it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. IGOE. That is all I have to say.

The SPEAKER. It was the gentleman from North Carolina that the Chair could not hear.

Mr. WEBB. I intended to say that the gentleman from Missouri was mistaken when he said that the conferees adopted the very thing that was beaten in the House, because we have amended the language and made it clear what officers shall issue these warrants.

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman from North Carolina is mistaken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not pertinent to the point of order.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The fact that the rule permits a motion to recommit does not mean that any motion is in order. If the gentleman presents a motion to recommit that is in order, it should be permitted, but it is perfectly clear to me that the motion he offers is not in order. He can not recommit to conferees who have no existence.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman suggest any motion to recommit that would be in order?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not know of any that I can think of; it is for the gentleman to find some motion that is in order that he can avail himself of. Of course every rule of this kind that contains permission to move to reconsider is subject to the requirement that the motion to recommit is one that is in order, and I submit that under the circumstances no motion to recommit is in order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, while I am opposed to the motion to recommit, it seems to me very clear that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] has the right to make it. No new condition has developed since the rule was adopted. When the House voted on the rule it knew that the Senate conferees had been discharged. The rule against recommitting a conference report, when the conferees of the Senate have been discharged, is a rule of order of the House, but that rule has been avoided by the rule that we adopted this morning. If that rule provides for a vain or futile thing—and this motion to recommit is both vain and futile—the Chair is not called upon to hold it out of order. The House can do a foolish thing, if it is so minded, and when it does a foolish thing, if it is within its authority, such action does not present a question of order. The sole question now is whether the gentleman is asserting a right given to him by the rule. The right in its exercise may amount to nothing. As I have said, it may be a vain and futile thing that he is doing. But this rule expressly provides that there shall be a motion to recommit. To what committee, if recommitted, shall the conference report be sent? Plainly, to the conferees on the part of the House. As I caught the purport of the motion, it directs these conferees to do certain things. Well, the House can give these instructions. The House conferees have not been discharged, and we can instruct them as we see fit. The fact that the instructions can not be carried out and therefore are vain, is immaterial. The gentleman is entitled to make the motion that the rule provides may be made. When the motion is submitted, the House by its action can adopt, or reject it. That is our part in the procedure which the rule has provided. The Speaker in admitting the gentleman from Missouri to make this motion, is merely carrying out the provisions of a rule deliberately adopted by the House. If this provision of the rule is a foolish one, the responsibility for this folly attaches to the House which agreed to the rule. The gentleman from Missouri is entitled to exercise a right explicitly afforded by the action of this body when it fixed the terms for the consideration of this report.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. There is one point of order pending.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair hear me on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I take it that when the conference committee presents its conference report for the consideration of the House, and their report is placed before the House for action, the conferees are thereby discharged from the further consideration of the bill and the disagreements in conference. A rule which would make it in order to offer one motion to recommit legislation to conferees when they have ceased to exist would be absolutely without value, merit, or standing, even though it is a rule passed by the House, if there are no conferees to whom the matter could be recommitted. In other words, if there are no conferees, even though the House has adopted a rule providing that there could be one motion to recommit, I submit to the Chair that the rule is meaningless and without standing before the House, and is absolutely without value, because we have no conferees to whom we could recommit the bill. For, if this conference report is disapproved by the House, conferees will again have to be appointed by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that this is an awkward and quite unprecedented situation. If it were not for the fact that the rule especially permits the motion to recommit, the Chair would have no hesitation, following the precedents in ruling, that the motion to recommit was out of order, because the conferees on the part of the Senate have been discharged and there is really no conference committee to whom it could be recommitted.

But, as the gentleman from Virginia forcibly says, the rule which the House adopted in the full light of the conditions, knowing that the Senate conferees had been discharged, especially authorized a motion to recommit. The Chair agrees with the gentleman from Virginia that it is a vain and futile thing, but the Chair does not think that it is within the province of the Chair to invalidate a rule which the House has just passed. While it seems to the Chair that the adoption of such a motion would be useless—and the Chair can only speculate what might be the fate of the bill if the motion should carry—at the same time the Chair does not think it is within the province of the Chair to nullify what the House has just adopted with its eyes open. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. IGOE) there were—ayes 44, noes 105.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 83, nays 218, answered "present" 2, not voting 126, as follows:

YEAS—83.

Bee	Eagan	Lampert	O'Connor
Blackmon	Eagle	Lazaro	Ogden
Booher	Edmonds	Lea, Calif.	Pell
Browning	Fitzgerald	Lehlbach	Phelan
Burdick	Flood	Linthicum	Pou
Burke	Ganly	Lonergan	Radcliffe
Caldwell	Gard	Longworth	Rainey, J. W.
Campbell, Pa.	Garland	McDuffie	Ramsey
Carew	Glynn	McGlennon	Rhodes
Carss	Goldfogle	McKiniry	Riordan
Clark, Mo.	Griffin	McLane	Rodenberg
Cleary	Hamill	MacCrate	Rowan
Coady	Haskell	MacGregor	Sanford
Crago	Heflin	Madden	Smith, N. Y.
Cullen	Holland	Martin	Sullivan
Curry, Calif.	Humphreys	Mead	Tilson
Denison	Igoe	Minahan, N. J.	Volgt
Dent	Jefferis	Mudd	Walsh
Donovan	Johnston, N. Y.	Newton, Mo.	Watson, Pa.
Dooling	Juul	Nolan	Watson, Va.
Dupré	Kahn	O'Connell

NAYS—218.

Alexander	Evans, Mont.	Kincheloe	Sanders, La.
Almon	Evans, Nebr.	King	Saunders, Va.
Anderson	Evans, Nev.	Kinkaid	Sears
Andrews, Nebr.	Fairfield	Kitchin	Sims
Ashbrook	Ferris	Kraus	Sinnott
Aswell	Fess	Lanham	Smith, Idaho
Ayres	Fields	Lankford	Smith, Mich.
Baer	Fisher	Layton	Smithwick
Bankhead	Focht	Luhring	Snell
Barbour	Fordney	McFadden	Steagall
Barkley	Freeman	McKenzie	Stedman
Begg	French	McKeown	Steenerson
Benham	Garner	McLaughlin, Mich.	Stevenson
Benson	Garrett	Major	Stiness
Black	Good	Mansfield	Strong, Kans.
Bland, Mo.	Goodwin, Ark.	Mapes	Summers, Wash.
Bland, Va.	Gould	Michener	Sumners, Tex.
Blanton	Graham, Ill.	Miller	Sweet
Boies	Green, Iowa	Monahan, Wis.	Taylor, Colo.
Bowers	Greene, Mass.	Mondell	Temple
Box	Greene, Vt.	Moon	Thomas
Briggs	Griest	Moore, Ohio	Thompson
Brinson	Hadley	Moore, Va.	Tillman
Brooks, Ill.	Hamilton	Morgan	Timberlake
Browne	Hardy, Colo.	Mott	Tincher
Brumbaugh	Hardy, Tex.	Neely	Towner
Buchanan	Hastings	Nelson, Mo.	Treadway
Burroughs	Haugen	Nelson, Wis.	Venable
Butler	Hawley	Newton, Minn.	Vestal
Byrnes, S. C.	Hayden	Nichols, Mich.	Vinson.
Byrns, Tenn.	Hays	Oldfield	Volstead
Campbell, Kans.	Hernandez	Oliver	Walters
Candler	Hersey	Osborne	Wason
Cannon	Hersman	Overstreet	Watkins
Carter	Hickey	Padgett	Weaver
Cole	Hicks	Park	Webb
Connally	Hill	Parrish	Webster
Cooper	Hoch	Platt	Welling
Cramton	Howard	Quin	Welty
Crisp	Huddleston	Raker	Whaley
Dale	Hudspeth	Ramseyer	Wheeler
Dallinger	Hulings	Randall, Calif.	White, Kans.
Darrow	Hull, Tenn.	Randall, Wis.	White, Me.
Davis, Minn.	Jacoway	Rayburn	Williams
Davis, Tenn.	James	Reavis	Wilson, La.
Dickinson, Mo.	Johnson, Ky.	Reed, W. Va.	Wilson, Pa.
Dickinson, Iowa.	Johnson, Miss.	Ricketts	Winslow
Dominick	Johnson, Wash.	Riddick	Wood, Ind.
Dowell	Jones, Pa.	Robinson, N. C.	Woods, Va.
Drane	Jones, Tex.	Rogers	Woodyard
Dunbar	Kearns	Romjue	Yates
Echols	Keller	Rose	Young, N. Dak.
Elliott	Kelly, Pa.	Rubey	Young, Tex.
Elston	Kendall	Rucker
Esch	Kiess	Sanders, Ind.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2.

Johnson, S. Dak. Knutson

NOT VOTING—126.

Ackerman	Frear	McClintic	Schall
Andrews, Md.	Fuller, Ill.	McCulloch	Scott
Anthony	Fuller, Mass.	McKinley	Scully
Babka	Gallagher	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Sells
Bacharach	Gallivan	McPherson	Sherwood
Bell	Gandy	Magee	Shreve
Bland, Ind.	Godwin, N. C.	Maher	Siegel
Brand	Goodall	Mann	Sinclair
Britten	Goodykoontz	Mason	Sisson
Brooks, Pa.	Graham, Pa.	Mays	Slemp
Cantrill	Harrison	Merritt	Small
Caraway	Houghton	Montague	Smith, Ill.
Casey	Hull, Iowa	Mooney	Snyder
Chindblom	Husted	Moore, Pa.	Steele
Christopherson	Hutchinson	Moores, Ind.	Stephens, Miss.
Clark, Fla.	Ireland	Morin	Stephens, Ohio
Classon	Kelley, Mich.	Murphy	Strong, Pa.
Collier	Kennedy, Iowa	Nicholls, S. C.	Swope
Copley	Kennedy, R. I.	Olney	Taylor, Ark.
Costello	Kettner	Paige	Taylor, Tenn.
Crowther	Kleczka	Parker	Tinkham
Currie, Mich.	Kreider	Peters	Upshaw
Davey	LaGuardia	Porter	Valle
Dempsey	Langley	Purnell	Vare
Dewalt	Larsen	Rainey, H. T.	Ward
Doremus	Lee, Ga.	Reber	Wilson, Ill.
Doughton	Lesher	Reed, N. Y.	Wingo
Dunn	Little	Robsion, Ky.	Wise
Dyer	Luce	Rouse	Wright
Ellsworth	Lufkin	Rowe	Zihlman
Emerson	McAndrews	Sabath
Foster	McArthur	Sanders, N. Y.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. ACKERMAN with Mr. GODWIN of Arkansas.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON with Mr. HARRISON.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois with Mr. LESHER.

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts with Mr. MAYS.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan with Mr. UPSHAW.

On the vote:

Mr. BACHARACH (for) with Mr. CARAWAY (against).

Mr. WARD (for) with Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (against).

Mr. STEELE (for) with Mr. GANDY (against).

Mr. SCULLY (for) with Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania (against).

Mr. GALLIVAN (for) with Mr. MAGEE (against).

Mr. TINKHAM (for) with Mr. FOSTER (against).

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania (for) with Mr. PURNELL (against).

Mr. LAGUARDIA (for) with Mr. CROWTHER (against).

Mr. MAHER (for) with Mr. SINCLAIR (against).

Mr. GALLAGHER (for) with Mr. HOUGHTON (against).

Mr. MCANDREWS (for) with Mr. MONTAGUE (against).

Mr. HULL of Iowa (for) with Mr. ANTHONY (against).

Mr. DYER (for) with Mr. SHREVE (against).

Mr. REBER (for) with Mr. BLAND of Indiana (against).

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay," but I have a pair with the gentleman from New York, Mr. WARD, and wish to withdraw my vote of "nay" and answer "present."

The name of Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. KNUTSON. Is the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BELL, recorded?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. KNUTSON. Then I wish to withdraw my vote of "nay" and answer "present."

The name of Mr. KNUTSON was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. IGOE) there were—ayes 156, noes 62.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 230, nays 69, answered "present" 1, not voting 129, as follows:

YEAS—230.

Alexander	Benham	Browne	Clark, Mo.
Almon	Benson	Browning	Cole
Anderson	Black	Brumbaugh	Connally
Andrews, Nebr.	Bland, Mo.	Burroughs	Cooper
Ashbrook	Bland, Va	Butler	Cramton
Aswell	Blanton	Byrnes, S. C.	Crisp
Ayres	Boies	Byrns, Tenn.	Dale
Baer	Bowers	Campbell, Kans.	Dallinger
Bankhead	Box	Candler	Darrow
Barbour	Briggs	Cannon	Davis, Minn.
Barkley	Brinson	Carss	Davis, Tenn.
Begg	Brooks, Ill.	Carter	Denison

Dickinson, Mo.	Hickey	Moon	Steenerson
Dickinson, Iowa	Hicks	Moore, Ohio	Stevenson
Dominick	Hill	Moore, Va.	Stiness
Dowell	Hoch	Morgan	Strong, Kans.
Drane	Holland	Mott	Summers, Wash.
Dunbar	Howard	Neely	Sumners, Tex.
Echols	Huddleston	Nelson, Mo.	Sweet
Elliott	Hudspeth	Nelson, Wis.	Taylor, Colo.
Elston	Hulings	Newton, Minn.	Temple
Esch	Hull, Tenn.	Oldfield	Thomas
Evans, Mont.	Jacoway	Oliver	Thompson
Evans, Nebr.	James	Osborne	Tillman
Evans, Nev.	Johnson, Ky.	Overstreet	Timberlake
Fairfield	Johnson, Miss.	Padgett	Tincher
Ferris	Johnson, Wash.	Park	Towner
Fess	Jones, Pa.	Parrish	Treadway
Fields	Jones, Tex.	Platt	Venable
Fisher	Kearns	Quin	Vestal
Flood	Keller	Raker	Vinson
Focht	Kelly, Pa.	Ramseyer	Volstead
Fordney	Kendall	Randall, Calif.	Walsh
Freeman	Kiess	Randall, Wis.	Walters
French	Kincheloe	Rayburn	Wason
Gard	King	Reavis	Watkins
Garner	Kinkaid	Reed, W. Va.	Watson, Va.
Garrett	Kitchin	Rhodes	Weaver
Good	Knutson	Ricketts	Webb
Goodwin, Ark.	Kraus	Riddick	Webster
Gould	Lanham	Robinson, N. C.	Welling
Graham, Ill.	Lankford	Rogers	Welty
Greene, Mass.	Layton	Romjue	Whaley
Greene, Vt.	Lufkin	Rose	Wheeler
Griest	Luhring	Rubey	White, Kans.
Hadley	McDuffie	Rucker	White, Me.
Hamilton	McFadden	Sanders, Ind.	Williams
Hardy, Colo.	McKenzie	Sanders, La.	Wilson, La.
Hardy, Tex.	McKeown	Saunders, Va.	Wilson, Pa.
Hastings	McLaughlin, Mich.	Sears	Winslow
Haugen	MacGregor	Sims	Wood, Ind.
Hawley	Major	Sinnott	Woods, Va.
Hayden	Mansfield	Smith, Idaho	Woodyard
Hays	Mapes	Smith, Mich.	Yates
Heflin	Michener	Smithwick	Young, N. Dak.
Hernandez	Miller	Snell	Young, Tex.
Hersey	Monahan, Wis.	Steagall
Hersman	Mondell	Stedman

NAYS—69.

Bee	Eagan	Lea, Calif.	Ogden
Blackmon	Edmonds	Lehlbach	Pell
Booher	Fitzgerald	Linthicum	Phelan
Buchanan	Ganly	Lonergan	Pou
Burdick	Garland	Longworth	Radcliffe
Burke	Glynn	McGlennon	Rainey, J. W.
Caldwell	Goldfogle	McKiniry	Ramsey
Campbell, Pa.	Griffin	McLane	Riordan
Carew	Hamill	MacCrate	Rodenberg
Cleary	Haskell	Madden	Rowan
Coady	Humphreys	Martin	Sanford
Crago	Igoe	Mead	Smith, N. Y.
Cullen	Jefferis	Minahan, N. J.	Sullivan
Curry, Calif.	Johnston, N. Y.	Mudd	Tilson
Dent	Juul	Newton, Mo.	Voigt
Donovan	Kahn	Nolan
Dooling	Lampert	O'Connell
Dupré	Lazaro	O'Connor

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1.

Johnson, S. Dak.

NOT VOTING—129.

Ackerman	Frear	McCulloch	Scott
Andrews, Md.	Fuller, Ill.	McKinley	Scully
Anthony	Fuller, Mass.	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Sells
Babka	Gallagher	McPherson	Sherwood
Bacharach	Gallivan	Magee	Shreve
Bell	Gandy	Maher	Siegel
Bland, Ind.	Godwin, N. C.	Mann	Sinclair
Brand	Goodall	Mason	Sisson
Britten	Goodykoontz	Mays	Slemp
Brooks, Pa.	Graham, Pa.	Merritt	Small
Cantrill	Green, Iowa	Montague	Smith, Ill.
Caraway	Harrison	Mooney	Snyder
Casey	Houghton	Moore, Pa.	Steele
Chindblom	Hull, Iowa	Moores, Ind.	Stephens, Miss.
Christopherson	Husted	Morin	Stephens, Ohio
Clark, Fla.	Hutchinson	Murphy	Strong, Pa.
Classon	Ireland	Nicholls, S. C.	Swope
Collier	Kelley, Mich.	Nichols, Mich.	Taylor, Ark.
Copley	Kennedy, Iowa	Olney	Taylor, Tenn.
Costello	Kennedy, R. I.	Paige	Tinkham
Crowther	Kettner	Parker	Upshaw
Currie, Mich.	Kleczka	Peters	Valle
Davey	Kreider	Porter	Vare
Dempsey	LaGuardia	Purnell	Ward
Dewalt	Langley	Rainey, H. T.	Watson, Pa.
Doremus	Larsen	Reber	Wilson, Ill
Doughton	Lee, Ga.	Reed, N. Y.	Wingo
Dunn	Lesher	Robsion, Ky.	Wise
Dyer	Little	Rouse	Wright
Eagle	Luce	Rowe	Zihlman
Ellsworth	McAndrews	Sabath
Emerson	McArthur	Sanders, N. Y.
Foster	McClintic	Schall

So the conference report was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. SHREVE (for) with Mr. DYER (against).

Mr. ANTHONY (for) with Mr. HULL of Iowa (against).

Mr. MONTAGUE (for) with Mr. MCANDREWS (against).

Mr. HOUGHTON (for) with Mr. GALLAGHER (against).

Mr. SINCLAIR (for) with Mr. MAHER (against).

Mr. CROWTHER (for) with Mr. LAGUARDIA (against).

Mr. PURNELL (for) with Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania (against).

Mr. FOSTER (for) with Mr. TINKHAM (against).

Mr. MAGEE (for) with Mr. GALLIVAN (against).

Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania (for) with Mr. SCULLY (against).

Mr. GANDY (for) with Mr. STEELE (against).

Mr. CARAWAY (for) with Mr. BACHARACH (against).

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (for) with Mr. WARD (against).

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina (for) with Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania (against).

Mr. BLAND of Indiana (for) with Mr. REBER (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. LANGLEY with Mr. BELL.

Mr. HAMILTON with Mr. EAGLE.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I was not. I simply desire to state that I misunderstood the call, and if I had been present I should have voted "aye."

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the same statement. I would have voted "aye" if I had been present.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from New York, Mr. WARD, and I desire to withdraw my vote of "aye" and answer "present."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "aye," but I was not present. I make the same statement as the others.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. That is not necessary.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WEBSTER. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday of last week Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, appeared before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and submitted his views in reference to certain legislation then under consideration by the committee. At that time I asked Mr. Gompers some questions. On the 7th of this month I received a letter from Mr. Gompers dealing with the testimony given by him on that occasion. On the 9th of this month I replied to that letter. I desire to ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to insert in the RECORD a copy of Mr. Gompers's letter and a copy of my reply. I am sure any gentleman who will take the pains to examine the correspondence will have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter from Mr. Gompers and his reply to the same. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not understand what the gentleman asked. What does the gentleman desire to insert in the RECORD?

Mr. WEBSTER. I want to insert a copy of a letter received by me from Mr. Samuel Gompers and a copy of my answer to that letter.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman's letter and his answer to the same. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letters are as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., October 6, 1919.

DEAR SIR: At the hearing before the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the House of Representatives on Saturday, October 4, when the committee had under consideration the Esch bill and the general conditions of labor were discussed, you asked me a question which you put in several forms, and, unsatisfied with my answer, you stated that I hesitated in giving my reply. Your manner impressed me as if you intimated that I would not care to make a direct reply to your question. This thought has grown upon me since then. I have been so engrossed with duties that I could not defer, or I should have written you earlier.

The transcript of the testimony is not before me and I have only my memory to serve me. In substance, you asked me that if the Congress should pass a law making it unlawful for two or more persons to cease work and the courts decided that such an act was constitutional, whether I would still hold that these workers had the right to cease work.

I endeavored to give a direct answer, and the record will so show. Unless you may misunderstand the record or I have not made myself clear, I now state to you that I now hold and would, in the eventuality which you suggested, hold that no bill enacted by Congress, whether held by the courts to be constitutional or unconstitutional, will deprive the right of free men from giving their service or withholding it; that no compulsory labor—slavery—can in this day and time be enacted and enforced.

I have an abiding faith in the patriotism and the good judgment of the Members of Congress, that no matter how much they and others in common with myself deplore strikes and lockouts, no matter how much any of us may do to try and avert and prevent them, that an attempt to reintroduce slavery—involuntary servitude—is neither a cure for nor an expedient method for strikes and lockouts.

After all your question was, as I stated at the hearing, speculative and hypothetical, one which I could have entirely declined to answer, much less be required to answer at all. I endeavored to be frank with you and the committee and did not, as you stated or intimated, hesitate at all.

You stated that you intended to make an address to the Congress, and if ever a Member of the House indicated opposition to labor you indicated it by your demeanor.

There may be and no doubt are radicals in the labor movement. There are some Bolshevists in the United States, who claim to speak in the name and in the interests of labor. These the organized labor movement of America regard as enemies to the cause of labor and justice and enemies to the Republic of the United States.

I beg to remind you that there are men in other walks of life, some standpatters and reactionaries among employers and big business men and lawyers, who by their conduct may be well termed capitalistic anarchists and Bolshevists, and it is a fair question whether the latter are not primarily responsible for the former.

Your attention should be called to the fact that the constitution of the Bolshevist Government of Russia provided for compulsory servitude.

Respectfully, yours,

SAMUEL GOMPERS.

J. STANLEY WEBSTER,
Care House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

—

OCTOBER 9, 1919.

DEAR SIR: I have before me your letter of October 6, in which you state, in effect, that during your discussion of the so-called Esch bill and general labor conditions before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on Saturday, October 4, I asked you a question in varying form of words and indicated by my demeanor that I thought you did not care to make a direct reply. You then say that at the time of writing your letter you did not have before you a transcript of the testimony, but from memory undertook to state the substance of the question in these words: "In substance you asked me that if the Congress should pass a law making it unlawful for two or more persons to cease work and the courts decided that such an act was constitutional, whether I would still hold that these workers had the right to cease work."

The record discloses beyond cavil that I asked you no such question, either in words, substance, or effect. A deliberate attempt to misstate the question could scarcely have succeeded better. I can only account for your misstatement of the question by the fact that you say you did not have before you a transcript of the testimony and that your mind had been engrossed with other pressing duties. There is absolutely nothing in any question asked by me, considered singly or in the series of questions asked considered as a whole, which affords even the slightest foundation for your attempted restatement of the substance of my inquiry. Unlike yourself, at the time of writing I do have before me an official transcript of your testimony, and, in order that you may clearly see how utterly you failed to state the question with anything even approximating accuracy, I shall set forth the question that was asked:

"Mr. WEBSTER. It is my purpose to make some observations in Congress upon your testimony, and I have not the slightest purpose to misquote you or to misconstrue anything you say. I want you to keep me from doing that by telling me frankly, without any qualification or condition, just what your position is. I had gotten the impression from the newspaper reports of your testimony before the Senate committee that you had, in effect, taken the position that you would defy the laws of your country. Of course, I would not act upon that and I should like before this committee, speaking in an official capacity, to ask you this question, and I want you to give me a fair answer so that there will be no possibility of misconstruction of what your position is.

"Suppose this Congress should incorporate in the bill that we now have under consideration some provision or provisions relating to compulsory arbitration and denying to some extent or qualifying your right to strike, and that law should be tested through the ordinary channels and in accordance with the established procedure to the point where the Supreme Court of the United States declared that law in all respects to be constitutional and valid, would you advise the men constituting the organizations which you represent to go counter to the provisions of that law so interpreted and construed by the Supreme Court of the Untied States?"

Albeit you state in your letter that "I endeavored to give a direct answer, and the record will so show," your answer to the above question was as follows:

"Mr GOMPERS. The question that has been propounded is one to which I have made answer."

The record discloses that no such question had been propounded and no answer, either direct or evasive, had been made to any such question. Proceeding, you said:

"Of course I do not think that I shall ever again work as a wage earner in a factory; it would be simply impossible—that is, for any practical purposes. I would say that if I were a wage worker, I would still assert my right to quit my employment, even though in asserting that right it involved a violation of a declared constitutional statute. I would assert my right to quit work, to leave my employment, the same right as you have, sir, the same right as every other man in business has or in the law has to quit employment, to quit his client at any time when his interests or his whim or his fancy prompt him. No one undertakes to stop any man from quitting his business."

This comprises your entire answer. My question referred to a law relating to compulsory arbitration and "denying to some extent or qualifying your right to strike." Not one word was said in the question about one's right to quit one's employment, and your answer was a palpable evasion of the question propounded. Not one word was stated as to what advice you would give, and that was the very gist of the question.

Your reference to the legal profession, which both your testimony before the committee and your letter indicate you hold in such scant respect, was hardly a happy one. Do you not know that a lawyer may be compelled against his will and without compensation to defend an impecunious prisoner? Do you not know that in many situations a lawyer may not "quit his client when his interest or his whim or his fancy prompt him," but before ceasing his employment must seek and obtain permission of the court? Is it your conception that a lawyer possesses the right, pursuant to his whim, to quit his client in the midst of a trial where the client's life is at stake? The profession to which I have the honor to belong, and for which I have no apology to offer, either to you or to anyone else, is compelled to render what you would no doubt be pleased to characterize involuntary service and is required to submit to what you would perhaps denominate involuntary servitude, but for the reason, if you please, that the orderly administration of justice in the interest of the people as a whole is greater than the right of any individual, no matter what his profession may be.

My question was, "Would you advise the men constituting the organizations which you represent to go counter to the provisions of that law, so interpreted and construed by the Supreme Court of the United States?" Where, in your entire and complete answer, is there to be found one syllable as to what advice you would give the workmen under the circumstances indicated by my question. You were pleased to preface your answer by stating, "Of course, I do not think that I shall ever again work as a wage earner in a factory," and contented yourself with a statement of what you would do if you were engaged as a wage worker, but you were significantly silent as to what advice you would give the men, which was the very essence of the question. This is indeed a splendid sample of how you made "a direct answer, and the record will so show." The plain truth can not be gainsaid that you either intentionally or unintentionally evaded the question, and your answer was wholly irresponsive; in fact, it was no answer at all to the question asked.

Here is another sample of a direct answer which the record will show: "If such a law as I have just indicated (referring to the question above quoted) should be passed by Congress, and, in accordance with the established and orderly procedure of our Government, should be sustained as within the constitutional power of the Congress to enact, would you advise or encourage or counsel the men comprising your organization and who look to you as their leader, their counselor, and their adviser to-day to act in violation of the provisions of that declared constitutional statute?"

Answer:

"Mr. GOMPERS. You said, Mr. WEBSTER, that you had read in the newspaper what purported to be my statement before the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate in regard to the majority of the matters that I am discussing."

"Mr. WEBSTER. Yes, sir.

"Mr. GOMPERS. I may say that so far as I know the testimony and statements made by witnesses, myself included, were taken down stenographically and made a part of the official record of the committee, and I would commend them to you if you desire to learn my attitude upon that subject, rather than the newspapers.

"Mr. WEBSTER. I said that I had no intention of acting upon any newspaper report of your testimony."

Here again is evasion. In answer to a plain, specific question you referred me to a dissertation upon general principles to be found in the voluminous hearings before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce.

You state in your letter that "I endeavored to be frank with you and the committee and did not, as you stated or intimated, hesitate at all." The moral effect and the truth of past occurrences can not be changed by bold assertion. I wonder if in making that statement you had in mind the fact that the record "will so show" this question and answer:

"Mr. WEBSTER. You have just stated that if this law (the one just referred to) should be declared constitutional, though it were your personal opinion that it was unconstitutional, that you would not advise the members of your organization to obey the law. Am I to understand from that that you would withhold the benefit of your very great influence as an exponent of labor in this country in a matter of encouraging obedience to the laws?

"Mr. GOMPERS. Your question is entirely speculative and hypothetical. My work and the character of my work, my services, stand. I am willing to submit them to any prejudicial opinion which may be held of me."

Another instance of a "direct answer, and the record will so show." However, when in referring to the same law I asked, "Would you counsel or advise the workmen to obey it?" you answered, "No, sir. I should probably remain quiet upon that subject and permit them to act as their judgment as law-abiding citizens directed them; but I would appeal and make the most strenuous efforts of which I was capable to secure a reversal of the Supreme Court's decision by the people through their Congressmen in the next Congress, as the decisions of the Supreme Court have been reversed in many instances by Congress and by the people, etc."

Since you submit your work, the character of your work—your services—as your answer to my question whether you would withhold the benefit of your influence as the president of the American Federation of Labor in so important a matter as that of encouraging obedience to the constitutional laws of your country, and then emphatically assert that you would withhold such influence, am I to understand that this reflects your consistent attitude of mind as disclosed by your work and services, or have you, like your colleague, William Z. Foster, had a change of heart? The public has recently discovered that it is not safe to act upon the past work, services, and declarations of men as indicative of their attitude upon important public problems. Shortly after Representative COOPER, of Ohio, disclosed upon the floor of the House of Representatives "the work and the character of the work—the services" of William Z. Foster, Mr. Foster announced to a Senate committee that he had changed his mind and courted a star chamber session of the committee, with the newspaper correspondents excluded, so that he might in private make a new confession of faith.

In the light of this experience, it was my sincere purpose to ascertain what your present views were on the very important question: Are the constitutional enactments of the Congress advisory merely, to be obeyed only when they suit one's convenience, whim, or caprice, or are they the sovereign laws of a great nation to be voluntarily obeyed and respected by every good citizen and to be vigorously enforced by all the power of the State against those who defy and violate them?

During the process of my examination I asked you these questions:

"Mr. WEBSTER. When your point of view is so definite and well understood upon a matter of this sort, why should you hesitate to give me the benefit of it now?

"Mr. GOMPERS. I do not hesitate.

"Mr. WEBSTER. Well, then, Mr. Gompers, you may answer this question for me; yes or no. The Congress of the United States places upon the statute book a law relating to compulsory arbitration and the right of labor to strike, which, in your judgment, trenches upon the constitutional right of an American free man in that behalf, and that law is brought on for a test in the courts as to its constitutionality, and it finally reaches the Supreme Court of the United States, and that tribunal declares that the law is constitutional, that the limitations placed upon the right to strike are valid, and that the machinery arranged for the arbitration of disputes is legal and constitutional, would you, as the president of the American Federation of Labor, advise and counsel obedience to the law or not?"

Your answer was as follows:

"Mr. GOMPERS: Perhaps I may be entirely in error, but I think the question is unintelligibly stated. It occurs to me that it is unintelligible—that part of the question, that if the Congress should enact a law for compulsory arbitration and the right to strike. What I think was intended was to prevent the right to strike."

This answer was a plain misstatement of the question; and, with no pride in the form of the question, I assert that for a man of your acuteness of intellect to characterize that question as unintelligible is to resort to plain subterfuge, and no amount of explaining on your part can refute the assertion.

Notwithstanding your indicated hostility to the legal profession, I beg to remind you that the guaranty against involuntary servitude contained in the Constitution of the United States was formulated by lawyers, and has been steadfastly safeguarded by lawyers ever since. No body of men have ever been more loyal to any principle than have the lawyers of this country to that principle.

I note that you say in your letter "you stated that you intended to make an address to the Congress; and if ever a Member of the House indicated opposition to labor, you indicated it by your demeanor." Please permit me to assure you that this statement will not disturb me in the least. It is astounding to think that any fair mind will attribute to me hostility toward labor merely because I am not in sympathy with an individual, no matter how exalted his position may be, who hesitates openly to stand up and say, "I am an American citizen, amenable to the laws of my country. I believe in a government of law—not of class—and I shall at all times and under all circumstances render obedience to the constitutional laws of my Government, and will advise and encourage others to do likewise."

Respectfully, yours,

(Signed) J. STANLEY WEBSTER.

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
Care American Federation of Labor, Washington, D. C.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I would like permission to revise and extend my remarks made on the floor to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks made to-day. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE, ETC.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department of the House of Representatives, and any subcommittees thereof, be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House and the recess of Congress, and may meet at such places as said committee deems advisable, and compel the attendance of witnesses, send for persons and papers, and administer oaths to witnesses.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have serious doubt whether simply asking unanimous consent that a committee may do that will confer adequate authority upon the committee. I think it should be in the form of a resolution, which should be adopted by the House. I think if the gentleman simply asks unanimous consent that this committee may summon witnesses, issue subpœnas, and administer oaths, that if it is simply the unanimous consent of the House that the gentleman will find he may have to come back to the House for further authority; that this must be done by legislation.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. WALSH. I think he needs a certified copy of the resolution.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House resolution No. 151, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 151.

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department of the House of Representatives, and any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to sit during sessions of the House and the recess of the Congress, and may meet at such places as said committee deems advisable, and compel the attendance of witnesses, send for persons and papers, and administer oaths to witnesses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, under the phraseology of this resolution, providing that they may sit anywhere they deem advisable, this committee, or any subcommittee thereof, if it sees fit, without authorization from Congress, could sit in France or in Italy or anywhere else in the world at the expense of the people of the United States. It says they may sit anywhere they may deem advisable; and other committees have gone to France and have gone to England and other places abroad, and other subcommittees have lately visited many distant places in the United States, and, I take it, that if other committees have seen fit to go abroad, this subcommittee might do likewise. Therefore I object.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman withhold that a moment until I make a statement? I will say there is not any intention of doing anything of the kind that the gentleman has outlined. This brings in the Navy Department, as to the investigation of the Norfolk Navy Yard. Certain charges have been made, and in all fairness the officers and others down there ought to be heard, and we can not bring them all here to Washington. We want to go there to obtain their side of the case. We have not given out any statement in regard to our investigations, because we want to be fair and hear both sides of the story. We want to go down to the Norfolk Navy Yard in order to hear the other side of the story, and New York is another place to which we want to go. Conditions have been developed by our committee where certain witnesses ought to be examined. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] is a distinguished member of the committee, and he is in favor of this resolution, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN] is a member, and in the interest of facilitating our work this resolution ought to be agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASKELL. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. When the hearings are held here in Washington every Member of Congress has access to them and has the same benefit as every member of the committee. If the hearings are held elsewhere Members of Congress are deprived of that privilege. It is easier and cheaper for witnesses to come here than for the committee to go to the witnesses. If the subcommittee can meet at Norfolk and at other places which the gentleman intimates they can meet at San Francisco, or in Seattle, or in Paris, France.

Mr. HASKELL. The gentleman can be sure that this committee will not abuse any power conferred upon it by this Congress. We have been very conservative in every move that we have made. We are conducting an economical investigation, and all we desire is an opportunity to complete the work.

Mr. BLANTON. Without reflecting in any way on any committee that has made visitations, I think there is entirely too much junketing. And I object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the prohibition bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leaves of absence were granted as follows:

To Mr. CROWTHER, for four days (at request of Mr. HICKS).

To Mr. WINGO, on account of illness (at request of Mr. SUMNERS of Texas).

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the latter request I would like to state that I was asked to make it on yesterday, as Mr. WINGO was ill yesterday. I merely want to make that statement, as I overlooked making the request at that time.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Saturday, October 11, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Winyah Bay, S. C., with a view to securing a channel of increased depth and adequate width from a point on the Sampit River 1 mile above the limits of the city of Georgetown to the entrance of Winyah Bay (H. Doc. No. 261), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting report on the development of the unused lands of the country (H. Doc. No. 262); to the Committee on the Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. GOULD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9821) to amend an act entitled "An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1901, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 370), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MAYS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 3016) to authorize the disposition of certain grazing lands in the State of Utah, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 371), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CRAGO, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7752) relating to detached service of officers of the Regular Army, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 372), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2464) granting a pension to George Gwynne, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON: A bill (H. R. 9846) to enlarge, extend, and remodel the post-office building at Albert Lea, Minn., or to authorize the purchase of a site and erection and completion of a building thereon, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9847) to enlarge, extend, and remodel the post-office building at Rochester, Minn., or to authorize the purchase of a site and erection and completion of a building thereon, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9848) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection and completion of a public building thereon at Waseca, Minn.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BUTLER: A bill (H. R. 9849) authorizing the return to its former owners of certain land, title to which was taken by the United States by proclamation of the President for the enlargement of the naval training station, Great Lakes, Ill., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. LONERGAN: A bill (H. R. 9850) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Connecticut River between Windsor Locks and East Windsor, at Warehouse Point, in the county of Hartford, Conn.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BEGG: A bill (H. R. 9851) granting a pension to Henry M. Smith; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9852) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Heimlich; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BENSON: A bill (H. R. 9853) granting an increase of pension to Worthington Fringer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BOWERS: A bill (H. R. 9854) granting an increase of pension to Edgar C. Martin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARTER: A bill (H. R. 9855) granting an increase of pension to Lysa B. Ringold; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9856) granting an increase of pension to Ernest R. Lee; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COPLEY: A bill (H. R. 9857) granting an increase of pension to Edward J. Bean; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DUNBAR: A bill (H. R. 9858) granting a pension to Belle Mitchell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9859) granting an increase of pension to James M. Foss; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas: A bill (H. R. 9860) granting a pension to Lucy Lavin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GOULD: A bill (H. R. 9861) granting a pension to Lottie McDuffy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HASKELL: A bill (H. R. 9862) granting a pension to Sarah J. Bowers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULINGS: A bill (H. R. 9863) granting a pension to Robert Criswell Pollock; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 9864) granting a pension to Mary F. Russell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LUCE: A bill (H. R. 9865) for the relief of Thomas F. Veno; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McKINLEY: A bill (H. R. 9866) granting a pension to Isabella Gruver; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAPES: A bill (H. R. 9867) granting an increase of pension to Emma R. Walters; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OSBORNE: A bill (H. R. 9868) for the purchase of a post-office site at Venice, Calif.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9869) for the purchase of a post-office site at Santa Monica, Calif.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. REED of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 9870) granting an increase of pension to Nancy Summers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 9871) granting an increase of pension to G. A. Settle; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9872) to correct the military record of Wyatt Adkins; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9873) to correct the military record of John W. Hardwick; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9874) to correct the military record of J. R. Sellars; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 9875) granting a pension to W. A. Estep; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TIMBERLAKE: A bill (H. R. 9876) granting a pension to Harriet E. Fortune; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMPSON: A bill (H. R. 9877) granting an increase of pension to Margaret I. Reider; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the Legislative League of New York City, some of the mothers of the country, affectionately wishing the welfare of our beloved land, earnestly urging that Congress shall declare to the world that the war with Germany is ended and that a state of peace now exists between the United States and Germany; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of Local 493, United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees and Railway Shop Laborers, of Springfield, Mo., protesting against the passage of the Cummins bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Kansas City, protesting against H. R. 8157, known as the Plumb plan; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of the National Association of United States Civil Service Employees at Navy Yards and Stations, of Lake Bluff, Ill., praying for an increase in compensation; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of N. G. Grasty, of Baltimore, Md., favoring the passage of H. R. 9204; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Ralph Robinson, of Baltimore, Md., protesting against the changes suggested by the Secretary of the Navy in the pending Navy pay bill; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of Donald L. Burns, of Washington, D. C., favoring an additional bonus for the men who fought for our country in the Great War; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MacGREGOR: Petition of Mrs. L. F. Allen, of Buffalo, N. Y., favoring the passage of House bill 8063; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. OSBORNE: Memorial of Los Angles Federation of Parent-Teacher Associations, alleging that large numbers of Asiatic women are brought to and reside in the United States as wives and mothers under conditions contravening American ideals, laws, and customs, and praying the enforcement of present laws and the enactment of such new laws as may be necessary to prevent such alleged practices; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. ROWAN: Petition of American citizens of Lithuanian origin, appealing to the United States and the Allies, those who granted independence to Poland, to issue an order to the Polish Government to withdraw immediately from Lithuania; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of H. O. Rosenthal, of New York, favoring the passage of House bill 8587; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Branch No. 1, New York, National Association of United States Civil Service Employees at Navy Yards and Stations, asking an increase in salaries of not less than 40 per cent; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees and Railway Shop Laborers, of Detroit, Mich., protesting against the passage of the Cummins bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Dwight Braman, of New York, favoring universal military training as suggested by Gen. Wood; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania: Petition of Abington monthly meeting of the Society of Friends, protesting against universal military training; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. YATES: Petition of W. H. Sikes and others, urging the passage of House bill 2; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, petition of Branch No. 1, New York National Association of United States Civil Service Employees at Navy Yards and Stations, Brooklyn, N. Y., by Mr. F. D. Armour, president, urging an increase in salaries; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of American Unity Post, No. 22, American Legion, Chicago, urging the following legislation: To bring back the remains of such of our soldiers who died overseas whose relatives so desire at Government expense; the Morgan bill, or similar legislation; congressional action on the Mexican situation; congressional action toward the deportation of alien neutrals who surrendered their first papers to escape military service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Charles L. L'Hommedieu & Sons Co., Chicago, Ill., urging that a protective tariff be placed on imported pumice; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of B. Heller & Co., Chicago, Ill., favoring bill introduced by Senator CALDER, enabling manufacturers of food and drug products to adopt certain standards suitable for shipment to all localities, and thereby increasing the production, consequently lowering prices; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Seymour & Peck Co., Chicago; Hunt-Helm-Ferris & Co., Harvard; Joseph Turk Manufacturing Co., Bradley, Kankakee County; Jacob Press Sons, Chicago; Orbon Stove Co., Belleville; Joliet Forge Co., Joliet; Furst McNess Co., Freeport; Fargo Hallowell Shoe Co., Chicago; Decatur Bridge Co., Decatur; S. A. Maxwell & Co., Chicago; and Boynton & Co., Chicago, all in the State of Illinois, protesting against the closed shop; to the Committee on Labor.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, October 11, 1919.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thy divine guidance and blessing for the work of this day. We must draw from Thee the wisdom that will equip us for the great tasks that have come to our hand. We are willing to give the highest and the best we have. We pray that Thou wilt take the best we give and sanctify it to Thine own service. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

THE CASE OF EMMA GOLDMAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the report of the Secretary of Labor in response to Senate resolution 206. It may be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, October 9, 1919.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, transmitting Senate resolution 206, in relation to an Associated Press dispatch appearing in the Washington Post of October 4, 1919, on the subject of the alleged postponement of the Goldman case, and to state, for the information of the Senate, that the proceeding under the immigration law against Emma Goldman has not been indefinitely postponed, but that it is now pending and hearing thereon has been fixed for the 16th instant, at the immigration station, Ellis Island, New York Harbor.

The department is unable to state how, or by whom, the information contained in the Associated Press telegram was furnished. In the regular order of business it was impracticable to have the hearing at an earlier date, and the instructions given by the department to the immigration officials at Ellis Island were that the hearing be "deferred to a date to be determined upon later." As above indicated, it has now been fixed for the 16th instant.

Respectfully, W. B. WILSON, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 90) to readmit Frances Scoville-Mumm to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6810) to prohibit intoxicating beverages, and to regulate the manufacture, production, use, and sale of high-proof spirits for other than beverage purposes and to insure an ample supply of alcohol and promote its use in scientific research and in the development of fuel, dye, and other lawful industries.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE presented a memorial of Charles Sumner Camp No. 37, Sons of Veterans, of Gardner, Mass., and a memorial of sundry citizens of Jersey City, N. J., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed league of nations covenant, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Lawrence, Methuen, Andover, and North Andover, all in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against universal military training, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislative League of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty and praying for its separation from the treaty of peace with Germany, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. POMERENE. I have before me a certain preamble and resolutions in the nature of a petition adopted by the World War Veterans, of Cleveland, Ohio, relating to the subject of an increased service bonus and requesting the appointment of a committee under proper legislation to administer this subject. I suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

Mr. MYERS presented memorials of sundry citizens of Park County, Mont., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 2182, establishing game sanctuaries in national forests, which were referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a resolution adopted by the Wholesale Grocers' Association, of Jacksonville, Fla., favoring action by Congress to put car lines upon a common carrier basis so that car shortage may be remedied, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Marion County Post No. 1, American Legion, of Ocala, Fla., praying for an investigation into the alleged unnecessary wrongs inflicted against officers and soldiers of the American Expeditionary Forces, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Ohio County, W. Va., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 293, International Association of Machinists, of Parsons, Kans., praying for the adoption of the so-called "Plumb plan" for control and operation of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Clay County, Kans., praying for the immediate return of United States troops from Russia, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MATTHEW M'DONALD.

Mr. PAGE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1743) for the relief of Matthew McDonald, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 259) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 3210) for the consolidation of lands within the Jefferson National Forest; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 3211) for the relief of the heirs of Isabella Ann Fluker; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 3212) granting an increase of pension to Austella Stephenson (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3213) granting an increase of pension to Joseph T. Kling (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 3214) granting a pension to Virginia Dodd; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3215) granting an increase of pension to Harley Mowrey (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 3216) for the relief of occupants and claimants of unsurveyed public land in township 8 north of range 2 west of Salt Lake meridian, Utah; to the Committee on Public Lands.

CONSTRUCTION OF GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS.

Mr. FERNALD. I submit the resolution which I send to the desk, and I believe it to be of sufficient importance to have immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 210), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, or any subcommittee thereof, be directed to inquire into the costs, construction, operation, maintenance, and future disposition of the public buildings of the Government of every nature, kind, and location, and the program and contracts of the various departments of the Government with reference to future costs, construction, operation, maintenance, and location, and report to the Senate thereon, together with their recommendation of any steps which they may deem advisable to take with a view to remedying conditions.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the Senator from Maine ask for immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. FERNALD. I should like to make a statement in regard to the resolution, if the Senator from Utah will permit me. I regret to take any of the time of the Senate to make explanation on a matter of such importance.

Mr. KING. I do not want the Senator to think that I am going to object to the resolution. I merely wanted to propound an inquiry of the Senator, but if he is going to make a statement he may furnish the information I desire.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator if he has modified the resolution in accordance with the suggestions I made to him on yesterday?

Mr. FERNALD. I have eliminated the matter to which the Senator then objected.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I am willing that the resolution shall be given consideration. I think it is perfectly proper if the matter which I suggested on yesterday to the Senator from Maine has been eliminated in accordance with my suggestion.

Mr. FERNALD. If there is no objection to the consideration of the resolution, Mr. President, it is not necessary for me to make a statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO PEACE TREATY.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a proposed amendment to the covenant of the league of nations, and I ask that it may be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

The amendment is as follows:

Amend, by inserting before the word "agree," in the last line of the preamble or statement of the league's purposes, the following: "invoke the considerate judgment of mankind and the gracious favor of Almighty God and."

PROPOSED RESERVATIONS TO PEACE TREATY.

Mr. THOMAS. I submit four proposed reservations to part 13 of the pending treaty, in order that they may be printed and go over.

The reservations are as follows:

Reservations intended to be proposed by Mr. THOMAS, to be made a part of the resolution of ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany, viz:

1. The United States declines to submit the credentials of its delegates and their advisers to the general conference to the determination of that body or to receive or act upon proposals of any conference from which its delegates and advisers or any of them have been excluded. And the United States understands and construes the Government delegates provided by article 389 and the 12 delegates representing Governments upon the governing body of the international labor office and the person of independent standing to be nominated for the panel provided by article 412 to mean that both employers and workers are ineligible to selection or appointment to said positions or any of them. And the United States declines to submit the credentials or qualifications of any of its appointees under part 13 of the treaty to any authority whatever.

2. The United States understands that the provisions of article 1, part 1, of the treaty, authorizing any member of the league to withdraw therefrom, mean that any such withdrawal, when made, is a withdrawal from the international organization created by part 13 of the treaty. The United States also understands that amendments to part 13, under the provisions of article 422, shall not bind any member of the league which signifies its dissent therefrom, but in that case it shall cease to be a member of the league.

3. The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction and that of the States, respectively, and declares that all domestic and political questions relating to its affairs, including immigration, coastwise traffic, agriculture, the tariff, commerce, and all other domestic subjects, are not under part 13 of this treaty submitted to the determination of the general conference, the governing body of the international labor union, or any other commission of inquiry to be chosen thereunder.

4. The United States reserves the right to decline to recognize the authority, except that of a member of the league, to file a complaint with the international labor office that it is not securing effective observance of any convention which both have ratified in accordance with the article of part 13.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have here a letter from ex-Speaker CANNON in reply to a demand on him from the League to Enforce Peace to contribute money.

Mr. PENROSE. It ought to be read.

Mr. LODGE. The accompanying telegram and letter need not be read, but I ask that the letter from ex-Speaker CANNON be read, and that the others be placed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., October 6, 1919.

HERBERT S. HOUSTON,
Treasurer League to Enforce Peace, New York.

DEAR MR. HOUSTON: I have your favor of the 2d instant, requesting me to send contribution at once to organize public opinion to take courageous action and demand of the Senate prompt and unreserved ratification of the league of nations covenant.

I am now serving my twenty-third term as a Representative in Congress and have twenty-three times taken the following oath of office:

I do solemnly swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office of which I am about to enter. So help me God.

"No man can serve two masters," said One who was credited with divine wisdom; and having sworn my undivided allegiance to the Constitution of the United States, I can not in the closing days of my life divide that allegiance with the league of nations covenant as it has been presented to the Senate, and to unreservedly pool the interests of the United States with those of all other nations, some of whom have been foreign enemies in the past and may be in the future.

Under the obligations that I have taken "without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion," I can not contribute to a publicity fund to arouse public opinion to demand that Senators of the United States shall ignore their oaths of office and unreservedly ratify the covenant of the league of nations.

Respectfully, yours,

J. G. CANNON.

The accompanying telegram and letter are as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., September 17, 1919.

Personal and confidential.

Humanity, commerce, industry, labor, and the whole social order need immediate ratification of the peace treaty and the covenant of the league of nations. It is vitally important that you shall communicate with your Senators, preferably by telegraph, urging them to ratify promptly and unreservedly. If you have already done so, do it again in a positive and conclusive manner, and get others to do the same. This is the time for us to strike straight from the shoulder with all our strength behind the blow. There is no time to lose.

LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE.

LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE,
New York, October 2, 1919.

To friends of the league of nations:

In the past the nations of the world have been organized for war; the league of nations proposes to organize them for peace. It proposes to substitute the rule of international justice for the rule of force. Without the league of nations, the world faces a crushing race of armaments, another war more destructive than all former wars, and the suicide of civilization.

And yet in the face of these alternatives the league is now facing a bitter partisan attack in the United States Senate. The next few weeks must decide whether or not the United States shall enter the league of nations—whether or not, indeed, there shall be a league of nations; for, as the opposing Senators themselves have said, "Without us the league is a wreck, and all the gains from a victorious peace are imperiled."

There must be courageous action. Public opinion in every State must be organized and trained on Washington. The campaign must go on until the Senate vote on ratification is taken.

All this will require funds, immediate and adequate. We are not asking you to sign a pledge card; the time is too short for that. Won't you send your check to-day? Next month may be too late.

Yours, very truly,

HERBERT S. HOUSTON,
Treasurer.

REPEAL OF CANADIAN RECIPROCITY ACT.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the bill (H. R. 7779) to repeal the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, and for other purposes, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. That question of reciprocal trade has always been in the Finance Committee, and I ask that the reference be changed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered. That was not the fault of the Chair, however.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to call the attention of the Chair and of the Senate to the fact that great irregularity is indulged in in the reference of bills. This is a notable case. Personally, as chairman of the Committee on Finance, I do not care anything about whether the committee has the bill or not, but the original reciprocity bill under Mr. Taft's administration was referred to the Finance Committee. The bill which the Senator from Massachusetts has just asked to have assigned to the Finance Committee was reported from the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and yet we see the gross irregularity of having the bill referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, which has never had anything to do with it whatever. My attention has been called to quite a number of similar instances. It does not seem to matter from what committee in the House a bill is reported and comes over here, the whim of a Senator or the carelessness of a clerk seems to send the bills scattering to miscellaneous committees. I sincerely hope that some historical continuity and parliamentary consistency will be observed hereafter in the reference of bills. This is quite a flagrant case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the present occupant of the chair was not here when the bill was referred or it would have been referred to the Committee on Finance. It should have gone there.

Mr. PENROSE. I hope the present occupant of the chair will pardon me. I had not the present occupant in mind in any way when I made my remarks. I was thinking that it had been carelessly done by one of the clerks, perhaps by one of the new clerks at the desk. I know that if the present occupant of the chair had been present he would have known about this notable and, I may say, very unfortunate bill, and would have made the proper reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That the Senator from Pennsylvania may know, the Chair will state what has been the practice of the present occupant. Senators frequently introduce a bill and ask that it go to a certain committee. If the Chair does not have the time to examine the bill and if there is no objection, it goes to that committee. When there is no request made, the Chair tries to ascertain, particularly in the case of House bills, what House committee had it in charge, and so refers it.

Mr. PENROSE. I know that accuracy is impossible, and I am not rising in a complaining mood, but simply to call attention to a condition which sometimes arises, with the hope that it may tend toward correcting it.

I know that the other day in the Committee on Banking and Currency extensive hearings were held in connection with the essential features of the bill that certain securities should be tax free. This question had been exhaustively discussed in the Finance Committee, and the benefit of Treasury experts had been had by consultation with them, and yet this committee, which had given no attention whatever to the tax exemption of certain securities, was called upon to thrash over new ground, when the bill should have gone to the Finance Committee. Let the Banking and Currency Committee go on and learn a little about the tax exemption of certain issues, but certainly it would have been better for the business of the Senate if the Senator who introduced the bill, for whom I have the highest esteem and who is a member of both committees, had had the bill referred to the committee to which it belonged. This is only another illustration of the way work is doubled up and sometimes delayed.

FREE ZONES.

Mr. President, without criticizing anyone, but in order to complete the statement that I made a moment ago, I desire to say—and the matter is really hardly important enough perhaps to refer to, but as it is before me I want to do so—that quite an important inquiry concerning free zones in ports of the United States has been conducted by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives. A pamphlet which I hold in my hand contains the information on the subject from the United States Tariff Commission. It is purely a financial and fiscal matter, which is always within the jurisdiction of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives and of the Finance Committee of the Senate; and yet I find Senate bill 2284, introduced by the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of free zones in ports of entry of the United States, and for other purposes, referred, undoubtedly at his request, as it was his bill, to the Committee on Commerce.

I am not in any way questioning the entire propriety of the Senator taking his own bill under his own jurisdiction and conducting the hearings—and hearings are now being conducted—but if it were not the Senator's own bill it would certainly be highly irregular to have the Ways and Means Committee and the Tariff Commission conducting an inquiry at one end of the Capitol and the Committee on Commerce, which has never had any jurisdiction over these questions, conducting a similar inquiry at this end of the Capitol. Under ordinary circumstances the bill should have gone to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will entertain a motion to discharge the Committee on Commerce from the further consideration of the bill and refer it to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PENROSE. I would not do that under the circumstances, because it is the Senator's own bill, and he has already commenced hearings. I shall be satisfied to call the attention of the Senate to the irregularity of the proceeding in the hope that it will not occur too frequently in the future.

Mr. SMOOT subsequently said: Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] were in the Chamber I would ask that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2284) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of free zones in ports of entry in the United States, and for other purposes, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance. I do not wish to make that request in the absence of the Senator from Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A motion to that effect may be entered and postponed until the Senator from Washington comes into the Chamber.

LEASE OF INDIAN RESERVATIONS FOR METALLIFEROUS MINING PROJECTS.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, section 26 of the Indian appropriation act approved June 30, 1919, contains a provision which authorizes the leasing of portions of certain Indian reservations for metalliferous mining. I have within the past half hour been supplied by the Interior Department with a copy of the rules and regulations under which such leases may be entered into, which rules were promulgated to-day, together with a copy of the descriptions by legal subdivision, and where that is impossible a description by metes and bounds of various portions of the reservations that will be open for the prospecting for and leasing of metalliferous minerals therein.

Throughout the entire West there is a wide demand for copies of these rules and regulations and for copies of the descriptions of the lands open for prospecting and lease. I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD a copy of the rules and a copy of the descriptions of the lands so opened. I will state for the record that the rules and regulations will take effect and be in force and effect at noon on Saturday, November 1, 1919, and the date for such opening has been placed far enough in the future so that all interested persons might have due notice and so that no discriminations could possibly occur.

I have received a large number of letters and telegrams asking whether this law applies to oil, coal, potash, gas, potassium, sodium, and so forth, and I have in each instance replied that this law does not apply to such minerals, as they are not metalliferous, and that the law applies solely and only to metalliferous minerals.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DESCRIPTION OF LANDS SUBJECT TO LEASE FOR MINING METALLIFEROUS METALS.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., September 20, 1919.

Section 26 of the Indian appropriation act of June 30, 1919 (Public, No. 3), authorizes the location of mining claims by citizens of the United States on unallotted lands of Indian reservations, after such lands shall have been declared by the Secretary of the Interior to be subject to exploration for the discovery of gold, silver, copper, and other valuable metalliferous minerals. Should minerals be found locators have the privilege within one year of entering into a lease covering the land located. In accordance therewith I hereby declare the following-described unallotted Indian lands subject to exploration on and after 12 o'clock m. on Saturday, November 1, 1919, and, with the exception of such land therein as may contain springs, water holes, or other bodies of water, subject to location and lease:

"Arizona.

"MOQUI INDIAN RESERVATION.

"South: Beginning at the Moqui south line (running east and west) the northernmost ¾ of sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, in each of townships 24 north, in each of ranges 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and part of range 22; being all that part of the Moqui Indian Reservation lying in said ranges and in townships 24 north (Navajo County). All of townships 25 north, in the same ranges (Navajo County). (These townships form the entire south belt of the reservation. Probably not all of the belt will be inviting to prospectors.)

"West: Townships 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31 north, in ranges 13, 14, and 15, a broad belt along the Moqui west line, running from the south line to Blue Cayon; half of range 15 being in Navajo County, but the remainder and ranges 13 and 14 being in Coconino County.

"Northeast: North and northeast of township 31 north, being the complete northeastern corner of the Moqui Reserve, which has not been surveyed, known locally as "the Black Mountain country," extending from Blue Cayon on the west to the Moqui east line, and from the strip of townships numbered 31 north to the north line of the Moqui Reserve.

"SALT RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION.

"(Gila and Salt River meridian.)

Sections.	Township north.	Range east.
E. ½ of 1	2	5
6, 5, 4, 3, 2, 1, 7; N. ½ of 8, 11, 12; W. ½ of the NW. ¼ and the W. ½ of the E. ½ of the NW. ¼ of 13	2	6
All of 6 west of Salt River	2	7
36	3	5
31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36	3	6
31, 32, and all of 33, 27, 28, and 29 lying within the Salt River Indian Reservation	3	7

"SAN CARLOS INDIAN RESERVATION.

"Beginning at the mouth of the San Carlos River where the same empties into the Gila River, same being within the San Carlos Indian Reservation; thence in a west and southwesterly direction with the thread of the stream of the said Gila River to the point where the south boundary of the said reservation touches the thread of the stream of said Gila River coming east from the southwest corner of said reservation; thence west with the south boundary of said reservation to its said southwest corner; thence in a northern and eastern direction with the west boundary of said reservation to the thread of the stream of Black River; thence up Black River with the thread of that stream to a point where the bridge over Black River is approached by the public highway which leads from Rice to Fort Apache; thence in southern, western, and southwestern directions with said highway to the sawmill of the said San Carlos Indian Reservation; thence in a southerly direction with said highway to Cassadore Springs on said highway and Natural Corral Creek; thence in a southerly direction with said creek with the thread of its stream to where same empties into the San Carlos River; and thence in a southerly direction following the thread of said last-named river to its mouth, the place of beginning, embracing approximately between one-quarter and one-third of the reservation on the west.

"WALAPAI INDIAN RESERVATION.

"All of the reservation.

"COLORADO RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION.

"T. 10 N., R. 19 W.; fractional secs. 27, 34, 33, 32.

"T. 9 N., R. 19 W.; fractional sec. 3; whole secs. 10, 15, 22; fractional secs. 27, 33, 34.

"T. 8 N., R. 19 W.; fractional secs. 4, 5, 8, 9, 17, 18, 19, 30, 30, 31.

"T. 8 N., R. 20 W.; secs. 1, 2, 11, 12, 13, 14, 23, 24, 25, 26, 34, 35, 36.

"T. 7 N., R. 19 W.; fractional secs. 6 and 7.

"T. 7 N., R. 20 W.; secs. 1, 2, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35.

"T. 6 N., R. 20 W.; secs. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33.

"T. 6 N., R. 21 W.; secs. 1, 11, 12, 13, 14, 23, 24, 25, 26, 35, 36.

"T. 5 N., R. 20 W.; secs. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 17, 18, 19, 20, 29, 30, 31, 32.

"T. 5 N., R. 21 W.; secs. 1, 2, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 34, 35, 36.

"T. 4 N., R. 20 W.; secs. 6, 7, 18.

"T. 4 N., R. 21 W.; secs. 1, 2, 3, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16.

"All Salt River meridian, situated on the Colorado River Indian Reservation, Yuma County, Ariz.

"T. 2 N., R. 26 E.; fractional secs. 9, 16, 17, 19; secs. 20, 21; fractional secs. 22, 27; secs. 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33; fractional sec. 34.

"T. 2 N., R. 25 E.; fractional secs. 25, 35, 36.

"T. 1 N., R. 25 E.; sec. 1; fractional secs. 2, 10; secs. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15; secs. 21, 22; fractional secs. 16, 20, 26, 33, 34; secs. 27, 28.

"T. 1 S., R. 25 E.; fractional secs. 4, 5, 7.

"T. 1 S., R. 24 E.; fractional secs. 13, 23, 24, 26, 34.

"T. 2 S., R. 24 E.; fractional secs. 3, 4, 8, 17, 20, 21; secs. 9 and 16.

"All San Bernardino meridian on Colorado River Indian Reservation in California.

"FORT APACHE INDIAN RESERVATION.

"All the western part of the reservation west of a line drawn 1 mile east of Carixo Creek and Limestone Creek; also that part of the reservation south of the east fork of White River and east of a line beginning at the mouth of Rock Creek, where it empties into East Fork, and running south to the mouth of Corn Creek, where it empties into Big Bonita Creek, including East Poker Mountain. This description takes in the headwaters of Rock Creek, Bonita Creek and all its branches, Pachete and Reservation Creeks, which empty into Black River.

"WESTERN NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION.

"Entire reservation.

"Arizona and New Mexico.

"SAN JUAN INDIAN RESERVATION.

"Entire reservation.

"NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION.

"Entire reservation.

"California.

"HOOPA VALLEY INDIAN RESERVATION.

"All unallotted land.

"Klamath River extension, lots 8 and 9, sec. 7, T. 11 N., R. 3 E., Hoopa meridian, comprising the Indian village of Wauteck.

"TULE RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION.

"Entire reservation.

"FORT YUMA INDIAN RESERVATION.

"Secs. 25, 26, 35, and 36 in T. 15 S., R. 21 E., San Bernardino meridian.

"All of secs. 25 to 31, inclusive, above the main irrigation canal in T. 15 S., R. 23 E., San Bernardino meridian.

"Secs. 2 to 10, inclusive, T. 16 S., R. 22 E., San Bernardino meridian.

"Secs. 1, 2, 11, 12, 13, 14, 23, 24, 25, 26, and 35 in T. 16 S., R. 21 E., San Bernardino meridian.

"Secs. 25 to 36, inclusive, in T. 15 S., R. 22 E., San Bernardino meridian.

"MORONGO INDIAN RESERVATION.

"Secs. 8 and 9; E. ½ of sec. 16; secs. 17, 18, and 19, T. 2 S., R. 2 E.

"Idaho.

"FORT HALL INDIAN RESERVATION.

"Sec. 13; E. ½ sec. 14; secs. 23, 24, 25; E. ½ sec. 26; E. ½ sec. 35; sec. 36, T. 5 S.; secs. 1, 2, 11, and 12, T. 6 S., R. 36 E.; secs. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36, T. 5 S.; secs. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, T. 6 S., R. 37 E., SW. ¼ sec. 3, sec. 9, NW. ¼; S. ½ sec. 10, sec. 13, NW. ¼; S. ½ sec. 14, secs. 15, 16, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 33, 34, 35, and 36, T. 9 S., R. 32 E.; secs. 1, 2, E. ½ sec.

3, NE. ¼ sec. 10, secs. 11, 12, 13, 14, E. ½ sec. 15, secs. 18, 19, 20, E. ½ sec. 22, secs. 23, 24, 25, 26, E. ½ sec. 27, secs. 29, 30, 31, 32, 35, and 36, T. 9 S., R. 33 E.; sec. 14, SE. ¼ sec. 15, NE. ¼; W. ½ sec. 22, secs. 23, 24, 25, S. ½ sec. 26, secs. 35 and 36, T. 8 S., R. 33 E.; secs. 12, 13, E. ½ sec. 14, SW. ¼ sec. 15, SE. ¼ sec. 16, secs. 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, N. ½ sec. 26, N. ½ sec. 27, sec. 28, NE. ¼ sec. 33, NW. ¼ sec. 34, and E. ½ sec. 36, T. 7 S., R. 33 E., Boise meridian.

"NEZ PERCE INDIAN RESERVATION (FORT LAPWAI SCHOOL).

"Secs. 16–17–20, T. 36 N., R. 2 E., Boise meridian.
"Sec. 27, T. 35 N., R. 2 E., Boise meridian.
"Secs. 20–29, T. 34 N., R. 3 E., Boise meridian.
"Secs. 10–15, T. 34 N., R. 3 W., Boise meridian.
"Sec. 22, T. 33 N., R. 2 W., Boise meridian.

"Montana.

"ROCKY BOY INDIAN RESERVATION.

Section.	Township north.	Range (east).
1	28	15
S. ½ 2	28	15
N. ½ 3	28	15
N. ½ 4	28	15
5	28	15
Lots 1, 2, 9, 10, sec. 6	28	15
8	28	15
SE. ¼ 11	28	15
12	28	15
N. ½ 13	28	15
14	28	15
15	28	15
27	28	15
N. ½ 28	28	15
Lots 5, 6, 15, 16, 19, sec. 1	28	15
2	28	16
7	28	16
9	28	16
11	28	166
Lots 2, 3, 6, 7, sec. 12	28	16
Lots 2, 3, 6, 7, sec. 13	28	16
N. ½ 14	28	16
16	28	16
18	28	16
21	28	16
W. ½ 26	28	16
27	28	16
W. ½ 28	28	16
N. ½ 30	28	16

"TONGUE RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION.

"All of reservation except Indian settlements and land reserved for schools, agency, and farming sites.

"Nevada.

"PYRAMID LAKE INDIAN RESERVATION (NEVADA SCHOOL).

"T. 21 N., R. 24 E. of Mount Diablo meridian, Nevada.
"NW. ¼ sec. 3; NE. ¼ and SW. ¼ sec. 3 within the reservation boundary; NE. ¼ sec. 10 lying within the reservation boundary; NW. ¼ and SW. ¼ sec. 11 lying within the reservation boundary; NW. ¼ sec. 14 and NE. ¼ sec. 23 lying within the reservation boundary.
"T. 22 N., R. 24 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"All of secs. 1, 2, 3, 4, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 34, 35, 36, not covered by water.
"T. 28 N., R. 22 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"All of secs. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36.
"T. 22 N., R. 24 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"W. ½ sec. 5; SW. ¼ sec. 6; SW. ¼ sec. 7; and S. ½ sec. 8 lying within the reservation boundary.
"All of secs. 17, 18, 19, 20, 29, 30, 32, 33.
"All of secs. 16, 21, 27, 28, and 34 lying within the reservation boundary.
"T. 23 N., R. 21 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"NE. ¼ sec. 3 within the reservation boundary; NW. ¼ sec. 2; W. ½ sec. 1; all of sec. 12; all of secs. 11 and 13 within the reservation.
"T. 25 N., R. 21 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"S. ½ sec. 18; SW. ¼ sec. 17 not covered by water.
"All of secs. 19, 29, 30, 31, 32; NW. ¼ sec. 28; W. ½ sec. 23.
"All of sec. 20 not covered by water.
"T. 24 N., R. 22 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"All of secs. 1, 2, 11, and 12; NW. ¼ sec. 14; N. ½ sec. 13; W. ½ sec. 13 not covered by water.
"T. 29 N., R. 22 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"All of secs. 19, 20, 21, 22, 27, 34, and 35 within the reservation boundary. All of secs. 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33.
"T. 27 N., R. 22 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"All of secs. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 34, 35, 36; NW. ¼ sec. 8; W. ½ sec. 21; W. ½ secs. 28 and 33 not under water.
"T. 23 N., R. 22 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"All of secs. 6, 7, 8, 15, 16, 17, 21, 22, 23, 25, and 26; SW. ¼ sec. 5; W. ½ sec. 9; SE. ¼ sec. 9; SW. ¼ sec. 14 not covered by water; SW. ¼ sec. 24; all of secs. 18, 19, 20, 27, 28, 34, 35, and 36 within the reservation boundary.
"T. 25 N., R. 20 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"All of secs. 11, 13, 24, 25, and 36; SW. ¼ sec. 2; SW. ¼ sec. 12; all of secs. 3, 10, 14, 23, 26, and 35 within the reservation.
"T. 23 N., R. 22 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"All of secs. 6, 7, 8, 15, 16, 17, 21, 22, 25, and 26; SW. ¼ sec. 5; NW. ¼ sec. 5; SE. ¼ sec. 5; NW. ¼ sec. 9; SW. ¼ sec. 9; SE. ¼ sec. 9; all of secs. 18, 19, 20, 27, 28, 34, 35, and 36 lying within the reservation boundary; SW. ¼ sec. 24.
"T. 28 N., R. 23 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"All of secs. 18, 19, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33 lying within the reservation boundary.
"T. 26 N., R. 23 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"All of secs. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33; NW. ¼ sec. 34; SW. ¼ sec. 34; SE. ¼ sec. 34 not under water; W. ½ sec. 10.
"T. 28 N., R. 20 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"All of secs. 2, 11, 14, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36; W. ½ secs. 1, 12, and 13; NW. ¼ sec. 24; SW. ¼ sec. 24; SE. ¼ sec. 24; S. ½ sec. 25; NW. ¼ sec. 25; W. ½ sec. 31.
"T. 27 N., R. 21 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"All of secs. 5, 6, 7, 8, 17, and 18; W. ½ sec. 9 not under water; W. ½ sec. 16 not under water.
"T. 27 N., R. 30 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"All of secs. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, and 28; E. ½ secs. 6 and 7 within the reservation boundary. All of sec. 17 within the reservation boundary; SE. ¼ sec. 29 and NE. ¼ sec. 32 within the reservation boundary; NW. ¼ sec. 34; N. ½ sec. 35.
"T. 28 N., R. 21 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"All of secs. 1, 2, 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 18, 19, 20, 29, 30, 31, and 32; S. ½ sec. 7; W. ½ sec. 8; W. ½ sec. 23.
"T. 24 N., R. 23 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"All of secs. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 16, 17, 18, 20, and 21; NW. ¼ sec. 19; NE. ¼ sec. 34.
"T. 27 N., R. 21 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"All of secs. 5, 6, 7, 8, 17, and 18; W. ½ of secs. 9 and 10 not under water.
"T. 24 N., R. 24 E., Mount Diablo meridian.
"All of secs. 1 and 12 within reservation.

"WESTERN SHOSHONE INDIAN RESERVATION.

"In R. 53 E., T. 46 N., all of the portions of secs. 14, 23, 26, and 35 within the reservation boundary and all of secs. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, and 34.
"In R. 52 E., T. 46 N., all of secs. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36.
"In R. 51 E., T. 46 N., all of secs. 13, 14, 23, 24, 25, 26, and 36.

"New Mexico.

"MESCALERO INDIAN RESERVATION.

"T. 12 S., R. 16 E. (Surveyed.)
"T. 13 S., R. 16 E. (Surveyed.)
"T. 14 S., R. 16 E. (Surveyed.)
"N. ½ T. 15 S., R. 16 E. (Surveyed.)
"T. 12 S., R. 15 E. (Surveyed.)
"T. 13 S., R. 15 E. (Not surveyed.)
"T. 14 S., R. 15 E. (Not surveyed.)
"N. ½ T. 15 S., R. 15 E. (Surveyed.)
"T. 12 S., R. 14 E. (Partial survey covering secs. 1, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 21 to 36, inclusive.)
"T. 13 S., R. 14 E. (Not surveyed.)
"T. 14 S., R. 14 E. (Surveyed.)
"N. ½ T. 15 S., R. 14 E. (Partial survey covering secs. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 16, 17, and 18.)
"T. 12 S., R. 13 E. (Surveyed.)
"T. 13 S., R. 13 E. (Not surveyed.)
"T. 14 S., R. 13 E. (Not surveyed.)
"N. ½ T. 15 S., R. 13 E. (Surveyed.)
"T. 13 S., R. 12 E. (Partial survey covering secs. 19 to 36, inclusive.)
"T. 14 S., R. 12 E. (Partial survey covering secs. 1, 7, 8, 12, 17, 18, 19, and 20.)
"N. ½ T. 15 S., R. 12 E. (Not surveyed.)
"T. 11 S., R. 10 E. (Surveyed, less secs. 6, 7, 18, 19, 30, and 31.)
"The Sierra Blanca District covering—
"T. 11 S., R. 11 E. (Not surveyed.)
"Fractional T. 11 S., R. 12 E. (Not surveyed.)
"Fractional T. 12 S., R. 10 E. (Not surveyed.)
"T. 12 S., R. 11 E. (Not surveyed.)
"Fractional T. 12 S., R. 12 E. (Not surveyed.)

"PUEBLO BONITO INDIAN RESERVATION.

"T. 17, Rs. 14, 15, and 16, New Mexico principal meridian.

"Oregon.

"WARM SPRINGS INDIAN RESERVATION.

"Ts. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 S., Rs. 8 and 9 E., and Ts. 6 and 7 S., Rs. 13 and 14 E., Willamette meridian.

"Washington.

"YAKIMA INDIAN RESERVATION.

"Ts. 8 and 9 N., fractional Rs. 11 and 12 and R. 13 E.

"Ts. 10 and 11 N., fractional R. 12 and R. 13 E., Willamette meridian.

"NEAH BAY INDIAN RESERVATION.

"Township 32 N., R. 15 W.

"Sections 1, 2, 3, and the SW. ¼ of SW. ¼ of SW. ¼ of section 4, NW. ¼ of section 9, and all of sections 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15.

"Township 33 N., R. 15 W.

"Sections 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, all of 13, exception of the NE. ¼ of NE. ¼. N. ½ of sec. 16 and all of sec. 17 and the N. ½ and SE. ¼ of sec. 18. SE. ¼ of sec. 21. All of the section 22, with the exception of the NW. ¼ of the NW. ¼ of the NW. ¼ of the NW. ¼.

"All of sections 23, 24, 25, 26, and 27. All of section 28, with the exception of the NW. ¼. The E. ½ of section 33 and all of 34, 35, and 36.

"Township 33 N., R. 14.

"Sections 19, 30, and 31, and the S. ½ of section 18.

"As occasions warrant other tracts of unallotted Indian land may be declared opened to prospecting. Persons desiring information whether land not mentioned above is subject to exploration should apply to the Indian superintendent in charge of the land for information on this point.

"(Signed) FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary."

REGULATIONS TO GOVERN PROSPECTING FOR AND MINING OF METALLIFEROUS MINERALS ON UNALLOTTED LANDS OF INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Section 26 of the act of June 30, 1919 (Public, No. 3), reads:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him and under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, not inconsistent with the terms of this section, to lease to citizens of the United States or to any association of such persons or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory thereof, any part of the unallotted lands within any Indian reservation within the States of Arizona, California, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Washington, or Wyoming, heretofore withdrawn from entry under the mining laws for the purpose of mining for deposits of gold, silver, copper, and other valuable metalliferous minerals, which leases shall be irrevocable, except as herein provided, but which may be declared null and void upon breach of any of their terms.

"That after the passage and approval of this section, unallotted lands, or such portion thereof as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine, within Indian reservations heretofore withheld from disposition under the mining laws may be declared by the Secretary of the Interior to be subject to exploration for the discovery of deposits of gold, silver, copper, and other valuable metalliferous minerals by citizens of the United States, and after such declaration mining claims may be located by such citizens in the same manner as mining claims are located under the mining laws of the United States: Provided, That the locators of all such mining claims, or their heirs, successors, or assigns, shall have a preference right to apply to the Secretary of the Interior for a lease, under the terms and conditions of this section, within one year after the date of the location of any mining claim, and any such locator who shall fail to apply for a lease within one year from the date of location shall forfeit all rights to such mining claim: Provided further, That duplicate copies of the location notice shall be filed within 60 days with the superintendent in charge of the reservation on which the mining claim is located, and that application for a lease under this section may be filed with such superintendent for transmission through official channels to the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That lands containing springs, water holes, or other bodies of water needed or used by the Indians for watering live stock, irrigation, or water-power purposes shall not be designated by the Secretary of the Interior as subject to entry under this section.

"That leases under this section shall be for a period of 20 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided, That the lessee may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be permitted at any time to make written relinquishment of all rights under such a lease and upon acceptance thereof be thereby relieved of all future obligations under said lease.

"That in addition to areas of mineral land to be included in leases under this section the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may grant to the lessee the right to use, during the life of the lease, subject to the payment of an annual rental of not less than $1 per acre, a tract of unoccupied land, not exceeding 40 acres in area, for camp sites, milling, smelting, and refining works, and for other purposes connected with and necessary to the proper development and use of the deposits covered by the lease.

"That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, in making any lease under this section may reserve to the United States the right to lease for a term not exceeding that of the mineral lease, the surface of the lands embraced within such lease under existing law or laws hereafter enacted, in so far as said surface is not necessary for use of the lessee in extracting and removing the deposits therein: Provided, That the said Secretary, during the life of the lease, is hereby authorized to issue such permits for easements herein provided to be reserved.

"That any successor in interest or assignee of any lease granted under this section, whether by voluntary transfer, judicial sale, foreclosure sale, or otherwise, shall be subject to all the conditions of the lease under which such rights are held and also subject to all the provisions and conditions of this section to the same extent as though such successor or assign were the original lessee hereunder.

"That any lease granted under this section may be forfeited and canceled by appropriate proceedings in the United States district court for the district in which said property or some part thereof is situated whenever the lessee, after reasonable notice in writing, as prescribed in the lease, shall fail to comply with the terms of this section or with such conditions not inconsistent herewith as may be specifically recited in the lease.

"That for the privilege of mining or extracting the mineral deposits in the ground covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States, for the benefit of the Indians, a royalty which shall not be less than 5 per cent of the net value of the output of the minerals at the mine, due and payable at the end of each month succeeding that of the extraction of the minerals from the mine, and an annual rental, payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter on the area covered by such lease, at the rate of not less than 25 cents per acre for the first calendar year thereafter; not less than 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively; and not less than $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year.

"That in addition to the payment of the royalties and rentals as herein provided the lessee shall expend annually not less than $100 in development work for each mining claim located or leased in the same manner as an annual expenditure for labor or improvements is required to be made under the mining laws of the United States: Provided, That the lessee shall also agree to pay all damages occasioned by reason of his mining operations to the land or allotment of any Indian or to the crops or improvements thereon: And provided further, That no timber shall be cut upon the reservation by the lessee except for mining purposes, and then only after first obtaining a permit from the superintendent of the reservation and upon payment of the fair value thereof.

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to examine the books and accounts of lessees, and to require them to submit statements, representations, or reports, including information as to cost of mining, all of which statements, representations, or reports so required shall be upon oath, unless otherwise specified, and in such form and upon such blanks as the Secretary of the Interior may require; and any person making any false statement, representation, or report under oath shall be subject to punishment as for perjury.

"That all moneys received from royalties and rentals under the provisions of this section shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the reservation where the leased land is located, which moneys shall be at all times subject to appropriation by Congress for their benefit, unless otherwise provided by treaty or agreement ratified by Congress: Provided, That such moneys shall be subject to the laws authorizing the pro rata distribution of Indian tribal funds.

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations not inconsistent with this section as may be necessary and proper for the protection of the interests of the Indians and for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this section into full force and effect: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed or held to affect the right of the States or other local authority to exercise any rights which they may have to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, output of mines, or other rights, property, or assets of any lessee.

"That mining locations, under the terms of this section, may be made on unallotted lands within Indian reservations by Indians who have heretofore or may hereafter be declared by the Secretary of the Interior to be competent to manage their own affairs; and the said Secretary is hereby authorized and empowered to lease such lands to such Indians in accordance with the provisions of this section: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit other Indians to make locations and obtain leases under the provisions of this section, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe in regard to the working, developing, disposition, and selling of the products, and the disposition of the proceeds thereof of any such mine by such Indians.

To carry this provision of law into effect the following general regulations are prescribed:

"1. From time to time unallotted land on Indian reservations within the States named in the section above quoted will be declared subject to exploration. The land will be opened only after reports have been received from the superintendent or other officer in charge (hereafter called the officer in charge) as to the desirability of such action and of the part, if any, which should be reserved in the interests of the Indians. Anyone desiring to prospect on any particular reservation may obtain information from the officer in charge thereof as to whether it is subject to lease.

"2. All persons prospecting on unallotted Indian land under these regulations or who may acquire rights of occupancy of such lands thereunder in the use of the lands are bound to a strict compliance with all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country and with the laws of the United States and the regulations of the Department of the Interior prescribed thereunder in respect to trade intercourse with the Indian tribes.

"3. Should valuable metalliferous minerals be found, the section contemplates the location of mining claims in the same manner as mining claims are located under the mining laws of the United States. Should the locator fail to file a duplicate copy of the location notice with the officer in charge of the land within 60 days or fail within 1 year thereafter to make application through the officer in charge to the Secretary of the Interior for a lease of the land, he will thereby forfeit all preference right to a lease. Any locator who fails to comply with the United States mining laws and the regulations of the General Land Office prescribed thereunder as to the location of mining claims will also forfeit all preference right to a lease.

"The regulations of the General Land Office provide in effect that no lode claim can exceed a parallelogram 1,500 feet in length by 600 feet in width, but whether surface ground of that width can be taken depends upon the local regulations or State or Territorial laws in force in the several mining districts; that no such local regulations or State or Territorial laws shall limit a vein or lode claim to less than 1,500 feet along the course thereof, whether the location is made by one or more persons, nor can surface rights be limited to less than 50 feet in width; that all records of mining locations shall contain the name or names of the locators, the date of location, and such a description of the claim or claims located by reference to some natural object or permanent monument as will identify the claim; that no lode claim shall be located until after the discovery of a vein or lode within the limits of the claim; that the claimant should, therefore, prior to locating his claim, unless the vein can be traced upon the surface, sink a shaft or run a tunnel or drift to a sufficient depth therein to discover and develop a mineral-bearing vein, lode, or crevice and determine, if possible, the general course of such vein in every direction from the point of discovery, by which direction he will be governed in marking the boundaries of his claim on the surface; that his location notice should give the course and distance as nearly as practicable from the discovery shaft on the claim to some permanent, well-known points or objects, such, for instance, as stone monuments, blazed trees, the confluence of streams, point of intersection of well-known gulches, ravines, or roads, etc., which may be in the immediate vicinity; that the claimant should also state the names of adjoining claims or, if none adjoining, the relative positions of the nearest claims; that he should drive a post or erect a monument of stone at each corner of the surface ground and at the point of discovery or discovery shaft should fix a post, stake, or board, upon which should be designated the name of the lode, the name or names of the locators, the number of feet claimed, and in which direction from the point of discovery, it being essential that the location notice filed for record should state whether the entire claim of 1,500 feet is taken on one side of the point of discovery or whether it is partly upon one and partly upon the other, and if the latter, how many feet are claimed upon each side of the discovery point.

"4. Lessees will have the right to mine only within the exterior boundaries of the leased lands and to lines drawn vertically downward therefrom. The provision of the general mining laws that the locator of a mining claim shall have the exclusive right to all veins, lodes, or ledges throughout their entire depth, the tip or apex of which lies inside the surface lines, extending downward vertically, does not apply to these leases, since the act limits the application of the general mining laws to the manner of the location of mining claims.

"5. Individual placer claims are limited by the general mining laws to not more than 20 acres for one person, 40 acres for two, and 160 acres for an association of eight or more persons. Locations, if upon surveyed land, must be located in conformity to the legal subdivisions of the survey. If made upon unsurveyed land the locations must be marked in the same manner as lode locations, but shall conform as nearly as practicable to what would be public-land surveys and the rectangular subdivisions thereof.

"6. Before a lease will be granted covering a lode mining claim or a placer claim on unsurveyed land, it will be necessary for the locator, at his expense, to have the claim surveyed by a United States surveyor. The survey must be made in the form and manner required by and under the laws and regulations governing the survey of claims under the United States mining laws, application for such survey to be made to the United States surveyor general for the State wherein the claim is located. Two copies of the plat and two copies of the field notes must be filed by the locator with his lease.

"7. Locators whose application for a lease has been approved will be allowed 30 days from the date of notification of approval within which to complete and file a lease with the officer in charge of the reservation, and the failure to complete and file a lease within that time will be cause for the forfeiture of the preference right to a lease, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

"8. Upon being notified of the acceptance of its application for a lease, a corporation shall file a certified copy of articles of incorporation, and evidence showing compliance with local corporation laws if a foreign corporation: Provided, That if any such papers have already been filed, a statement to that effect may be submitted.

"Leases made by corporations shall be accompanied by an affidavit showing the authority of its officers to execute leases, bonds, and other papers.

"9. Each lease shall be accompanied at the time of filing by the advance annual rental for the first year. No lease shall be forwarded by the officer in charge for favorable consideration unless the advance annual rental for the first year has been deposited with him.

"10. Lessees shall furnish with each lease a bond with two or more personal sureties or with an acceptable company authorized to act as sole surety. Said bond shall be in amounts as follows:

"For less than 40 acres, $500; for 40 acres and less than 80 acres, $1,000; for 80 acres and less than 120 acres, $1,500; for 120 acres and not more than 160 acres, $2,000: Provided, That a lessee may file one bond in the sum of $15,000 covering all the leases to which he is or may become the lessee. The right is reserved to increase the amount of the bond above the sums named in any case and to accept substitute bonds where the Secretary of the Interior deems it proper to do so.

"11. Lessees may assign their leases or any part thereof or sublease the premises or any part thereof with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Interior. Lessees shall not permit any person or persons to have possession of the leased premises, or any part thereof, save and except those rightfully entitled thereto, pursuant to the conditions set forth in the law, regulations, and lease.

"12. Leases shall be irrevocable except for breach of the terms and conditions of the same, and may be forfeited and canceled by appropriate proceedings in the United States district court for the district in which the land or some part thereof is situated. Lessees may, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior, surrender their leases in whole or in part upon payment of a fee of $1, provided all royalties, rentals, and other obligations due and accrued up to the date of completion of their applications for surrender have been paid and fulfilled. If a lease has been recorded, the lessee shall execute a release and record the same in the proper county recording office, and file the release with the officer in charge. An application for surrender will be considered as completed on the date of the filing of same in the office of the officer in charge, provided the foregoing regulations have been fulfilled.

"13. Each lessee will be required to pay a royalty on production computed on the net value of the output of the minerals at the mine, payable at the end of each month. The law provides that this royalty shall not be less than 5 per cent, but in view of the impossibility of fixing in advance by regulation the exact royalty to be imposed upon the different minerals found, varying in value and in conditions under which they are mined, the royalty governing each lease will be fixed and determined prior to the issuance of each lease and incorporated therein. The term used in the law, 'net value of the output of the minerals at the mine,' is construed to mean the gross value of the ores, less the cost of mining said ores, the cost of concentration, of handling, of transportation, of shipping from the mouth of the mine to the works where the ore is treated, and the cost of milling, reducing, or smelting. 'Cost of mining said ore' covers only the cost of mining the ore produced and brought out of the mine during the month, and does not include cost of prospecting, of preliminary workings, or the cost of the mining plant.

"14. In addition to the royalty on production the lessee will be required to pay advance annual rental of 25 cents per acre for the first year, 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and $1 per acre for each year thereafter, the rental for any one year to be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. It will also be necessary for the lessee to expend annually not less than $100 in development work for each mining claim located or leased in the same manner as required under the mining laws of the United States.

"15. Each lessee shall keep books of accounts showing the amount of ore mined each month, the cost of mining same, the amount of ore shipped or other mineral substances sold or treated, and the amount of money received from the sale of ores, etc. The books of the lessee shall be open to inspection, examination, and verification by any officer of the Interior Department assigned to such duty by the Secretary of the Interior, and the duly authorized agents of the United States shall be permitted freely to make copies of all the accounts and other books of the lessee. All royalties due under the lease shall be paid to the officer in charge of the reservation in cash, or by certified check or other suitable form of exchange, and at time of payment each lessee must file with said officer a sworn statement showing the amount of ore mined during the preceding month, cost of mining and extracting the same, the amount of ore shipped or sold, and the amount received therefor. Lessee must also file with the officer in charge within 20 days after the reduction of the ores a duplicate of all mill and smelter returns.

"16. Lessees shall file annual reports, accompanied by maps and diagrams when necessary, within 20 days after the close of each calendar year with the officer in charge, showing the extent, character, and location of all development work and mining operations, such annual reports to be in the form of sworn statements by the lessee or superintendent in charge of the work, and such other reports from time to time as the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, require.

"17. In mining operations the lessee shall keep the mine well and sufficiently timbered at all points where necessary in accordance with good mining practice and in such manner as may be necessary to the proper preservation of the property leased and safety of the workmen, compatible with economical mining. If it be necessary to use any wood, stone, coal, or other material the lessee shall first obtain written permission from the officer in charge and shall pay him, for the Indians, the current prices for all such material taken.

"18. On expiration of the term of the lease or when a lease is surrendered the lessee shall deliver to the Government the leased premises with the mine workings in good order and condition, and bondsmen will be held for such delivery in good order and condition unless relieved by the Secretary of the Interior for cause. It shall, however, be stipulated that the machinery necessary to operate the mine is the property of the lessee, but that it may be removed by him only after the condition of the property has been ascertained by inspection by the Secretary of the Interior or his authorized agents.

"19. It is expressly understood that any duly authorized agent of the Government shall be permitted from time to time, and at all times during the life of the lease, freely and without notice, to enter upon and in all parts of the leased premises, and, if desired, take with him the local mine inspector and such mining experts as may be necessary for the purpose of inspection and examination thereof, with a view of ascertaining whether or not the terms and conditions of the agreement are being faithfully complied with, and to know that the mine is operated in workmanlike manner as required by the lease and in compliance with the law of the State or Territory in which the mine is situated.

"20. Any lessee desiring to use not to exceed 40 acres of unoccupied land for a camp site, milling, smelting, and refining works, or for other purposes connected with the proper development of the leased land, should make application therefor to the officer in charge for the land desired. The application must be accompanied by affidavits from two or more persons familiar with the ground, that it is nonmineral, unoccupied, and necessary for the purpose of properly developing the lease.

"21. No prospector, locator, or mine owner shall keep stock of any kind on the lands leased except by permit at such rates as may from time to time be established.

"22. The provisions of the foregoing regulations shall apply to any Indian who has heretofore or may hereafter be declared by the Secretary of the Interior to be competent to manage his own affairs. Should Indians who have not been declared competent to manage their own affairs desire to obtain a lease of land the officer in charge of the reservation where the land is located will report all the facts in connection therewith, whereupon suitable instructions will be given as to the manner of procedure.

"23. On those reservations where unallotted Indian land may be leased for mining purposes under section 3 of the act of February 28, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 795), the provisions of section 26 of the Indian appropriation act of June 30, 1919, and the regulations herein prescribed shall hereafter govern the leasing of such unallotted land, so far as metalliferous minerals are concerned.

"24. These regulations shall take effect 45 days from and after the date of approval hereof, and shall be promulgated 20 days prior to their taking effect.

"FORM OF MINING LEASE.

"Mining lease of unallotted lands on ——— Indian Reservation.

"This lease, made and entered into in triplicate this ——— day of ——— 19—, by and between the Secretary of the Interior, party of the first part, hereinafter called the lessor, by reason of the authority vested in him in section 26 of the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and ——— of ———, State of ———, party of the second part, hereinafter called the lessee; witnesseth:

"1. The lessor, for and in consideration of the royalties, covenants, stipulations, and conditions hereinafter contained, and hereby agreed to be paid, observed, and performed by the lessee, doth hereby demise, grant, lease, and let unto the lessee for the term of 20 years with privilege of renewal for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the lessor, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods, from the date of signing hereof by the lessor, for the purpose of mining all the deposits of metalliferous minerals in or under the following described lands, to wit:

"——— ——— containing ——— acres, more or less, the same being within said reservation, with the exclusive right to prospect for, mine, and extract the minerals above named and no others, and to occupy and use so much only of the surface of said land as may be reasonably necessary to carry on the work of prospecting for, mining, extracting, storing, and removing such minerals; also the right to obtain from wells or other sources on said land by means of pipe lines or otherwise a sufficient supply of water to carry on said operations, and the right to pass over and across said reservation for the purpose of said work.

"2. The lessee hereby agrees to pay or cause to be paid to the superintendent or other officer of the United States having jurisdiction over the leased premises, hereinafter called the officer in charge, for the use and benefit of the Indians of said reservation, annually in advance, a rental of 25 cents per acre for the first year beginning with the date of execution of lease, 50 cents per acre per annum for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, and $1 per acre for each succeeding year, all rent paid in any year to be credited on the royalty for that year if production begins therein.

"The lessee further agrees to pay as royalty on the production of ores and minerals under this lease a royalty of —— per cent upon the net value of the output of the minerals at the mine, which is to be ascertained by deducting from the gross value of the ores and minerals the cost of mining said ores and minerals, the cost of concentration, of handling, of transportation, of shipping from the mouth of the mine to the works where the ore is treated, and the cost of milling, reducing, or smelting. It is understood and agreed that the cost of mining said ores covers only the cost of mining ores produced and brought out of the mine during the month, and does not include the cost of prospecting or preliminary workings or of the mining plant. The lessee agrees to file with the officer in charge of the reservation within 20 days after the end of the month within which the minerals were extracted a sworn statement showing the amount of ore mined during the preceding month, cost of mining and extracting same, the amount of ore shipped or sold, and the amount received therefor. He also agrees to file with the officer in charge within 20 days after the reduction of the ores a duplicate of mill and smelter returns, and to pay all royalties under this lease monthly to the officer in charge of the reservation, or such officer or agent as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, payments to be made in cash or by certified check or other suitable form of exchange.

"There shall be expended annually in development work on each lease a sum of not less than $5 per acre, the total annual amount to be not less than $100.

"The royalties on all products mined under this lease shall be based on sworn reports and shall be paid within 10 days after the close of each month.

"3. The lessee shall immediately upon notification of the signing of this lease by the lessor proceed to develop and work said mineral deposits, and during the entire term of this lease he shall prosecute such mining operations on said lands to the fullest practicable extent, the state of the market being considered; and his neglect or refusal to conduct actual mining operations for a period of six months at any one time (unless exempted by the lessor) shall operate as a forfeiture of all his rights under this lease, and subject it to cancellation by an appropriate proceeding in the United States district court for the district in which the land or a part of it is situated. Within 20 days after the close of each calendar year he shall file with the officer in charge an annual report, verified by oath, showing the character and value of the development work performed and the gross output of his mining operations hereunder during the year; and within 20 days after demand by the lessor he shall file with the officer in charge of the reservation a sworn report, giving such information relative to his mining operations as may be demanded.

"4. The lessee shall at all times conduct operations in a workmanlike manner, protect all mines and deposits, and not commit nor suffer any waste upon the reservation; and if it be necessary to use any wood, stone, coal, or other material thereon, he shall first obtain written permission from the officer in charge and shall pay to him for the Indians the current prices for all such material taken. He shall take good care of the land herein described and not permit any nuisance to be maintained nor any intoxicating liquors to be sold or given away thereon for use as a beverage; he shall not use or permit the use of said lands and premises for any other purpose than as herein authorized, and at the expiration of this lease he shall return the same to the owners in as good condition as received, excepting for the ordinary wear and tear and unavoidable accidents in their proper use.

"5. The lessee shall keep an accurate account of said operations, showing the whole amount of mineral mined or extracted and all mineral shipped, smelted, used, or disposed of, the cost of such operations and the net value of the output of the minerals at the mine; and the officer in charge and other proper representatives of the department shall have the right at all times during the existence of this lease, and for six months thereafter, to make such reasonable examination of the papers and books of account of the said lessee, and of the mines, as may be necessary to obtain all information desired; and there is hereby created a lien on all implements, tools, movable machinery, and other personal chattels belonging to the lessee used in the said mining operations, and upon all minerals obtained from the land herein leased, as security for the monthly payment of said royalty.

"6. The lessee in selecting employees shall give preference, so far as practicable, to Indians of the reservation who may be able and willing to perform the kind of work required; and he shall not retain in his employ any person objectionable to the officer in charge of the Indians. With each annual report he shall furnish the names and addresses of his employees.

"7. The lessee shall not interfere with any personal or property rights or legitimate industry or occupation of the Indians without first obtaining consent in writing and paying proper compensation approved by the officer in charge; nor obstruct any road or trail now in use without permission of the officer in charge; and the right to cross the lands leased by the usual methods and in a manner not inconsistent with the mining operations herein provided for is reserved for the Indians; and all rights to make and accept allotments within the boundaries of this lease of any lands demed suitable for agriculture are hereby reserved.

"8. The lessee shall not, without the consent of the lessor, assign or sublet any part of the lands leased. He may, however, surrender the lease for cancellation with the consent of the lessor, but the lessee or assignee should surrender his copy of the lease to the officer in charge, and all royalties and other obligations due and accrued to date of completion of application for cancellation, in addition to a cancellation fee of $1, must be paid and discharged before such application will be considered, provided that if the lease has been recorded the lessee or assignee shall execute a release, record the same in the proper recording office, and file the release with the officer in charge. An application for cancellation will be considered as completed on the date such application is filed in the office of the officer in charge, provided the foregoing requirements have been fully observed.

"9. In the event of failure or neglect of the lessee to perform any obligations under this lease, the lessor shall have the right at any time to cancel this lease by an appropriate proceeding in the United States district court for the district in which the land or a part thereof is situated, unless within 30 days after notice specifying the terms and conditions violated the lessee shall correct such failure and make good any loss caused thereby.

"10. This lease is made and accepted subject to existing law and any laws hereafter enacted as to said reservation, also to the regulations relative to such leases heretofore or hereafter prescribed by the lessor; and in no event shall the United States or the lessor be liable in damages or otherwise under the provisions hereof.

"The obligations and agreements hereinbefore expressed shall extend to and be binding upon the successors in interest of the parties hereto.

"11. Before this lease shall be in effect the lessee shall furnish a satisfactory bond with two or more personal sureties or with an acceptable company authorized to act as sole surety.

"12. No prospector, locator, or mine owner shall keep stock of any kind on the lands except by permit at such rates as may from time to time be established.

"13. It is expressly understood and agreed that there is reserved to the United States the right to lease under existing law or laws hereafter enacted so much of the surface of the lands covered by the lease as is not actually used or necessary for mining purposes.

"Signed and sealed this ——— day of ———, 19—.

"[SEAL.] ———,
"Secretary of the Interior.

"[SEAL.] ———,
"Lessee.

"Witnesses:
"———.
"———.
"———.
"———."

"BOND.

"Know all men by these presents, That ——— ———, of ——— ———, as principal, and ——— ———, as suret—, are held, and firmly bound unto the United States of America in the sum of fifteen thousand ($15,000) dollars, lawful money of the United States, for the payment of which well and truly to be made, we bind ourselves and each of us, our and each of our heirs, successors, executors, administrators, or assigns, jointly and severally, firmly by these presents.

"Sealed with our seals, and dated this ——— day of ———, 19—.

"The condition of this obligation is such that whereas the above bounden ——— ———, as principal—, ha— heretofore or may hereafter enter into mining leases covering unallotted Indian land on the ——— ——— Reservation, in the State of ———, of various dates and periods of duration, covering the lands described in such leases, which leases have been or may hereafter be, signed by the Secretary of the Interior, and the identification of which herein is expressly waived by both the principal— and suret— hereto.

"Now, if the above-bounden ——— ——— shall faithfully carry out and observe all the obligations assumed in said indentures of lease to which ——— ——— is now or may hereafter become a party, and shall observe all the laws of the United States and regulations made or which shall be made thereunder for the government of trade and intercourse with Indian tribes, and all regulations that have been or shall hereafter be lawfully prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior relative to mining leases covering unallotted Indian land on the ——— ——— Reservation and the development thereof, and shall in all particulars comply with the provisions of said leases and such regulations, then this obligation shall be null and void; otherwise to remain in full force and effect.

"Signed and sealed in the presence of—

"Witnesses:

"———, "Post office, ———. } as to ——— ———. [SEAL.]
"———, "Post office, ———.

"———, "Post office, ———. } as to ——— ———. [SEAL.]
"———, "Post office, ———.

"———, "Post office, ———. } as to ——— ———. [SEAL.]
"———, "Post office, ———.

"———, "Post office, ———. } as to ——— ———. [SEAL.]
"———, "Post office, ———.

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
"Washington, D. C., ——— ———.

"Approved:

"———,
"Assistant Secretary of the Interior."

—

"To accompany mining leases covering unallotted Indian lands.

"BOND.

"KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS, That ——— ———, of ——— ———, as principal—, and ——— ———, of ———, as surety—, are held firmly bound unto the United States of America in the sum of ——— dollars, lawful money of the United States of America, for the payment of which well and truly to be made we bind ourselves, and each of us, our and each of our heirs, executors, administrators, successors, or assigns, jointly and severally, firmly by these presents.

"Sealed with our seals and dated this —— day of ———, 19—.

"The condition of this obligation is such that whereas the above-bounden ——— ———, as principal—, entered into a certain indenture of lease, dated ——— ———, with ——— ——— for the lease of a tract of land described as follows: ——— ——— and located in the ——— ——— Reservation, in the State of ——— for ——— mining purposes for the period of ——— years from the date of approval thereof.

"Now, if the above-bounden ——— ——— shall faithfully carry out and observe all the obligations assumed in said indenture of lease by ——— ———, and shall observe all the laws of the United States, and regulations made, or which shall be made thereunder, for the government of trade and intercourse with Indian tribes, and all the rules and regulations that have been, or may be, lawfully prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior relative to leases executed to cover unallotted Indian land on the ——— ———, then this obligation shall be null and void; otherwise to remain in full force and effect.

"Signed and sealed in the presence of—

"Witnesses:

"———, "Post office, ———. } as to ——— ——— [SEAL.]
"———, "Post office, ———.

"———, "Post office, ———. } as to ——— ——— [SEAL.]
"———, "Post office, ———.

"———, "Post office, ———. } as to ——— ——— [SEAL.]
"———, "Post office, ———.

"———, "Post office, ———. } as to ——— ——— [SEAL.]
"———, "Post office, ———.

"Two witnesses to each signature.

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
"Washington, D. C., ——— ———.

"Approved.

"———,
"Assistant Secretary of the Interior."

"FORM OF PERMIT FOR CAMP SITES, MILLING, SMELTING, AND REFINING WORKS.

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
"UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE,
"——— ——— RESERVATION.

"By authority of the Interior Department permission is hereby granted to ——— ———, lessee of mining lease No. ———, on the ——— ——— Reservation, to use the following-described tract of unoccupied land on the said reservation:

"——— ———. That land covered by this permit is to be used for camp sites, milling, smelting, and refining works, and for other purposes connected with and necessary to the proper development and use of the deposits covered by mining lease No. ——— all rights hereunder to cease and terminate upon the termination of the aforesaid mining lease.

"In consideration of the above privilege, the permittee agrees to pay on the date of the execution of this permit and annually in advance thereafter to the officer in charge of the said reservation for the use and benefit of the Indians the sum of $——— (not less than $1 per acre).

"It is understood and agreed by the permittee that this instrument is not a lease, but a mere permit, and on failure of the permittee to fulfill its terms or to comply with the rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior relative thereto this permit may be revoked by the Secretary of the Interior and all rights thereunder will then terminate.

"I agree to the foregoing conditions and stipulations.

"———, "Permittee.

"The above permit is hereby approved:

"———, "Secretary."

—

"EVIDENCE OF AUTHORITY OF OFFICERS TO EXECUTE PAPERS.

("To be sworn to by secretary or president of a corporation and sealed with its seal.)

"I solemnly swear that ——— ——— and ——— ——— ——— were on the ——— day of ———, 19—, the duly elected, qualified, and acting president and secretary, respectively, of ——— ———, a corporation organized under the laws of ——— ———, on which day they executed ——— mining lease for and in behalf of said corporation as lessee, covering certain unallotted Indian lands of the ——— ——— Reservation; that they were fully empowered to execute said lease and all papers in connection therewith, and that their action in executing the same binds the said corporation to full performance of all obligations thereunder.

"(Signed) ——— ———
——— ——— (Title.)

"This ——— day of ———, 19—.

"[CORPORATE SEAL.]

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this ——— day of ———, 19—.

"(Signed) ——— ———
"[SEAL.] ——— ——— (Title.)

"Note and carefully follow instructions and explanations on reverse.

"Report No. ——— ——— (Not to be filled in by lessee.)

—

"LESSEE'S ANNUAL REPORT OF MINING OPERATIONS.

"RESERVATION, STATE OF ———,
"——— ——— LESSEE, YEAR ENDED ———.

"I, ———, being duly sworn, according to law, depose and say that I am the lessee (or the duly authorized agent of the lessee) above named; that I am familiar with all the mining operations under the lease hereinafter mentioned, and that I know of my own personal knowledge that the following statement is correct:

Lease No.	Description.	Total on hand at beginning of year.	Total mined.	Total shipped.	On hand.	Freight charges.	Transportation and handling charges other than railroad.	Gross smelter returns.	Royalty paid.[1]	To whom ore sold.

[1] Should agree with total shown by remittance for year.
[2] Should show all royalty paid during year and should total same as balance royalty in remittance reports for year.

Mining lease No.	Level.	Dimensions.	Labor.	Value.	Comment.
Shaft sinking Station cutting Drifting
Cross cutting
Winzing
Raising
Chutes
Manways
Pumps
Air lines
Water lines
Track
Powder magazines
Bulkheading (not in ore)
Bulkheading (in ore)
Gob filling[1]
Miscellaneous

[1] Gob filling is necessary to hold ore bodies of size; must be done where necessary, but is not considered development.

"_____ _____
"(Name of lessee.)
"_____ _____
"(Signature of person sworn.)
"_____ _____
"(Capacity in which he is sworn.)

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this —— day of ——, 19—.

"_____ _____
"Notary Public.

"My commission expires —— ——, 19—."

"INSTRUCTIONS AND EXPLANATIONS.

"1. A separate report must be submitted for each lease.

"2. The report must be in the hands of the superintendent or other officer in charge within 20 days after December 31 of each year the lease is in effect.

"3. The report must be submitted for every year during the life of the lease, regardless of whether or not mining operations are being carried on.

"4. 'On hand' should show the total tonnage unpaid for at the date of the report, including that remaining in the smelter, on the way to the smelter, and in the bins.

"5. 'Total shipped' should show separately each shipment made during the year on which separate payments of royalty were made, and separate royalties should be shown in 'Royalty paid' column. All royalty should be paid promptly.

"6. Any classification not included in this form may be added. If added on separate sheet, separate sheet must be made a part of this report and attached to same. Separate letters will not be considered part of the report.

"7. The report must show all development work done during the period for which rendered, as reports may be compared with your workings at any time between reports.

"8. Show clearly the dimensions of the workings, together with starting and ending points. Make these brief but accurate. Submit plats where practical. Include all permanent surface workings as development."

SEPTEMBER 10, 1919.

The foregoing regulations and forms are hereby approved.

CATO SELLS,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Approved September 16, 1919.

FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary of the Interior.

SPEECH OF HON. WILLIAM J. BRYAN.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a recent speech of Hon. William J. Bryan, delivered at Washington, D. C., or, rather, I should say, an abstract of the speech.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

[Abstract of speech delivered by Mr. Bryan at Washington, D. C., Sept. 24, 1919.]

"Mr. Chairman, before taking up the treaty or the covenant of the league of nations I venture to express my gratification that we are about to abandon the old doctrine of conquest and enter upon a new era in which the taking of territory by force will not be permitted. Objection has been made that it will prevent the doing of things that we have commended in the past. All progress is a repudiation of the past. Our Nation, like other nations, has taken territory by force of arms, as, for instance, in the War with Mexico New Mexico, Arizona, California, Nevada, Utah, and part of Colorado were ceded to us as a part of the settlement. But shall we refuse to turn over a new leaf because we have in the past employed the old ways?

"As late as 1898, in the War with Spain, we took Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Is that any reason why we should stand out against article 10, which preserves for the future the integrity of nations, large and small? And, speaking of the Philippines, it is interesting to note the change that has taken place in the opinions of those who favored the holding of the Philippines. Senator LODGE, for instance, made a speech on the 20th of June, 1900, as permanent chairman of the Republican convention, then being held in Philadelphia, in which he defended the holding of the Philippines. He stated:

"'We make no hypocritical pretense of being interested in the Philippines solely on account of others. While we regard the welfare of those people as a sacred trust, we regard the welfare of the American people first. We see our duty to ourselves as well as to others. We believe in trade expansion. By every legitimate means within the province of government and legislation we mean to stimulate the expansion of our trade and to open new markets. Greatest of all markets is China. Our trade there is growing by leaps and bounds. Manila, the prize of war, gives us inestimable advantages in developing that trade. It is the corner stone of our eastern policy, and the brilliant diplomacy of John Hay in securing from all nations a guaranty of our treaty rights and of the open door in China rests upon it. We ask the American people if they will throw away these new markets and widening opportunities for trade and commerce by putting in power the Democratic Party, who seek under cover of a newly discovered affection for the rights of man to give up these islands in the East and make Dewey's victory fruitless.'

"Senator LODGE rather harshly of the doctrine of 'the rights of man' at that time. He put our commercial interests above the welfare of the Filipinos. He did not even promise that the islands would be turned back, and 16 years later he voted against the Jones bill granting autonomous government and promising independence. As the President points out, he did not protest against the taking of Shantung by the Germans; he did not protest the taking of other lands from China by other nations. He has certainly traveled a long ways if we can judge by his criticism of the Shantung provision in the treaty, even though Japan promised to return the land to China. My answer to this criticism is that it is better for China to trust her case to the league of nations than to risk the chaos that might follow if the treaty was not ratified by the United States or even if long delay preceded ratification.

"The first question to be decided in considering the league of nations is whether it is desirable to prevent war. I take it for granted that few will answer in the negative. Then comes the question, Is it possible to prevent war? If not, then the promises held out by the league are futile; but a large majority of the world to-day believe that it is possible to prevent war, and this is the real issue presented by the league of nations. It is the doctrine of Christ against the teachings of Nietzsche. The latter regarded war not only necessary but desirable; Christianity holds out the hope of universal and perpetual peace.

"If peace is desirable and possible it is fair to inquire whether the covenant of the league of nations is calculated to bring peace. I believe it is. The investigation of all questions before war, with nine months' time for deliberation, will in itself make war almost impossible. The President describes this provision as 'the heart of the covenant' and calls attention to the fact that no Senator has yet attacked this provision. It is taken from the 30 treaties that bind us to three-quarters of the world. The treaties were ratified by our Senate without opposition. No objections were then made to the surrender, for one year, of our right to declare war, and no one then doubted the value of the treaties as a means of insuring peace.

"The reduction of armaments is another long step toward peace and the abolition of secret treaties gives additional assurance that future difficulties will be settled without resort to arms.

"Objections have been made and reservations proposed. The right to withdraw at the end of two years greatly reduces the force of all objections made. If that provision is not sufficiently specific, the defect can be cured at the first meeting of the league and surely the provision gives us sufficient protection until that effort is made.

"I can not agree with those who think that the Monroe doctrine is in danger. The language of the covenant is so clear on this point that there is no possibility of an attempt on the part of other nations to interfere with us.

"Article 10 seems to be the center of the fight. It pledges the members of the league to protect the territorial integrity of each against external aggression but the council only advises as to the use of force; it does not compel. And besides, the council acts by unanimous vote and we, being in the council, can veto any action that we do not approve. If it is desirable to make this reservation more specific the matter can be presented at the league when the league meets; our veto power will certainly protect us until then.

"The reservation of each nation's right to attend to its own affairs is sufficient; it does not need strengthening.

"A great deal is said regarding the large representation given to Great Britain. I am not prepared to defend the inequality in representation, either in this case or in some other cases, but here again our veto power protects us from any possible harm, and when the league meets we can ask to have the representation equalized.

"In every case where a reservation is urged as a part of the ratification I will make the same answer. A change can be made as easily after the treaty is ratified and the league established as it can now, except on the theory that we can secure by threats what we could not secure by persuasion, and that theory is destructive of the spirit which must underlie the league, if it is to be a success. Every change desired can be made afterwards without the risk that is involved in an attempted change at this time.

"Each nation has the right to decide upon the method of selecting its delegates, and each country can select them in such a way that they can be instructed as to the position they shall take on any important question that arises. If desired, provision can be made for the delegates to consult Congress or even the whole people by a referendum. We have it in our power to protect ourselves to the fullest extent, and, therefore, do not need to delay the ratification of the treaty or to adopt reservations that would require action on the part of other nations.

"And I beg you to consider the possible results of delay. The treaty is a compromise, each nation surrendering some of its contentions. If we ratify with reservations upon which other nations must act, what reason have we to believe that they will accept these reservations without asking changes themselves? And who will say when an agreement can be reached? Who will protect the world from the calamities that delay might invite? If Senators were dealing with their own affairs they might be willing to take chances, but is it not a more serious responsibility when their action may bring unspeakable injury upon their country and the world which they are powerless to repair? Nero has been held up to scorn because he 'fiddled while Rome burned,' but the burning of Rome is not to be compared with the possible conflagrations that may burst out anywhere at this time. Why take incalculable risks of delay when the covenant gives us protection, at least for a time sufficient to enable us to secure such changes as we may desire? We have the privilege of withdrawing if, after the league is established, we feel that we are not sufficiently protected or the league does not fulfill our hopes.

"The President has done the best he could, and, considering the difficulties he had to meet, he has done better than we had any reason to expect. We have no right to expect a plan perfect in its details. We do not choose between perfection and imperfection. We choose the best alternative presented. The Bible tells us of a leper who sat at the gate of a besieged city when the people were reduced to the point of starvation. One morning he thus reasoned with himself: 'If I stay I die; if I go to the camp of the enemy I may live.' That is the alternative which confronts us to-day. We must go forward with the league of nations and take whatever risks the step may involve or turn back to chaos and to certain wars. I believe the American people will go forward and do their part toward making the war out of which we have come the last war to redden the earth with blood."

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I also ask to have printed in the RECORD a brief editorial from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch showing the overwhelming sentiment of the recent convention of bankers held in New Orleans in favor of a league of nations.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.]

"BANKERS ON THE TREATY.

"The Post-Dispatch's poll of the delegates to the convention of the American Bankers' Association on the question of ratifying the peace treaty is interesting. The 874 ballots cast showed 442, a slight majority, in favor of ratifying the treaty in its present form; 308 for interpretations, provided they did not require reopening of negotiations with Germany; 84 for amendments, regardless of whether they necessitated another conference; and 40 flatly opposed to the treaty.

"How accurately the judgment of bankers reflects public sentiment may be debatable. There is no question, though, that the banker of to-day is in closer touch with his community and is more nearly representative of his community's sentiment than was the banker of yesterday. Like every other business, banking has been humanized. It has cast off that icy mantle of reserve which once enveloped it and now wears the regimentals of the day's work.

"The tally of this unofficial poll, disclosing a more than three-fourths majority in favor of a ratification which will be acceptable to the Allies, and which will end the war, may not be conclusive, but as a straw vote it goes far to confirm the belief that the American people are overwhelmingly for peace.

"If the Senate has its ear to the ground this expression of the Nation's bankers ought to be an instructive message."

DISPOSAL OF SUPPLIES IN FRANCE.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Washington Post of October 11, 1919, this morning, contains an article on bargains in food and clothing offered Europe by Secretary of War Baker. I ask leave to present it and have it printed in the RECORD at length, and without reading.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"GETS FOOD UNITED STATES NEEDS—EUROPE STILL BEING OFFERED BIG BARGAINS BY BAKER—KEEPING UP COST AT HOME—COMMITTEE ON WAR DEPARTMENT EXPENDITURES COMPLETES DETAILS OF ITS REPORT ON SALES TO FRANCE AND OTHER COUNTRIES—MEAT AND CLOTHING CONTINUE TO BE INCLUDED.

"How France drove a bargain with the United States which netted it a huge profit, amounting to more than $1,000,000,000, and how this profitable transaction helped to keep up the cost of living, is contained in the report which the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department will make to Congress.

"The report also will show it to have been the policy of Secretary Baker to avoid disturbing market conditions in America by selling surplus food supplies abroad. The present shortage in sugar receives exemplification by the pointing out that among war supplies turned over to the French for a low figure were 22,000,000 pounds of sugar.

"PROFIT OF MANY MILLIONS.

"For the supplies sold the French the United States received $400,000,000. The supplies were valued at $1,759,000,000. The thrifty French also insisted upon including in this transfer the docks, railways, and equipment built by the American Expeditionary Forces in France, valued at $180,000,000, making the value of what they obtained something more than $2,000,000,000, for which they paid $400,000,000.

"These startling facts are found in the minutes of the liquidation commission, of which Judge Edwin B. Parker, of Houston, Tex., an appointee of Col. House, was chairman. These minutes show 'that the Secretary of War expressed the opinion that no property or materials not needed by the Army for consumption in the United States should be returned to the United States, and that in no event should any clothing, food supplies, or engineering equipment be returned, but that all such commodities, as the same became surplus, should be disposed of by the commission in Europe to the best advantage.'

"SOME SUPPLIES SENT ACROSS.

"Among the supplies that were so disposed of were the following: Twenty-two million pounds of sugar, 74,000,000 pounds of bacon, 6,000,000 pairs of shoes, and 1,900,000 blankets.

"Placed in values of money, the articles so disposed of amounted to $259,000,000 of food, $323,000,000 of clothing, $310,000,000 of automobiles, and $352,000,000 of hospital supplies.

"All of these articles were sold to the French for $400,000,000, and the value placed on them in reaching the totals was lessened by an allowance for depreciation despite the fact that since the time they were bought, the prices of all these articles had greatly increased. Dock supplies and other permanent equipment were thrown in for good measure.

"MORE THAN MILLION POUNDS OF BUTTER.

"The report will also show that in addition to the sale of all these foodstuffs and other articles in France, the Secretary of War, in addition, informed Judge Parker and the liquidation commission that there was a huge amount of foodstuffs in the United States, and named C. W. Hare, of director of sales, to dispose of them in Europe. This supply consisted of 38,536,000 pounds of bacon; 39,000,000, roast beef; 36,000,000, corned beef; 20,000,000, corned-beef hash; 39,000,000 cans baked beans; 42,000,000, tomatoes; 42,000,000, string beans; 38,000,000, corn; 32,000,000, peas; 27,000,000 pounds of sugar; 5,250,000, oleomargarine; and 1,250,000, butter.

"These supplies, the report will show, Mr. Baker wishes transported from the United States and sold in Europe, presumably on the same basis that the goods were sold to the French.

"HARE'S SALARY FOR TIME $25,000.

"Mr. Hare took with him a large corps of assistants, and was receiving a salary of $25,000 a year until Congress cut it down to $12,000.

"In addition to this, according to the forthcoming report, a sale of $25,000,000 worth of foodstuffs and clothing was made to the Belgian Government in 1918. These were shipped from the United States instead of being taken out of the surplus stock in France.

"These supplies consisted of the following: Four hundred and twenty-two thousand overcoats, 412,000 trousers, 300,000 felt shoes, 165,000 leggings, 1,100,000 heavy woolen socks, 36,000 khaki coats.

"The report will show it was the policy of the Secretary of War that nothing should be done to reduce the cost of living in America by disposing of these articles here, until Congress acted, by quoting from the minutes of the same liquidation commission the following:

"The Secretary of War pointed out that the War Department had on hand in the United States large surpluses of raw materials, supplies, and equipment, of which there was only a limited market in the United States, and said these surpluses should be disposed of in Europe."

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent for a minute or two to make a statement in relation to this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the liquidation commission shows that $1,759,000,000 worth of supplies in France have been disposed of there for $400,000,000. Dock supplies and permanent equipment were thrown in as a bonus in the sale, making the actual value transferred nearly $2,000,000,000. C. W. Hare, director of sales, further shows that a huge amount of foodstuffs and clothing, surplus military supplies, are now in the United States. Mr. Hare has been designated as manager to dispose of these surplus lines in Europe. The report, according to the House Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, recites:

The Secretary of War pointed out that the War Department had on hand in the United States large surpluses of raw materials, supplies, and equipment of which there was only a limited market in the United States, and these surpluses could be disposed of in Europe.

The quotation so reported by the committee is an extract from the minutes of the liquidation commission.

Just now, when housewives can not buy a pound of sugar in Washington, when prices are increasing beyond the reach of ordinary incomes, when fruit can not be preserved for lack of sugar, it will interest a long-suffering public to read that among surplus Government supplies in the United States proposed to be sold in Europe there are 27,000,000 pounds of sugar, which will be shipped from this country and placed upon the market in Europe. There are likewise many million cans of vegetables, a vast quantity of felt shoes, woolen socks, and other articles of clothing. In meats it will be interesting to observe that 39,000,000 pounds of bacon are recommended to be turned away from our market and sold abroad; over 5,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine and 1,250,000 pounds of butter. As if the foregoing were not enough to arouse the average American's interest, the liquidation commission further shows a sale of 22,000,000 pounds of sugar surplus in France, 74,000,000 pounds of bacon, 6,000,000 pairs of shoes, and 1,900,000 blankets. Our transports are not loaded at this time, and there are other facilities by water to return them to this market.

The report further shows, quoting from the minutes of the liquidation commission, that Secretary Baker announced the policy of selling all surplus food supplies abroad and not returning them here, as it would disturb market conditions existing at this time in our own country.

The prices referred to, I wish to say in conclusion, are the existing level of prices which I think ought to be disturbed and must necessarily be disturbed if any relief comes to the consumer. We have been investigating for some two months prices in Washington and vicinity, and if any relief comes there must be a lowering of prices to levels which the sale of these commodities in the United States would tend to produce.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, a moment ago some reference was made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] to the subject of sugar and its sale abroad. I have had occasion to make some inquiry about this matter, and I have here before me a letter which I received this morning from the United States Sugar Equalization Board, now located at 111 Wall Street, New York City. The charge has been made that sugar has been sent abroad by the Government of the United States from the United States. Without taking the time to read the letter, it discloses the fact that when the supply of Cuban sugar was bought, probably a year or more ago, there was some arrangement with foreign Governments that a certain portion of that sugar should be sent abroad. That sugar was refined in this country and the refiners were under contract to send it abroad. This is explained fully in the letter, and I ask that it be incorporated in the RECORD for the information of Senators. I do not care to take the time to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES SUGAR EQUALIZATION BOARD (INC.),
New York City, October 9, 1919.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have your valued favor of October 8. We regret greatly the many complaints being received about the difficulty of getting sugar. The situation has developed not so much through an insufficient supply as from an inordinate demand. The country, according to our figures, from the 1st of January to the end of September, consumed this year 3,263,000 long tons of sugar against 2,661,000 long tons a year ago—an increase of about 602,000 long tons. This increase was entirely unexpected and is mainly responsible for the present scarcity.

The information given you in respect of exportation is not quite correct. When the equalization board bought the Cuban crop it resold to the Allies one-third of the purchase. Of this one-third the royal commission on the sugar supply arranged to have refined here 500,000 tons of raw sugar on toll. There was no objection to this, inasmuch as it kept American industries and labor employed. This is practically the only sugar that is now being exported. On the 1st of July we asked the refiners to suspend all export sales, which request has been complied with. There were, however, some contracts made prior to that date for shipment to the Allies and neutral countries. These contracts, having been made in good faith, are legal and binding on the refiners and must be lived up to. The amount, however, is small and, in our opinion, not enough to affect the American people.

In regard to your inquiry as to what the Government has done to secure the Cuban supply for the coming year, we respectfully refer you to the hearing at Washington last Friday before the Subcommittee on Agriculture, and also to the bill which, we understand, has recently been introduced by Senator MCNARY.

If you desire any further information, please have no hesitancy in asking us for same.

Yours, very truly,

U. S. SUGAR EQUALIZATION BOARD (INC.),
By GEO. A. ZABRISKIE.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word in connection with the matter referred to by the Senator from Ohio. I was informed by one of the leading sugar men of the United States the other day that Japan had purchased most of the Hawaiian sugar crop for this year; in other words, that the extra large crop raised this year will be taken away from the American market and the sugar product of the Hawaiian Islands sent to Japan or wherever Japan directs that it be shipped. If that be the case, I wish to say now that the shortage of sugar in the United States will continue at least until the crop of 1920 is manufactured.

Mr. LODGE. The Hawaiian sugar crop, I think, amounts to over 600,000 tons.

Mr. SMOOT. Last year it was the largest in the history of the islands.

Mr. LODGE. And heretofore this country has had it all.

Mr. POMERENE. I simply presented the letter because it gives the facts from the viewpoint of the United States sugar administrator. I understand the subject is now being investigated by a committee of the Senate, and I thought the public would be interested in the letter.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator's action is very wise. I wish to say, however, in this connection that there is no doubt that an agreement was made between our Government and European powers as to the division of the Cuban sugar crop of 1918. There is no question as to that; but a condition developed in this country, I think not to exceed two months ago, to which I called the attention of the Senate at the time, namely, that certain sugar merchants were purchasing sugar in the United States from that portion of the Cuban crop which was to come to the United States and exporting it and making a dollar a hundred pounds. That came about from the fact that the world became aware that there was going to be a shortage of sugar, and there developed at once trading in sugar, with a profit, as I am told, on the part of many of the merchants exporting it of $1 a hundred pounds. I called the attention of the Food Administration to that fact, and they promised me that such exportations of sugar should cease, and I understood that they have ceased.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], in discussing the shortage of sugar, stated that he had been informed by some of the leading men in the United States that the Japanese Government had purchased the Hawaiian sugar crop. At the time he made that statement I felt sure the Senator was in error. I have since communicated with one of the leading authorities on sugar, Mr. Sidney Ballou, who is the attorney for the Hawaiian sugar planters, and he tells me that it is a mistake; that the Hawaiian crop has not been purchased by the Japanese Government; that it will come to the United States, as usual; that it will amount to about 600,000 tons, and will be refined in the California-Hawaii refineries on the Pacific coast.

The impression that the Japanese Government had purchased the sugar crop of Hawaii was probably gained by the Senator from Utah from an article published in a paper called "Sugar," which intimated that the Hawaiian as well as the Philippine crop would go to Japan. It is a fact that the Philippine crop will go to Japan. Very little of that crop has been coming to this country. But the usual amount of Hawaiian sugar, in fact probably more than the usual amount, will come to the United States.

Japanese merchants have recently been in Hawaii buying sugar in retail quantities and shipping it to Japan. That probably is another reason for the rumor.

I merely make this statement in order to get the facts correctly before the Senate.

ADDRESS OF HON. JOHN WOODWARD.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have before me an address delivered by Hon. John Woodward, justice of the appellate division of the third department, at the Albany (New York) Law School on Wednesday evening, September 17, on the league of nations and the Constitution of the United States. I asked to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Knickerbocker Press, Sept. 21, 1919.]

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS AND THE CONSTITUTION.

(An address by Hon. John Woodward, justice of the appellate division, third department, at the Albany Law School, Wednesday evening, September 17, before the students of the school and the members of the bar, on the subject of the League of Nations and the Constitution of the United States.)

"This is Constitution day, and all over this country people are meeting to learn and to exchange views about that sacred instrument, which has been to us a charter of liberty and a guide to good government, and it is thought that a day given over to this may be beneficial to our understanding, to our patriotism, and to our love and confidence in our country and its institutions. And I am willing to do my part the best I can before an audience of this character to make the day one worth while.

"I feel some embarrassment in addressing a student body. I have none in addressing my associates who are present on this subject. I know their limitations as well as they know mine.

"The Constitution of the United States was a growth, and it grew out of conditions that never prevailed anywhere else in the world. To be brief about it, the 13 Colonies declared their independence, having already elected a Congress which had control of their joint government. That Congress was a revolutionary body and not bound by any very strict, hard, and fast rules, and such bodies never are. Time went on, independence was achieved, a treaty of peace signed, and the 13 Colonies at war with England each became a little separate country, 13 little Englands planted on this continent, each absolutely independent of the other, each a nation.

"Now, for their mutual protection and defense they decided to continue their alliance which had existed during their long war, and they continued it under the Articles of Confederation, and their government was a government by a legislative body. That government was not a success, because it was a mere voluntary league without any force anywhere to compel any member of the league to do anything that it was asked to do by the league. They could request the various States to contribute funds to pay the old war debt, or to meet the current expenses of the government, and New York could refuse, and Rhode Island could do the same, and any other State could do the same, and there was no force to compel them to do otherwise. So the government was a failure, and then followed the great convention of 1787, over which George Washington presided, and which created a more perfect union.

"Now, if I may diverge a little, government is an evolution, and it is a science, and it is based on well-established principles. The first government that we know anything about, or that the antiquarians pretend to know anything about, was the government by a chief, the government of one who had the power over life and death and of the disposition of the property of each member of the tribe; and so, according to Mr. James C. Carter, whose book I commend to you as the best one I know of on this subject, that government continued with us until the people of the tribes began to discover that the chief did not always do right; that he sometimes punished people and sometimes took away their lives and sometimes deprived them of their property and the results of their labor, like the rabbit they had killed for their dinner or their weapon that they had forged for defense; and he took them when he hadn't any right to, and when the subject punished had not done anything in violation of any of the rules and customs of the tribe. And so these people, with their dawning intelligence, said, 'It isn't fair to punish a man who hasn't violated the customs of the tribe,' and there should be somebody to say whether he has or not before any punishment can be meted out by this chief—this executive—who had been ruling. And so there followed the selection of arbitrators in the tribe; and when one was charged with having violated any of the customs—they had no laws, because they had no way of preserving them—he was first placed on trial before the arbitrators and proof was taken as to whether or not he had violated a custom of his tribe. If he had, he was punished; if he had not, then the chief could not administer any punishment. That was the first court; and the court was the second branch of government that was recognized. Then intelligence increased and men learned how to reduce their thoughts to writing and to preserve them; and then they thought best to have their laws preserved in ways that people could know what they might do or what they might not do. Then came the legislative branch of the government that prescribed the rules of conduct, prohibiting what was wrong and permitting what was right. So then there came the scientific government, composed of three branches, the executive, the judicial, and the legislative, and from that early period no civilized government has existed that has not had those three branches. So these 13 States at the Constitutional Convention assembled, through their representatives, desired to make a constitution to govern not the local affairs of the various States that made up the league, but to govern the league itself; and so they provided for somebody to make the rules of the league—the laws of the league—and that was the Congress. Having provided for a Congress to make the laws and rules of the league, there was to be somebody to interpret those laws and rules of the league, and that was the Federal court. Then, having done that, there had to be somebody to administer those laws, and that required an executive officer, and resulted in the creation of the office of President, as the Chief Executive, to execute the laws, not of local affairs but of this league.

"Now, there was no way for the officers of this league to execute the laws of the league without it had power and force behind it, and there never was any way for any government to execute its laws and enforce its decrees except through force; and that necessitated that the league should have an army and navy with which it could enforce its decrees, and that was created, and the Federal Government became a Government in fact, a Government of power, a Government with force to perpetuate itself.

"I have to be brief in sketching these things, but now we come to the great subject of the present time, the league of nations, and I am not here as a disputant or an advocate of one or the other side in a partisan spirit, because I remember the admonition of my old friend, Judge Bartlett, when I used to sit with him in court. He said it wasn't the business of a judge to engage in disputes, but to settle and adjust them. But it is proposed now that this war is over that we enter into a league of nations, and the advocates of the league of nations point to the success af the American union as an example and reason why a league of nations can be successful.

"Now, if you have a league of nations you have to have the same kind of a Government that you had to have when you had a league of nations in the United States, by putting the 13 independent colonies or States together. And when you get your league of nations, no matter what power is vested in it just now, or what the arrangements of its officers are, eventually it is a Government, and it is a Government made up of independent States, the same as the United States of America was made up, and they must have somebody to make the rules of this league of nations. And when they get somebody to make the rules of the league of nations, they must have somebody to interpret those rules, and they will have a power corresponding to our Congress to make these rules or laws, and they will have a body corresponding to our Supreme Court to interpret the rules of this league, and then they must have the indispensable thing, an executive to enforce the decrees of this league of nations, and the only way that that executive branch of this new Government can enforce its decrees is to be backed by an army and navy, the same as the United States of America has been backed by an army and a navy, so that when they make a decree they can enforce it on the world.

"Now, when the Federal Union was formed there were two distinct views existing about the rights of the various States of the Union to withdraw from the new league which they were entering if they should see fit, and, to be entirely fair about the matter, there were probably what you might call two correct views diametrically opposed from the beginning, one side having the belief of one school, and the thinkers on the other side of another school. So it went on and a man prided himself on living in Virgina, or being a New Yorker, or a Massachusetts man, and the local pride of these people was strong, and at varying times and on varying questions nearly every section of the country asserted the right to withdraw from this league if it wanted to. They said it was but a compact, and a part of the compact was the right to withdraw. There came a time in 1860, after the election of President Lincoln, when a large section of the Union, relying on what it believed to be part of the compact which permitted them to withdraw, decided that they would withdraw from the league, and so they gave notice to that effect, and that notice to withdraw was met by force by the great central Federal Government, and they were not permitted to withdraw, and a long and bloody war followed to compel them to stay within the league which they had entered, and the force and power of the Federal Government kept them there until now it is no particular credit to be a citizen of Massachusetts, or a citizen of Virginia, or a citizen of any other State of the Union, or whether a man hails from Montana or from South Carolina. The States are a mere subdivision of the country, like the counties.

"Now, you may say that has all worked out very well, and doubtless so far it has in this country, but this was a homogeneous people, speaking the same language throughout and accustomed to the same laws, with wide areas of territory yet unsettled so that they could expand, and so the country has gone on until it has a great central government located at the national seat of government and not at the several State seats of government. And so when you have a league of nations into which is incorporated several of the nations of the earth you can not have it without you have a government, and you can not have a government that is of any consequence that is not stronger than any one of the parts of that government. And this big central government never can be anything without great armies and navies, and from its seat on Lake Geneva or some distant point it shall pronounce its decree or decide upon a particular course. If the United States of America should say we do not approve of this thing that you want to do, we want to withdraw from the league of nations, the league of nations, just as surely as the sun rises, will make the same answer to the United States of America that the United States of America made to the Southern States when they sought to withdraw. It will say you can not do so, and if you try to do it you will face the British fleet and the German fleet, or the German fleet and the French fleet, and the fleets and the armies of the balance of this league, who will keep you in it. So I say that when you decide to enter a strong league of nations you should realize that you are submerging your own nation in this league and giving it up and giving it a second place in your patriotism, and that your main government will hereafter be the great central government of the league.

"I do not know whether I have made myself clear or not, but that is why I am not in favor of a league of nations. I was raised probably under the old school of thought, and I love my country. I think its aims and purposes and objects and direction of its travel are different from those of European countries, and I think that a union with European countries such as is contemplated can only reduce our standing to the average of all the world. I can only believe that we are establishing in a distant point a great and powerful government which has more power over the citizen than any government that we desire to have over us. You see the great beauty of our Government so far has been that locally we have attended to our local affairs, and you will have to go through a period of war, such as you young men have seen, to find what it is to have a great central government to take charge of your affairs and submerge your State and govern your individuality and have distant agents in your neighborhood enforcing your laws and spying upon you—I am not complaining of their doing it in times of war, but I mean to say that is what it is, that the officers placed over you by this distant government, distant center of power, are strangers to you, and you come to an imperial state, and you shake off your democratic state.

"I heard Dr. Jackson, of Washington, who is traveling over the country speaking in favor of the league of nations, and who is a delightful gentleman. In speaking of this subject he said those things are all different now, and public opinion will control. Now, I do not advertise myself to be a great scholar, but I have read some, and I do not think the human mind, or human nature, has altered much since history has been recorded or since literature has been provided us, and you young men, who have recently read Horace, or Homer, or Aristotle, or any of the ancient philosophers, did not find any trouble in understanding them. They spoke a language and of affairs that you perfectly understood, and you felt that if you were to meet any of those gentlemen you could engage in conversation with them, that you spoke a like language, and there was not much difference in the human mind of then and now.

"Herbert Spencer says that laws and governments are evolutionary, and that we reached certain states because of evolution, but William H. Mallock, in his great book, Aristocracy and Evolution, contends to the contrary as to the evolutionary forces and says that the great events of all history are shaped more by great men than by evolution, and that you never could have had the Cromwellian period in English history without Oliver Cromwell; that you never could have had a Napoleonic period in France without Napoleon Bonaparte, because in each instance as soon as the central figure was gone the cause collapsed, and that the American colonies never could have secured their independence but for George Washington, and no evolution could have brought it about. They say that Napoleon Bonaparte's aim was a world dominion or empire, and that William II of Germany aimed at a world empire, and those who are promoting a league of nations are, I think, preparing the world for some future Napoleon Bonaparte, or some future William II, by furnishing him with a complete outfit, a complete government to subjugate and to take control of and through it rule the world in imperialistic fashion. I may be mistaken about this, but I offer it as my humble contribution to this day's discussions. You young men have a great many more days ahead of you, if you live your lives, than I have ahead of me, because mine is nearer lived out, and you have a Constitution which you ought not to understand in any misty sort of way. You ought to have a clean-cut idea of just what was tried to be accomplished by this Constitution, and have it in words that are spoken by plain men, and not encumbered with so much learning that you do not know what you have read after you have read it.

"The Constitution of the United States, when it was adopted by the States, omitted certain provisions that it was thought by the patriots and lovers of liberty at the time should have been incorporated in it, and so, in order to induce its adoption there was a tacit understanding, or gentleman's agreement, that the Constitution would be at once amended so as to incorporate the things that had been left out, and the first amendment adopted was as follows: 'Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.' Now, that meant something. When John Adams was the representative of this country in France, during the Revolutionary War, he wrote a letter to the president of the Congress at home commenting upon a speech that had been made in the British Parliament, in which he defined our understanding of free speech and a free press in the United States, and this during a war, and he said we have the freest press and freest speech in the world. We criticize Congress, the president of the Congress, the magistrates, the generals of the Army, the Army itself, and the measures of our Congress freely, and yet, he said, I have never heard any such suggestion as made by this member of the British Parliament.

"That continued to be the understanding of what free speech was down to the Mexican War, and during the Mexican War, with our armies in the field and Gen. Taylor leading his troops over the Rio Grande, there was great opposition to the Mexican War in this country, and a great meeting was held at Lexington, Ky., which was presided over by the great Henry Clay (during a war), and Henry Clay stated at that meeting this is an unjust and unjustifiable war of aggression, and it ought to be stopped. He said we are not fighting for our altars and our firesides, but the Mexicans are fighting for theirs. And at the close of the meeting resolutions were adopted calling for an ending of the war, and asking like-minded people throughout the United States to hold meetings and pass similar resolutions to try to stop this war, and they held them. In the city of Boston Charles Sumner was the principal orator, and he made a speech denouncing the Mexican War, and in Congress Abraham Lincoln and Daniel Webster made similar speeches, and nobody thought these people were guilty of sedition. Everybody thought they were within their rights, and the understanding of the Government was that the people had a right to discuss the matters involved in a war, as much as they had a right to discuss anything else. Judge Cooley, in his work on constitutional limitations, says it is a more sacred right to be able to discuss public questions during a war than it is during peace time.

"Now, such was the law, such was the understanding of these constitutional provisions, down to the Civil War, and during the Civil War arbitrary arrests took place, and the imprisonment of men in Fort Lafayette caused a great deal of criticism, but it produced no judicial interpretations which justified arbitrary action on the part of the executive authority.

"Then came this war, and the sedition act was passed, by which it was sought to prevent people discussing war measures adversely to the Government. Men were indicted and placed on trial for saying that they did not believe in a conscript army, or that they believed that the conscription law should be repealed, or that in their judgment the only sort of an army that should be raised in the United States was a volunteer army, and when the case was made out against them the district judge, in some cases, held that the citizen was within his rights, and dismissed the indictments. Then, to meet these decisions, Attorney General Gregory prepared an act, which Congress passed, which provided that an utterance of that character might be submitted to a jury, for the jury to say whether or not the effect of such utterance would tend to interfere with the draft or discourage enlistment, and if the jury said it would do that, then it was sedition, and the person who said the things could be convicted, although guilty of no overt act against the Government, and guilty of nothing except the expression of his opinion about pertinent questions during a period of war. Through such convictions hundreds of citizens were sent to prison. Many are there now, and others are out on bail. I do not say this to criticize the Government.

"I am only telling you the facts, so that you may know exactly the conditions under which you live in this respect. And it is not going too far to say that the right of free speech during war has been abrogated in this country, and it is undoubtedly true that our Constitution has been limited in such a way that there is no longer a right of free speech in war time. It will be for the men of your generation to say whether society is so constituted that the privilege of free speech can not be safely given to the people, either in war or peace, for at the present time, in the effort to suppress the disseminators of certain political doctrines, it is proposed seriously to limit the freedom of speech in times of peace. I do not say that they ought not to be deprived of it to some extent, or that limitation should not be placed on it, but it ought to be done with a perfect understanding of what is being done, particularly by young men such as are assembled here to-night.

"The Constitution was not for the purpose of protecting majorities alone. The Constitution was for the purpose of having a government of laws and protecting the rights of minorities as well. It was prepared and adopted for the purpose of preventing the Government from being arbitrary and making it deliberate. It is hard in this country for people to differentiate. They think of a sovereign as a man. They think of a king. But in this country the sovereign is the majority, and the people have no more right in their sovereign capacity to do you an injustice than Kaiser Wilhelm II or the Czar of Russia had. And so the Constitution stated that you should be sacred in certain rights and no majority can be sufficient to make it justifiable to deprive you of your life, or your liberty, or your property, without due process of law. What are constitutions for? We hear in lecture rooms about this great writ of habeas corpus. Now, a writ of habeas corpus is a great and beneficent writ, but it is not of any use while a body of law students hear a profound lecture about it. It is not of any use when the orator on the Fourth of July in the town hall is telling what a wonderful thing it is. It is not of any use except when the citizen is reduced to a minority of one, and is put in jail and locked up and deprived of his liberty, and if he can not get a writ of habeas corpus then that writ is a failure. That is what this writ is for. It is the same with free speech. Free speech did not mean, and a free press did not mean, originally, that you had a right when times were absolutely placid and nothing was going on, and nobody was interested in what you said, to say something. [Laughter.] It did not mean anything like that. It meant in the great crises of human affairs, when great movements were on, and the world was moving in one direction or another that a man had a right to give his contribution to the forces that were moving it. When it said that you had a right to assemble freely in your communities and petition the Government, it did not mean that when you did not having anything to petition the Government about and there was not anything that anybody was interested in, you could have a meeting in this hall and petition the Government. Nobody would know what to petition for. That is no privilege. It is when you have a wrong and a grievance, and when the Government is doing something that you do not like, and things are happening in the world that do not suit you—that is when you want to appeal to the Government, and petition it, and if you can not petition it then and you can not assemble, then that right, which was supposed to be guaranteed by this great charter of liberty, is no right at all."

DISPOSITION OF THRACE.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations to a matter I desire to bring to his notice. I apologize for the observation which I am going to make to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations and to the membership of that committee. Some time ago a resolution was offered in the Senate expressing the views of the Senate in respect to the disposition which the peace conference should make of the territory of Thrace. I sincerely hope that the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom the resolution was referred, may report the resolution at as early a date as possible, for the reason that, as I understand, the peace conference has not yet reached a conclusion as to what arrangement shall be made in the treaty with respect to Thracian territory.

We were advised that representatives of our Government at the peace conference made a proposition so absurd as, in my opinion, to call for dissent from the American people and from those who are familiar with the situation in the Balkans. The proposition which they made, as I understand, was to divide Thrace into a number of parts. A portion was to be given to Greece, another portion to Bulgaria, another portion was to be internationalized, and I am not sure what disposition was to be made of the other remnants. That policy, it seems to me, was entirely wrong. It disregarded the ethnographic and geographic conditions.

I have felt that an expression from the Senate of the United States with respect to the disposition which they think should be made of Thrace might influence the representatives of our Government at the peace conference. At any rate, I think that we should place our seal of disapproval upon that proposed dismemberment and ravishment of Thrace, and that we should express our view that the Thracian territory should be given to Greece. I sincerely hope that the Committee on Foreign Relations will report the resolution at an early date, in the hope that it may have some influence upon the peace congress.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah, I am sure, is aware that I am in full sympathy with him regarding his views about Thrace. Among the many amazing things of this strange time, nothing has been more amazing to me than that the United States should be the one country that has stood out against giving Thrace, which is almost wholly Grecian, to Greece; but we did. That is the fact. The other great powers, as I understand, were ready to comply with the Greek demands; but we, for some reason, have prevented that thing. I do not know why.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, does the Senator think there is any objection to the Senate expressing its opinion?

Mr. LODGE. Not the least. I shall be very glad to have the Senate express its opinion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should be very much gratified to have an opportunity to cast that vote myself.

Mr. LODGE. I was about to say that although I believe the committee is in favor of it, since the treaty with Germany has been in the Senate I have been so occupied, and the members of the committee have been so occupied, that I have not called a meeting for that purpose, and I ought to have done it. I admit that; but I have been so pressed with other matters that I have not. I assure the Senator from Utah that I will call a meeting of the committee immediately. I will call it for Monday, and I will endeavor to get that Thracian resolution out, for I feel quite as strongly about it as does the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I do not recall the language of the resolution presented by the Senator from Utah, but I wish now to inquire if the resolution indicates the action that the United States Senate should take in respect to this matter?

Mr. KING. My recollection of the matter is that it merely expresses the sense of the Senate that Thrace, up to a line drawn from Enos to Midia, should be given to Greece. There is a concluding part of the resolution upon which I shall not ask the committee to report favorably at the present time. That is, with respect to the disposition which should be made of Constantinople. That is a matter that may be debated; but the Thracian territory proper, up to the line indicated in the resolution, I think, should be given to Greece; and the resolution merely calls for the expression of the views of the Senate with respect to that matter.

Mr. KNOX. May I venture to inquire if the Senator would be willing to express an opinion as to whether or not the Thracian people should determine the question of their own disposition?

Mr. KING. I should not have the slightest objection in the world to that, for the reason that within the territory to which I have referred perhaps 7 to 1 are Greeks, the one out of the seven being Bulgarian.

Mr. KNOX. Would not the Senator think, then, that the same rule should also apply to Egypt, and to Shantung, and to Persia?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator is going far afield from the resolution which I have introduced. Let us take one resolution at a time.

Mr. KNOX. I am seeking a principle; that is all. I am seeking for a principle that should be of general application, and I am desirous of knowing the views of the Senator from Utah upon that point.

Mr. KING. I am not seeking the vindication of a principle in the resolution which I have offered. I am simply attempting to secure a right in behalf of the Grecian people.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I ask also whether or not the same principle should be applied to the Philippines?

Mr. KING. Oh, obviously if we begin the application of that principle of self-determination and apply it strictly, we will have to apply it to the Porto Ricans, and to the Hawaiians, and to the Filipinos, and perhaps to other territory which is now under the flag of the United States.

Mr. KNOX. I might add, in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota, that most people understand that the Philippines are not in hock and being disposed of. They are owned by the United States.

Mr. KING. I might respond to the Senator from Pennsylvania by making an inquiry as to whether he is in favor of giving Ireland the right of self-determination?

Mr. KNOX. I should like to have an opportunity to do it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the resolution of the Senator from Utah is as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that, in the treaties of peace with Bulgaria and with Turkey, western or Bulgarian Thrace to the line of the Arda River and eastern or Turkish Thrace, including Adrianople, to the line from Enos on the Ægean Sea to Midia on the Black Sea, should be awarded to Greece, proper facilities for Bulgarian commerce to be reserved at Saloniki, Kavalla, and Dedeagatch.

Resolved further, That the residue of European Turkey, including Constantinople, the coasts of the Sea of Marmora, and the peninsula of Gallipoli, should be constituted a free State under the protection of the league of nations.

This, Mr. President, is not a case of a country, one of the Allies, holding territory occupied by people of another race. This is the peace conference undertaking to decide the fate of people who are Greeks; and they propose at present to hand them back, in large measure, to Bulgaria, which was our enemy during the war.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I merely wish to warn the Senator from Utah not to build too high hopes upon the expression of opinion which this resolution contains—a resolution which the Committee on Foreign Relations has been ready to report for some time and which I am sure the Senate is willing to adopt—because the fact is that other communications, notably a round robin signed by 39 Senators, was forwarded to the peace commission at Paris with notable lack of result; and I have grave doubts whether even a formal resolution of the Senate will produce any other result.

PORTO RICO AND THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have here a communication, dated October 9, from the Resident Commissioner of Porto Rico, Mr. FELIX CORDOVA DAVILA, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., October 9, 1919.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As you know, according to the covenant of the league of nations, any fully self-governing state, dominion, or colony may become a member of the league if its admission is agreed to by two-thirds of the assembly, provided that it shall give effective guaranties to its sincere intention to observe its international obligations, and shall accept such regulations as may be prescribed by the league in regard to its military, naval, and air forces and armaments. Canada, Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, and India have been admitted as original members of the league. The island of Porto Rico is at present a self-governing state, with a legislature elected by the people and some members of the executive appointed by the governor, with the consent of the insular senate. I have no doubt but that we will obtain in the near future complete self-government by an act of Congress, and for the present time I am sure that India, South Africa, and New Zealand have no more self-governing powers than those of the island of Porto Rico. In my opinion, Porto Rico is entitled to have a seat in the assembly created by the league of nations as a member of the said league, and I respectfully suggest to you that in case the treaty be ratified it should be stated in clear language that it is understood by the United States Senate that Porto Rico will be made a member of the league with the same representation that the colonies of England have.

Trusting that you will give full consideration to my suggestions, I remain,

Very truly, yours,

FELIX CORDOVA DAVILA.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, as far as I know, that matter has not been before the Committee on Foreign Relations; but inasmuch as the Resident Commissioner has seen fit to communicate with me upon the subject, I thought it was only courteous to him to place his communication in the RECORD for such attention as the Senate may care to give it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The communication will lie on the table.

REPORT OF PAUL P. WHITHAM.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, while I have the floor I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a report which was made to the Department of Commerce by a very skillful engineer whom that department sent to China for the purpose of informing the department, and, I assume, through the department the country, what the conditions in China were, among other things, as to the transportation system. Of course, the prosperity and development of China, as well to a great extent as the policy of the "open door," which this country has always so insistently stood for, depends largely upon the question of transportation and its control in China.

This engineer is named Mr. Paul Whitham. He was formerly employed by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, and had charge of the great water-front development of that railroad system at the Pacific port of Seattle. He was recommended by the president of the St. Paul Railroad, and, I think, largely upon that recommendation was employed by the Department of Commerce. He made a voluminous and noteworthy report upon the railroad situation in China, which becomes of special interest to us at this time, inasmuch as we are now dealing with the pending amendment in relation to Shantung, the Province of China which, with its 40,000,000 of people, has been handed over to Japan.

It is well known that Shantung, with its great industrial development and its railroad facilities, is that portion of China upon which, to a great extent, its transportation systems converge and bring the products of China to the coast; so that, having heard of this report and of its great importance in relation to the very matter which the Senate is now considering in relation to this treaty of peace, I wrote on August 14, nearly two months ago, the following letter:

AUGUST 14, 1919.

Hon. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary of the Department of Commerce,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Can you send me a copy of the report made to the Department of Commerce by Mr. Paul Page Whitham concerning the unification and neutralization of transportation in China, dealing with the railroads of China among other things?

Very respectfully, yours,

FRANK B. BRANDEGEE.

I received a communication from Secretary Redfield stating that the report was no longer in his possession, that it had been taken by the Department of State, and was in the custody of that department, whereupon I wrote the following letter:

AUGUST 22, 1919.

Hon. ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State,
State Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I inclose herewith a letter from Mr. E. F. Sweet, Acting Secretary of the Department of Commerce, in relation to the report of Mr. Paul P. Whitham upon "Neutralization of Transportation in China." Will you be kind enough to send me a copy of this report?

Very respectfully, yours,

FRANK B. BRANDEGEE.

I received from Secretary Lansing the following letter:

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
"Washington, D. C., August 26, 1919.

"In reply refer
"F. E. 195 253.

"The Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
"United States Senate.

"SIR: I have received your letter of the 22d of August asking for a copy of a report made by Mr. Paul Whitham on 'Neutralization of transportation in China.' The report in question has never received the approval of the department, for its tendency is such that this department is not disposed to give it circulation under circumstances which might be construed as implying any responsibility for its conclusions.

"The proposal embodied in this report has, furthermore, been confused in some quarters with certain matters now under negotiation in China.

"In view of these considerations, I regret that it does not seem compatible with the public interests to communicate Mr. Whitham's report as requested."

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, may I ask whether the Senator has indicated by whose authority the engineer made this report in the first instance?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator be kind enough to withhold his inquiry until I finish reading the letter?

Mr. KNOX. I beg the Senator's pardon; I thought he had finished the letter.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. When I finish the letter I will answer the inquiry of the Senator. The letter continues:

"I have the honor to add that I have obtained for you, and inclose under separate cover, an advance copy of a report on the railways of China, prepared by Mr. Frank Rhea, which contains, on pages 224–226, a consideration of the question of consolidating or unifying the railways of China. This monograph is not yet ready for distribution to the public, but will doubtless be given out after the 30th of the present month. I venture to hope that it will give you the information for which you are seeking.

"I have the honor to be, sir,
"Your obedient servant,

"ROBERT LANSING.

"Inclosure:
"Monograph relating to railways in China under separate cover."

Replying to the inquiry of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] as to the responsibility of any department in instructing the report to be made, I stated in opening, but I have no doubt the Senator's attention was diverted at the time, that it was an official of the Department of Commerce who made this report. He was sent to China for the purpose of making it; he did make it, and sent it to the Department of Commerce, whose records are open to the public.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Does not the matter relate to the domestic affairs of China, and are we to assume guardianship over the domestic affairs of China?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the treaty proposes that we shall assume guardianship over so many peoples, and be mandatory over so many disjointed, disrupted, and dismembered remnants of empires, that I do not know what activity the Government will be engaged in in the near future.

But this I do know, that this treaty proposes to transfer the sacred province of China, one of its seacoast provinces, a province containing from thirty-five to forty millions of its citizens, to a foreign empire, and that is recommended by our President, and we are asked to assent to it. In doing that, it seems to me germane for us to know at least what constitutes the Province of Shantung, and how it is related to the great Empire of China, to the dismemberment of which we are asked to be a party.

Mr. President, it appears that the Department of Commerce had this report. It is supposed that it was getting it in aid of the commerce of this country, for the information of our citizens. The minute it is discovered in the Department of Commerce it is grabbed by the State Department and put under the seal of diplomatic secrecy.

Being unable to get this report, because, forsooth, the Secretary of State says that he does not approve of it, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] introduced in the Senate, on the 11th day of September, as will appear on page 5216 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the Senate a copy of the report made by Mr. Paul Whitham on "Neutralization of transportation in China."

That resolution was unanimously agreed to by the Senate of the United States, having been proposed by the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, which has jurisdiction of the treaty now pending. That was on the 11th day of September, Mr. President. No attention whatever was paid to that by the State Department, and finally, about three weeks after that, the Senator from Massachusetts, addressing the Senate during the morning hour, called attention to the fact that apparently the State Department of the Government had inaugurated a new policy, of ignoring the resolutions adopted by the Senate as to the business in hand, and there was some debate upon the question. A few days afterwards the following message from the President of the United States was sent to the Senate, to wit:

To the Senate:

In response to the resolution adopted by the Senate on September 11, 1919, "That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the Senate a copy of the report made by Mr. Paul Whitham on 'Neutralization of Transportation in China,'" I am constrained to say that, after a thorough consideration of the resolution and with every desire to meet the wishes of the Senate, I am of the belief that the public interests would not be conserved by the transmission to the Senate of the report requested.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
September 29, 1919.

Mr. President, the Senate is one-half the treaty-making power of the country, and it now has pending this treaty, involving a question which this report deals with intimately, and though it was originally made to a department which does not have the right to decline Senate resolutions calling for the submission of documents, the Senate is not permitted to see this report in order to inform itself about this very treaty and the condition of Shantung and the bearing of the railroad system of China upon the disposition of Shantung. The President of the United States, on the 29th of September, which I am informed was the very day he returned here ill, and we know in what condition he arrived on that day, states that he is "constrained to state that after a thorough consideration of the resolution, and with every desire to meet the wishes of the Senate," he is "of the belief that the public interests would not be conserved by the transmission to the Senate of the report requested."

Mr. President, I wonder how many Senators think that the President of the United States has read that report or has given it a "thorough consideration"? I have seen the original signature of the President to that communication.

Mr. President, I do not know whether anything can be done about this matter. I do not understand why the Senate can not be informed about this report, and can not have the information that the executive department has in relation to it. What difference does it make whether Mr. Lansing approves of this report or not? Nobody is asking him to assume responsibility for it. It was not made to him. A report was made to the Department of Commerce. Is Mr. Lansing a branch of the treaty-making power of this country? There is no question but what the Senate is. We are entitled to that information, we are entitled to read the statement of that engineer made to the Department of Commerce, and to form our own opinion as to whether we approve of it or believe in it. Has it come to the point where in the consideration of a great new world order of things, a treaty involving 26 or 30 nations, reports bearing upon vital questions connected with that treaty are to be seized from other departments by the Department of State and squelched and denied to the Senate, under the seal of diplomatic secrecy?

How is it expected that we can form an accurate and correct judgment of the existing state of things in those far-away countries? Here is a report of our own agent. What business has the State Department to go to the records of other departments and take their reports and sequester them? It is no part of the diplomatic business of this country. It was not a diplomatic question at all. The whole investigation was made by a business agency of this Government, and because the President, under the Constitution, has the appointment of ambassadors to foreign countries, and is authorized to receive ambassadors and diplomatic officers from foreign countries, simply upon that constitutional provision, the Secretary of State presumes to invade another department and take its records, collected in the ordinary transaction of business, upon business questions, sequester them in his own department, and then say, "I decline to give them to the Senate of the United States, because I have not attached my approval to them, and I do not think it is in the public interest."

Mr. President, I call attention to this simply because it is right in line with the conduct of the executive department in not furnishing information to the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Senate through the consideration of this entire treaty.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not quite understand whether the Senator, in his very interesting discussion of the matter, stated that it was actually the President's own signature on his communication to the Senate. I am a little curious to know whether he signed it himself, and when he read this communication, in the multitude of matters engrossing him, and in view of his lamentable condition when he returned.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I will state that I am not an expert in handwriting and I am not familiar with the President's signature. I did see the signature, or alleged signature, to the response to the Senate resolution. I do not know whether it is the President's signature or not. A message came in here yesterday or day before from the President of the United States, and I did not see that. I do not know whether it contained his signature or not.

I do not know whether the messages that have been received from him during his absence in Europe for six months contained his signature. I would not know his signature if I saw it. But in the light of the well-known circumstances, the President arriving here on the 29th and being immediately taken charge of by his physicians and having been ill ever since, it seems to me on the face of it the President could not have really given this matter the "thorough consideration" which he states over this signature that he has given to it. But whether he has or not, of course, what I assume happened is that if the President signed this reply to the resolution of the Senate, Secretary Lansing or the State Department sent it to him for his signature, and he signed it as a routine matter. He could not have had time to read the report and give it any thorough consideration; that is, I should not judge he could, even if he were well.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator recall when the report was made?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have not seen the report, so I am unable to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am inquiring because it occurs to me, without knowing any of the facts, that it is quite within the possibilities that the report had been in the State Department for some time and had previously been read by the President, or he might have had it with him on his trip and read it at his leisure. There are any number of contingencies that might have occurred, and it seems to me a little reckless for a Senator to question a fact officially stated over the President's signature, without having made any inquiry as to the circumstances.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I may be a very reckless gentleman, Mr. President, though I do not feel very reckless at this moment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the report was of the importance the Senator suggests, it is quite likely, in fact, I should say it is highly probable, that the President discussed it with the Secretary of State and probably examined it, either prior to his trip or upon his trip. Any number of contingencies may have placed the President in possession of the information.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I quite agree with the Senator. All things are possible. It may be that the President has read this report in its entirety. I am not discussing possibilities. I am discussing probabilities. I say to the Senator that I have formed no final and conclusive judgment about this, because I am in utter ignorance about it except for the information that I have read here this morning contained in my letter of inquiry and the responses, and in one other matter to which I was about to allude when the Senator rose.

I have stated that I do not know what was the date of this report nor when it was filed in the Department of Commerce. I never have seen it. I understand the gentleman, Mr. Whitham, is now in China. If he were here I would have gone to him and asked him all about the details of it. I do know this, that while it was in the Department of Commerce, a gentleman who does not live in Washington, but with whom I happened to be talking one evening on other matters connected with the treaty, told me that there was such a report in the Department of Commerce, and that he had read it, and told me, if I can trust my recollection, that it showed the extent to which the Japanese were penetrating China and controlling its avenues of transportation; and proposing a way to carry out the very title of the report, to wit, to neutralize the transportation system of China, so that the policy of the open door for all nations could not be defeated or put in peril by Japan or any other country.

Then, Mr. President, that gentleman, who had been allowed to read the report there in the department—they would not give him a copy of it, compelling him to stay there and read it right there—told me that another gentleman had been allowed to see it, and he gave the address of the other man.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will be kind enough to indulge me until I can complete my statement I shall then be glad to yield.

I wrote to this gentleman stating that I had been informed that he had been allowed the privilege of reading this report while it was in the Department of Commerce, and asking if he would be kind enough to advise me, if he could, as to the general purport and tenor of it. He replied that he would be in Washington in a few days and would be glad to call upon me, which he did. He said he had been shown the report when it was in the Department of Commerce and had read it; that it was a magnificent report and stated the true situation about the transportation system of China and what was happening to it and who was controlling it and what it meant to the commerce and future industries and prosperity of this country; but he said, "I do not want to get drawn into this matter. I have not the report, and while I think it is of vital interest to this country that it should be made public, I can not say anything publicly about it."

I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I wanted to ask the Senator from Connecticut whether the facts which he has stated do not testify very strongly to the conclusion that the administration is very alert in protecting the interests of the open door and of China? According to what he has stated, the administration has sent an able representative to China; he has made an investigation, and, according to the Senator himself, his report is an able and conclusive one, to show that Japan is engaged in attempting to secure an undue control over the railways of China, and that the report further proceeds argumentatively to show methods by which those railroads can be neutralized.

If that is all true, what the Senator says is really a commendation and amounts to a eulogy of the department as being alert and giving proper attention to protecting the proper interests of other countries in China and of China herself. If that is true, if the administration is taking these wise steps, with which I am sure the Senator from Connecticut sympathizes and which he evidently approves, it is very evident that nothing the Senate can do will aid in that matter. It is not within our jurisdiction. It is purely an executive affair at the present time.

If, on top of that, after making that effort to secure the information, the Executive advises the Senate that it is contrary to the public interest or inimical to the public interest to make public a matter of this kind, it seems to me that is a very conclusive statement and argues very strongly in favor of the wisdom of the course taken by the Executive.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, the question asked by the Senator is perfectly plain and obvious. It is approached by a somewhat circuitous route and under several subheads, but he has managed to interweave—I believe that is the treaty word used—or "intertwine" into it his usual enconium upon all branches of the administration and its superwisdom and good intentions.

Mr. President, the administration, until its diplomatic head got hold of this matter, which was of great importance to the country, was doing its duty to the American people, and in the Department of Commerce the duty was performed, and it had the information, and it should have been sent where it pleased; but when our partner in the treaty-making business, our senior and guiding and predominant, not to say exclusive—I will not say silent or wicked, but exclusive—partner got on the trail and the minute he found that there was some information that would throw light upon this benevolent assimilation of the domain of our fellow democrats, the Chinese, he immediately sent to the Department of Commerce and removed that report, and it is now under lock and key. How much vigilance that indicates in a desire to inform the Senate and the country of the facts in the case I do not know.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not true that the suppression of the report is directly in the interest of Japan?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the report contains what I suspect it contains, the effect of its suppression is in the interests of Japan. But, as I said, Mr. President, I have no knowledge of what it contains except what two gentlemen who have read it have told me, and, necessarily, their verbal report of what a whole written report contains must be very lacking in detail and must be in general terms; but the fact remains, nevertheless, and that is all I care to call attention to—and I prefaced my remarks by saying we were helpless in the matter—that the State Department of this country, upon its own judgment and the declaration that it does not approve the tendency of the report, declines to give it to the Senate.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. May I remind the Senator from Connecticut that the relations which the railroads of Shantung bear to the railways of China, both those that are now constructed and those that are in contemplation, and more particularly to northern China and to the far east of China, the old eastern camel route, now about to be occupied by railroads, are not matters for speculation. It has passed beyond the realm of speculation. Dr. Ferguson, as the Senator will recall when I mention it, the American adviser of the Chinese Government, testified before the Committee on Foreign Relations specifically to that effect, that it was the key to the heart of existing and potential transportation systems of China.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is true. I do not suppose many Senators have read the testimony that was taken by the Committee on Foreign Relations. A good many of the minority Members of the Senate thought it was all foolishness to have any testimony at all, stating to the committee that everybody had made up his mind about the treaty and there was no use to take any testimony or to get any information. They were all ready to swallow it just as it is and they do not want to know what it is. As Mr. Lansing said to Mr. Bullitt, if the country only knew what was in it and what it "let them in for," it would be repudiated and spewed out of the mouth of the country. But knowing that, the demand is that we should swallow it without knowing what is in it, and anything that would tend to make anybody hesitate or want to amend it or vote against it should be kept from him. Let not the light shine before men.

Under this administration, when nothing is to be done in the dark or in corners, when diplomacy is to be open, when there is to be no more secrecy, such carryings-on as this are simply disgusting, and the American people would say so if they knew the truth. Some deluded people, under the lead of certain newspapers who do not know what the treaty means, are urging us to stop debating it and abandon any attempt to find out what it means.

I do not believe that constitutional government in a free democracy has arrived at that stage of degradation where the public men of this country, having sworn a solemn oath to preserve and defend the Constitution, simply because of fright about their political positions or what may happen to them at the polls, are going to surrender to this unreasonable demand. I for one will not, and I think there are others.

But, Mr. President, I said that this proceeding is merely a part, and a characteristic part, of the conduct of this administration in trying to force this treaty through the Senate without giving the Senate the necessary light and information that it and the country are entitled to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], one of which I do not think should go entirely unchallenged. If I understood the Senator, he imputed the withholding of this document to be in the interest of Japan.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not intend to make any such imputation; far from it.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, I have nothing to say. I misunderstood the Senator, and I am very glad that I did.

CONTROL OF FOOD PRODUCTS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 8624, which is known as the food-control and rent bill. There are only two or three important amendments which have been made by the conferees to the bill, which I shall ask the Secretary to read if unanimous consent is given for the consideration of the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8624) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel,' approved August 10, 1917."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to say that the Senate adopted a conference report on this bill a few days ago and there have been only three changes from the conference report as the Senate then adopted it, which enabled the House conferees to carry the conference report to the House.

Mr. GRONNA. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not see the relevancy of the announcement of the Senator from Georgia that there are only three changes in the conference report. One change, as we all know, might totally alter the character of the report which the Senate heretofore considered. I merely point that out to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is true; but the Senator from Arkansas will find that the three changes are very minor ones.

Mr. ROBINSON. They are unimportant?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, I do not say that they are unimportant. I can state to the Senate in a moment what they are.

The original conference report continued the operation of the bill for three years, and we have now reduced it to two years. The original bill had rather broad language about land, but it has been so changed as to cover only buildings and lands appurtenant thereto. The other change, as I recall, is that where anyone desires on a small piece of property with some improvements on it afterwards to put thereon much larger improvements for rental purposes, it may be done.

I mentioned that there were only three changes, and I called the attention of the Senate to that fact, thinking that it would help in the consideration of the report. I think the three changes are those which I have stated.

Mr. ROBINSON. The last statement of the Senator from Georgia is illuminating.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee making the report whether any authority is given to the commission to dictate as to the repairs and improvements that shall be made and as to the character of service furnished in connection with houses and apartments rented in the District of Columbia?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Utah that that part of the bill has not been changed from the original text.

Mr. SMOOT. I received a letter only about 20 minutes ago in which it is stated that additional authority to dictate as to repairs, improvements, and so forth, has been granted to this rent commission.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will allow me, I will state briefly what the changes are. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has just stated the first change which was made by the conference committee, which is found on page 5 of the original bill. If the Senator from Utah has the bill before him, he will see that in the original bill it was provided that "the term 'rental property' means any land or building or part thereof." The conferees struck out the two words "land or," and after the word "thereof," in line 5, inserted the words "or land appurtenant thereto."

Mr. SMOOT. The bill which I have in my hand, I will say to the Senator, is not the same bill as that from which he is reading.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator probably has not the last print of the bill. If the Senator will get to-day's RECORD, he will find the report there printed. There was some objection to including vacant land. For that reason the words "lands or" were stricken out and the language which I have just read was substituted.

The next change will be found on page 6, line 22, of the bill, section 102, where it was provided that the term of each commissioner shall be three years. The word "three" has been stricken out and the word "two" inserted; in other words, the term of the commissioners is reduced to two years. I might say that this law will also expire in two years instead of three, as provided by the bill which passed the Senate about a week ago.

The next change will be found on page 19 of the bill, in lines 3 and 4, in section 117. After the word "file" the words "upon the request of the commission" have been stricken out, so that the language now reads:

> The owner of an hotel or apartment shall file with the commission plans and other data in such detail as the commission requires—

Simply making it mandatory upon the owner to file such plans and data.

Then, in the next sentence the word "may" has been stricken out and the word "shall" substituted.

Mr. HARRISON. In what section?

Mr. GRONNA. That is in the same section, in line 9. On page 21, in line 12, section 122, the words to which I referred a moment ago relating to the term of three years have been stricken out and the word "two" substituted in place of "three," so that it reads:

> It is also declared that this title shall be considered temporary legislation, and that it shall terminate on the expiration of two years from the date of the passage of this act unless sooner repealed.

Those are all the changes made.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. Was any change made touching the services to be rendered by the assessor of the District in connection with the proceedings of the commission?

Mr. GRONNA. None whatever.

Mr. HARRISON. It was pointed out when the report was previously considered by the Senate that it would probably take all of his time if the assessor were required to attend all of the meetings of the commission, and I thought perhaps the conferees changed the wording of that provision because of the criticism then made.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that there was no objection to that provision on the part of any Member of the House, and it was not discussed, so far as I remember.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the bill gives the assessor $1,000 per annum extra pay in connection with his services to the commission.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes. He will receive under this bill $1,000 extra pay per annum. He is receiving now from the District, $3,500, and if this bill is enacted into law he will receive $4,500.

Mr. SMOOT. I was in hope the conferees would strike that provision from the bill. It is a bad precedent and never ought to be established by Congress; in fact, I think the assessor of the District is receiving now all that the work required of him entitles him to receive.

I wish to ask the Senator another question. Is it true that a tenant can make up his mind that he wants certain repairs, improvements, or services, reasonable or unreasonable, in the house or apartment where he dwells and demand that the landlord make such repairs and improvements, and if he refuses immediately appeal to the commission, which is given authority to order the improvements or repairs to be made or services to be furnished?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have discussed this bill with a number of men who are acknowledged to be very good lawyers, and they concur with me that there is no such provision in the bill. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], however, can, of course, answer the question of the Senator from Utah better than I can.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply asked the question because I have not had time this morning to go into the matter, and I have received a criticism on that score.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have not studied the rent provisions of the bill with great care; I have only given my attention to certain points which were at issue in the conference and helped to work them out. I do not think there is anything like that suggested by the Senator from Utah in the bill, but I do not know.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me read from a letter I received a few moments ago, before the conference report was laid before the Senate, from an attorney interested in this question. He says:

> This legislation would be sufficiently annoying if the acts of the proposed rent commission were limited to the fixing of rental values, but when it is clothed with the additional authority to dictate repairs, improvement, service—

And so forth, it goes beyond what he considers wise, and he contends that such legislation should not be enacted by Congress. Really, I think if the bill goes that far it goes too far.

Mr. GRONNA. Let me say to the Senator from Utah that in the first place the commission is not only authorized but directed to fix a standard form of lease.

Mr. SMOOT. That is right; and I have no objection to that.

Mr. GRONNA. The only thing the lessee can do, in case he has a complaint and there is a dispute about it, is to make his complaint to the commission.

Mr. SMOOT. But has the commission authority to dictate or direct what repairs and improvements shall be made and what service shall be accorded?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think the bill contemplates that when the commission fixes a rate of rental the landlord shall not lower the character of service rendered and undertake to destroy the effect of the act of the commission by suspending the service. The bill does permit an appeal to the commission by way of complaint if the service becomes unreasonable or improper.

Mr. SMOOT. That is right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is as far as it goes.

Mr. SMOOT. However, the attorney who writes me says that the commission has power to dictate as to repairs and improvements.

Mr. GRONNA. It has not.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a reason, as the Senator from Georgia says, why provision should be made as to the service to be furnished; the service rendered at the time the party rents ought to be maintained; and I think there ought to be an appeal where the service is in any way hampered or decreased; but the attorney tells me that they have the power and authority to say as to what repairs and what improvements shall be made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does he call attention to the part of the bill which, he says, makes such a provision?

Mr. SMOOT. No; he does not. It was sent to me in a hurry.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I think the Senator has reference to section 106; and I shall be glad to read that section, or the Senator can refer to it himself.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can read it now, and I will follow this and see if it is the same.

Mr. GRONNA. Section 106 reads as follows:

> For the purposes of this title it is declared that all (a) rental property and (b) apartments and hotels are affected with a public interest, and that all rents and charges therefor, all service in connection therewith, and all other terms and conditions of the use or occupancy thereof, shall be fair and reasonable; and any unreasonable or unfair provision of a lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of such rental property, apartment, or hotel with respect to such rents, charges, service, terms, or conditions is hereby declared to be contrary to public policy.

In every instance, as the Senator from Georgia has stated, the words "fair and reasonable" are used; and I can not understand how any lawyer can put such a construction upon that language.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, this is the only language on that subject:

> If the commission determines that such rents, charges, service, or other terms or conditions are unfair or unreasonable, it shall determine and fix such fair and reasonable rent or charges therefor, and fair and reasonable service, terms, and conditions of use or occupancy.

That is the language.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as to the rents.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is the only language that has been brought to my attention in the bill. As I stated before, I did not expect to be a member of the conference committee, and I was not in the Senate Chamber when this provision was added; but I served and helped them with those points that were in dispute.

Mr. SMOOT. As I have not had time to read the bill myself, I am not prepared to discuss the situation, and having received this letter just a few moments ago I shall not object to the adoption of the report; but I want to say right now that if this bill grants to this commission authority to dictate at any time what improvements shall be made, or what repairs of any sort shall be made, I think it is a very dangerous piece of legislation. I am going to take the word of the two Senators here that such a provision is not found in the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Let me say to the Senator that it is not found in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will say that if it is in the bill I have not had it called to my attention.

Mr. GRONNA. I simply want to say that I can assure the Senator from Utah, and every other Senator here, that no such provision as the Senator from Utah has referred to is in the bill, and no such construction can be placed upon the language used in the bill.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota if the bill relates only to dwellings and hotels and apartments?

Mr. GRONNA. It also relates to hotels.

Mr. PHELAN. Does it relate to stores and warehouses?

Mr. GRONNA. I presume it takes in all property. It says, "all rental property." There is no change in the bill at this time from the form in which it was passed by the Senate. In order to be accurate, I want to say to the Senate that I overlooked one amendment on page 13, which I believe every Senator here would be glad to agree to.

Mr. THOMAS. In what section?

Mr. GRONNA. Section 109, on line 23 of the bill, after the word "dependents." This relates to the provision as to how the owner of property can get his own property back if he wants it for his own use. That is amplified in this language after the word "dependents":

> Or for the purpose of immediate construction of new rental property of a character approved by the commission.

The Senator will understand that that simply applies to cases where a person wants to improve his property, and it may be in the possession of some one else, and the person could not otherwise get his property to make those improvements.

Mr. SMOOT. Does that mean that if an owner desired to tear down an old building, and erect a new one, he would have the authority to do it?

Mr. GRONNA. No; it does not go as far as that. It simply means if he wants to enlarge it. I will say to the Senator that this is in the interest of the property owners, and has been requested by them.

Mr. SMOOT. I think they should not have any more right than the party that rents.

Mr. GRONNA. That has been carefully considered by the House and by the conferees.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am advised that this bill has been reported by the Agricultural Committee. Few, if any, of the Senators have had an opportunity to examine its provisions. I have hurriedly read two or three sections of the bill since the chairman of the committee asked for the consideration of the report.

Let me say in passing that it is somewhat strange that a bill of this character should be referred to the Committee on Agriculture. It would seem under the rules of the Senate that the District of Columbia Committee should have considered the measure, or that it should have been referred to the Judiciary Committee. It involves important legal and constitutional questions which call for its consideration by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. There is no explanation for the unprecedented course of having the Committee on Agriculture consider the measure containing such unusual and important provisions. The only explanation which can be suggested, and it does not explain, is that during the war, as a war measure, a food-control law was enacted. That measure when introduced in the Senate went to the Committee on Agriculture. Now that the war is over and the food-control bill is repealed, if not in terms, certainly by the logic of events, it is proposed to graft upon it a rent provision dealing with the District of Columbia. Of course, such a procedure is illogical if not preposterous. This measure deals with property rights within the District of Columbia. It affects contracts, sets up an extra judicial body, and attempts to clothe it with more or less judicial authority and power; it interferes with the ownership of private persons in their property; it attempts to deprive persons who may have a controversy of the right to have the same heard by a court and issues of fact determined by juries. Moreover, it attacks economic principles; it interferes with the law of supply and demand, and proposes a hateful system of governmental inquisition and control that will, I believe, defeat the purpose of the authors of the bill.

Mr. President, I join in the strictures and criticisms that have so often been made in this Chamber of many of the owners of real estate who have leased the same during the past two or three years. I have no doubt but what many landlords have been oppressive and brutal in their treatment of tenants and have exacted rental charges that were exorbitant if not extortionate. My information is, however, that many of the complaints made because of extortionate charges do not lie at the door of the owners of the properties but should fall upon the heads of tenants who sublet the demised premises without the consent of their landlords. Cases have been brought to my attention where tenants have sublet the rooms and buildings which they have leased at a fair figure for two, three, and four times as much. My attention was called to one instance where a tenant who paid $50 per month for an apartment rented it for $200 per month.

Unquestionaby the same propensity to profiteer which was exhibited in so many parts of our country during the war found expression in the city of Washington. It has seemed to me that landlords, tenants who sublet, merchants—indeed, people in most of the activities of life within the District—seemed determined to gouge and rob and exploit to the limit while the war was on, and that the same devouring appetite abides with many of them now that the war is ended. There is a disposition, apparently well nigh universal in our land, to make illegitimate profit. This is not confined to any one class or any one line of business. Everybody charges all that the traffic will bear. Indeed, many are pressing the limit and are bringing disaster to our social and economic system. It is unfortunate that the cupidity of the people lead so many into devious paths and to oppressive and indefensible conduct. Landlords in the District of Columbia, I fancy, are no worse than those to be found in other parts of our country. I have read numerous accounts of the alleged extortionate demands of landlords in many cities of the United States. Only recently I read in a number of New York papers accounts of evictions there of helpless tenants. Many of them, though the rents were greatly increased, would have been willing to pay the demands, heavy and severe as they were in many instances, but their pleas for an extension of their leases, or for an opportunity to again lease the premises, were denied. It appears that the demands for houses, for apartments, and places of abode are so numerous that it has been impossible to supply them. I am told that there are thousands of persons unable to obtain suitable residences or apartments within the city of New York, and also in other large industrial cities of the United States. Of course, these great demands lead to an increase in the rent charges.

For a number of years we have witnessed a growing tendency upon the part of the people living in rural communities and upon the farms to move to the large centers of population. Millions of people have left the farms and the country and the small towns and cities and established themselves in the large cities of our land. Such a condition is not only to be regretted, but it occasions alarm upon the part of those who give attention to social problems and are interested in the welfare of the people of our country. It is unfortunate that there should be such a migration to the industrial centers. It has been written by publicists and asserted by historians, statesmen, and political writers that the decay of nations begins when the farms and fields and the rural sections are abandoned and the great centers of population draw the people within their borders.

There should be a nation-wide campaign inaugurated to not only keep people who are now living within the country upon their farms and in the towns and villages, but to induce the decentralization of population and the return to the country of millions who have taken up their residence within the cities. I may say in passing that it is unfortunate for the country that so many of the manufacturing plants that have been erected were built either within the large cities or in close proximity to the same. I know the many arguments advanced in support of this course, and there is no doubt but what many of them are incontrovertible; but I believe that a movement should be made to induce business men and corporations to erect their plants in rural sections. The railroads of our country are so constructed as to permit this plan, and I am sure that if this plan were adopted, though it would result in many disadvantages to the owners of the plants, it would bring compensations and benefits that in the end would prove highly advantageous.

Mr. President, it is well known that by reason of the war there has been a complete cessation of building during the past two or three years. Four or five millions of men were taken from gainful pursuits, from the field, and farm, and shop, and mill, and mine, and placed in the ranks of the Army and the Navy. Millions of others were drawn from their usual avocations and placed in plants devoted to producing the munitions of war and the numerous articles which the war required. The thousands and tens of thousands of individuals who had been engaged in building operations were thus taken from their usual employment. Senators will also remember that every possible effort was made by the Government to restrict work in those fields of employment and industry that did not contribute directly to the winning of the war. The Government denied many corporations the right to sell bonds and securities for the purpose of obtaining funds to erect plants and buildings and to conduct their business operations. School districts were refused permission to issue and sell securities for the purpose of erecting schoolhouses, and the erection of public buildings was discouraged and the construction of buildings for private purposes was practically prohibited, if not by law, certainly by the pressure of the Government and the prevailing inexorable conditions. It will readily be perceived that the suspension of building operations for a number of years would result in a scarcity of buildings for housing purposes. The population of the United States is increasing very rapidly. Perhaps during the past three years the increase has been several millions. To provide homes for the increased population calls for the erection of thousands of homes and apartment houses.

The war also brought to certain cities and certain industrial centers thousands and hundreds of thousands of people. I am advised that in some parts of the United States, particularly those sections from which heavy drains of soldiers and employees for war activities were made during the war, real estate is less valuable now than before the war. Buildings are cheap and many houses are vacant; but, of course, in the large cities, particularly those which have been the scenes of war activities, the increase in population has been enormous and the housing facilities have been, and still are, wholly inadequate.

As I have stated, there is no question but what conditions in Washington are very unsatisfactory. Many thousands of persons were brought to Washington by reason of the war. This city seemed to be not only the center of the United States but, indeed, the pivotal point of the world during the last year and a half or two years of the war. The activities of the Government called for thousands and tens of thousands of additional employees. So many individuals coming here for various reasons and purposes, it was bound to result in congestion and inconvenience and privation upon the part of large numbers. And, as stated, the practical prohibition of building during the war added to the seriousness of the situation. Everyone sympa-thizes with those who have suffered inconveniences and privations, and the unfortunate condition existing is to be deplored. But the important question is, How best can the situation be remedied? It is manifest that what is needed more than anything else in this city is an increase in the number of houses and apartments for the accommodation of the people who seek homes in Washington. If rents are too high, and all concede that they are, there is no question but what there will be a reduction if additional residences are erected.

Scarcity always produces an increase in prices. A shortage of crops is invariably attended with a rise in crop prices. If the farmers know that the wheat crop of the coming year will be short, they plant more wheat and thus increase production. The increased production results in a fall in wheat prices. During the war every effort was made to stimulate production, particularly in food products. It was realized that any attempt to impose restrictions and limitations upon the agriculturists and the stock growers would curtail production. It was felt by many that it was necessary to fix a minimum price for wheat in order to increase production.

If the Government had attempted to regulate the prices of wheat and fix commissions and restrain and restrict the planting and the selling and had surrounded the production of wheat with all sorts of rules and regulations, the farmers would have failed to plant, and want and privation would have come not only to the people of our own country, but to the people of Europe. There were some foolish people who wanted during the war to put the strong hand of the Government upon all business. They seemed to entertain the view that by regulation and governmental supervision, by the creation of boards and commissions and governmental agencies to control and direct and regulate business, production would be increased. The unsoundness of this position is revealed by a moment's reflection, and history is replete with the ignoble and inglorious failures which have attended the enforcement of such a policy.

I repeat that what is needed in the District of Columbia is the erection of more buildings. More buildings for rent and more buildings for sale. There is capital in the United States for investment in legitimate enterprises. Wherever there is a field that promises a suitable reward there will be found an investor ready for the undertaking. Where there are so many promising fields for investment as exist to-day, those who have funds for investment purposes will select those avenues which promise the safest and surest returns. Men who have trust funds to handle will not invest them where they are sure to encounter embarrassments and annoyances, impediments and threatening and assured dangers. It must not be forgotten that much of the money for investment comes from the people. There are hundreds of thousands and, indeed, millions who have small savings deposited in banks and trust companies and insurance companies. The trustees and directors of these corporations are charged with the responsibility of making safe and sound investments. The fiduciary relations existing demand the utmost care and caution upon their part in handling the moneys of other persons. And individuals whose fortunes are so great as to enable them to invest large sums, prompted by a spirit of prudence and proper caution, will seek those fields for investment that will give them a fair return and assure them a reasonable degree of safety.

Corporations or individuals who may be ready to invest money in building operations within the city, before so doing will examine the laws and regulations governing the District. They will inquire as to the taxes laid upon property, and generally familiarize themselves with all conditions that would affect directly or indirectly any investment made. If laws are enacted that hamper and restrict and subject the owners of buildings to annoyances, limitations, and oppressive control it is manifest that prospective investors will place their funds in industrial stocks or in some other field of enterprise. Senators will also keep in mind the fact that in many parts of our country the returns upon real estate have not been fair or satisfactory. In many cities, those which have witnessed a steady and constant growth, real estate investments have proven of the highest value, but in many parts of our country prices of real estate have been uncertain and fluctuating, and the returns upon the investments have proven very disappointing. I know of individuals who have sold houses which they have erected for rent at figures far below the cost price, and I know that in many sections large property owners have received no returns for years, though their buildings were rented the greater part of the time. The heavy expenses of municipalities which are constantly increasing have materially affected the rental values of real estate. I was reading a few days ago that many of the choicest real estate holdings in the city of New York were being sold by the owners because of the high taxes which they were compelled to pay and the very small returns which the properties yielded.

This bill is somewhat along the lines of a number of measures the enactment of which was sought during the war, and as war measures. I am afraid that too many people have drifted into the habit of seeking legislation whenever evil, real or fancied, is found to exist among the people. There are also some people so foolish as to believe that whenever the Government lays its hand upon an enterprise or a business or a pursuit that prosperity and benefit and advantage immediately ensue.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. This bill, as it has been perfected by the conferees, provides for a reasonable return on the property referred to. Of course, if there are men who are not content with a reasonable return, necessarily, perhaps, they will be deterred in their speculative operations. But that is not the immediate question. The immediate question is this: Shall we allow these tenants to be put out of their homes or pay a double rental? That is the immediate proposition that is before the Senate. What shall we do to avoid that?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I know that during the past two years the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has very earnestly, and, I think, conscientiously and patriotically, given consideration to this question, and I have no doubt that in his judgment this is a measure that will tend to relieve the situation here, and in the end produce beneficent results. But I think he is mistaken. I do not agree with his premises nor do I agree with his conclusions.

I do not concede that any considerable number of tenants will be compelled to pay double rental, nor do I believe that there will be any general eviction of tenants. It has been charged, and I think there is some truth in the charge, that there are some tenants who obtained leases some time ago who have refused to pay an additional rent, though conditions warranted an increase. There is no question but what conditions justify higher rentals in Washington than what were demanded and paid three or four years ago. I do not think that tenants will be treated any differently here than they will be treated by landlords elsewhere. But concede that there will be some cases of injustice and that some landlords will take advantage of the necessities of their tenants and exact exorbitant rents, does this bill provide that form of relief that in the end will prove beneficial to the entire people? It is easy, when we come to legislate, to call attention to some concrete case of injustice as an excuse or pretext to warrant drastic, imprudent, and dangerous legislation. I think an examination of many of the unwise statutes which have been passed by legislative bodies will reveal that they were enacted because of the resentment experienced by the legislators at the recital of some great act of injustice. But it is dangerous to legislate for general purposes and for all classes and for long periods of time having in view some local grievance or evil and some specific or concrete case where a great injustice has been done.

There is an evil here. How can it best be cured? It is admitted that the evil would be abated if we had more houses within the District. That would be not a palliative only but a permanent cure for the evil. The Senator from Ohio has stated that one of the questions is whether the landlords are willing to be satisfied with a fair return upon the money invested. On its face the statement of the Senator seems to justify this legislation. Everyone should be satisfied if he can receive a legitimate and fair profit upon an investment which he makes. But what is a legitimate and a fair profit? Men will differ, and vitally differ, upon this question. A man invests in an uncertain oil property or a mining claim where he takes great chances. No one would say that a return of 5 or 6 per cent upon the money invested was fair. I think it can truthfully be said that for every mine discovered nine hundred and ninety-nine efforts fail. Indeed, it has been said for every dollar taken from the mines of the United States two dollars have been expended. Hundreds and thousands of men have given their lives and their fortunes in attempts to obtain a producing and profitable mine and their efforts have been in vain.

Some cities are so situated and their resources are of such a nature as to insure the constant growth and certainty of occupancy of all buildings erected. A reasonable return on an investment in a city of that character necessarily would be less than the return yielded upon real estate in a city which suffered many vicissitudes, and whose geographical and industrial environment was such as to prophesy uncertainty as to its future growth and development. Not by way of a complete analogy, but rather by way of illustration, let me direct attention to the railroads and the relation of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the same. The presumption is that the Interstate Commerce Commission fixes rates that are fair and reasonable, but we know that many of the railroads in the United States have gone into the hands of receivers, and that so uncertain have been railroad investments and securities that for a number of years it has been impossible to secure any private capital for railroad improvements or the construction of new lines of railroad. Men will hesitate to invest money in enterprises under the control of boards and bureaus and governmental agencies and officials, and the bureaucratic flunkies and functionaries who are found in most forms of government—municipal, State, or national. The controlling hand of the Government does not encourage development and progress upon the part of investors, but it is repressive, deadening, and destructive. It kills initiative, hampers enterprise, and prevents development. In many investments there is more or less of a risk and gamble, and there must be a promise of adequate returns to compensate for the risks that are to be incurred. Moreover, persons who are satisfied with a reasonable return and want no more than a reasonable return upon their investments, will hesitate to expend their capital if they were to be subject to the inquisitorial examination and control and supervision of Government functionaries.

As I have stated, there are so many other avenues for investment which promise a fair return thereon that individuals will hesitate to devote their savings to enterprises which call for governmental supervision and control.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator assumes by his argument that the trouble lies in the fact that we have not enough buildings to take care of the many clerks whom we have in the Government departments to-day.

Mr. KING. That is the principal reason for this bill, as I understand the committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. And therefore we should encourage building.

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does not the Senator agree with me that we have twice as many clerks in the departments as we ought to have, and could we not remedy the situation by discharging about half of them? Then there would be plenty of room, and then the rents would necessarily come down.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I agree with the statement made by the Senator. I have repeatedly stated upon the floor of the Senate that the army of employees in the Federal service here and elsewhere is entirely too great. Yesterday in the course of some remarks which I delivered I stated in substance that Congress had failed to do its duty in making such large appropriations for the compensation of needless employees and in responding to the demands made by executive departments to appropriate tens of millions of dollars to cover deficits created by such departments. Without desiring to be critical, I submit that if the Appropriations Committee—and I think the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is a member of that committee—would serve notice upon the departments and governmental agencies that they must discharge thousands of unnecessary employees now found in the Government they would be performing a public service and doing much toward ameliorating the condition which it is claimed this bill is calculated to do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does it not occur to the Senator that we probably have buildings enough to house all the employees we ought to have, but while they are here we ought to see that they are not gouged in the charges?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I have stated, I have no doubt but what employees of the Government, as well as many others who are residing temporarily in the District, are overcharged by those from whom they are renting, but it is a question not free from complications when attempts are made to relieve the lessees from charges, which the Senator claims, subjects them to the process of being "gouged." I have been endeavoring to show that this legislation does not strike at the root of the evil and that it is not calculated to remedy the situation. If rents were immediately reduced it would not cure the evil if the population of the District maintains the same level or its numbers are increased. It is not temporary relief that is wanted, but permanent relief. Permanent relief is only obtainable by providing sufficient buildings to meet the requirements of the people. The law of supply and demand operates in the real estate field as well as in other departments of human endeavor. If rents are maintained at an inordinately high standard, additional buildings will be erected to meet the demands of the people. If legislation is enacted which deters the investment of capital, then the permament relief which alone the construction of buildings can effectuate will not be obtained. I repeat, the rental charges are determined by the law of supply and demand.

Of course, if there was any combination upon the part of the owners of buildings to maintain high rentals, or if there were any form of monopoly suggested, I would be in favor of the most drastic legislation to punish those participating in the combination or who were guilty of taking part in the monopolistic scheme. But it has not been suggested that there is a monopoly or a combination, or that any criminal statute is necessary to deal with the existing situation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But realizing that we are going to cut largely this force and send home quite a large part of the present force——

Mr. KING. We will not do that; we have not the courage to do it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. As a result of the efforts of the Senator from Utah and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] property holders would hesitate to erect new buildings.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in my opinion we will not send home any considerable number of the employees of the Government who are here in Washington. No matter how many increases are made in the number of employees because of some exigency, we do not decrease the number when the exigency has passed. It is one of the unpalatable facts that we must admit that Congress does not have the courage to enforce economy in the administration of the affairs of the Government. The demands of executive departments for more bureaus, executive agencies, and employees, no matter how resolutely Congress may set their faces against them, finally are acceded to. The tens of thousands of employees now in Washington, instead of being diminished, will probably be added to. I regret to admit this, but I see no reason to anticipate any different result.

But if it be true, as the Senator has suggested, that a large number of the employees will be separated from the service and returned to their homes, the problem will then be partially solved. If 50,000 of the employees of the Government should leave Washington, unquestionably there would be vacant houses and apartments, and rents would immediately fall.

But as I have stated, Mr. President, capital seeks an outlet. Those who have savings intrusted to their hands for investment are always seeking opportunities to invest such savings in order that the owners may derive suitable returns. If there is a continued demand for buildings for residence purposes in Washington investors will erect the needed buildings. Notwithstanding the high prices of building material and labor, hundreds, if not thousands, of houses are being erected in Brooklyn and in New York and in many other industrial centers of the United States. Buildings are being erected in Washington and efforts are being made by those who have funds for investment to meet the demands of the people for homes and apartments within which to live. What is needed in the District is encouragement to investors. There should be rigid economy in the administration of the affairs of the District. The taxes should be reduced to the minimum, and owners of property should understand that their property and their investments will be reasonably safe and secure. It is not necessary to grant bonuses or hold out inducements of an unnatural character in order to secure development and obtain money for homes.

When there was a demand for railroads and they paid a suitable return capital was always available. There is ample money to develop coal mines, build smelters, construct factories, purchase farms, and build such industrial plants as are essential to supply the wants of the people. But if repressive, inquisitorial, and archaic legislation is enacted, investments cease, the construction of factories and plants and smelters and railroads terminates, and stagnation and hard times ensue. I do not mean to contend that legislation may not be required in many instances to curb combinations of capital and unjust and improper activities upon the part of investors. I am only urging that the rules of common sense and the policies which experience demonstrate to be wise shall be adhered to.

I know that the purposes of the authors of this bill and the committee reporting it are entirely praiseworthy. They perceive an evil and desire its correction. They are advised that employees of the Government and others who come here for legitimate purposes have been robbed and are being robbed now by the rapacity of landlords. It is a fact of which we all have knowledge that some of the hotels in this city are charging extortionate prices, not only for rooms but for meals which they serve. That is not only the case in Washington but in many places throughout the United States. Rapacious, extortionate landlords exist here, and they are found in many places in the United States; but can the evil be corrected by a policy of governmental control of landlords and the owners of real estate?

In my opinion, this measure, as I have stated, may prove to be a palliative, but not a cure.

I would be tempted to vote for this bill notwithstanding some serious objections from a legal and constitutional standpoint if I believed that it would cure the situation and afford more or less of permanent relief to the oppressed tenants and lessees found within the city.

There is no question but what this measure interferes with the right of contract and limits the right of owners to control their own property.

Mr. President, I hastily, as I said, examined one or two of the provisions of the bill. Let me call attention to one provision. Section 106, to which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] referred, provides that—

For the purposes of this title it is declared that all (a) rental property and (b) apartments and hotels are affected with a public interest, and that all rents and charges therefor, all service in connection therewith, and all other terms and conditions of the use or occupancy thereof, shall be fair and reasonable; and any unreasonable or unfair provision of a lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of such rental property, apartment, or hotel with respect to such rents, charges, service, terms, or conditions is hereby declared to be contrary to public policy.

What does that mean? It means that every contract made between the landlord and the tenant, its conditions, its terms, will be subject to revision by the commission created by the bill. If an individual now desired to construct a building for rental purposes within the District, will it be claimed that a provision of this character would not act as a deterrent? He would know that every line of his contract might be the subject of review by this commission. He would know that he might be haled before the commission at any time to defend the contract and its terms and conditions. Obviously a man who was seeking an investment, knowing the peculiarities of human nature, would be very reluctant to spend his money when he might be subjected to harassment and annoyance and lawsuits—because a hearing before the commission is in the form of a lawsuit—to the extent that is permitted and is possible under this bill.

Then:

The commission upon its own initiative may, or upon complaint shall, determine whether the rent, charges, service, or other terms or conditions of a lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of any such rental property, hotel, or apartment are fair and reasonable.

Upon their own initiative the commission may subject to review every contract that is entered into.

I am afraid that there will be great reluctance upon the part of investors to erect buildings for rental purposes if the question of fixing the rent to be charged is to be left to a governmental agency. The experiences of those who deal with executive boards, departments, and agencies is not very satisfactory. The red tape, the heart-breaking delays, the tyrannous and oppressive methods, the supercilious attitude of governmental functionaries—these and many other considerations will act as powerful impediments to extensive and greatly to be desired real estate investments.

Section 113 provides that in a proceeding before the commission it may determine "whether a person has been exposed, directly or indirectly, to any unsafe or insanitary condition or whether the contract imposed upon the tenant any burden, loss, or unusual inconvenience in connection with his use or occupation of such rental property, hotel, or apartment." Then the commission shall have the power "to determine the sum which in its judgment will fairly and reasonably compensate or reimburse the tenant therefor."

By this provision we set up a court and give it the powers of a jury to determine questions of damage and sharply controverted questions of fact. We are creating an extrajudicial body by this provision, and if some individual claims that he has been inconvenienced or injured by his landlord he may file a claim for damages before the commission, and the commission may sit as a jury, assess the damages, and presumably award judgment against the landlord. Where is the right of trial by jury that is guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States? It would appear that not only are the powers of courts of equity conferred upon this commission, but also that they are given all the powers of common-law courts, as well as the power to try disputed questions of fact, as jurors under our form of government are permitted to do.

Hastily glancing at the bill, I find that section 117 provides that the commission "shall prescribe standard forms of leases and other contracts" and "shall require their use by the owner of any property which is leased." I submit that this is a most remarkable provision. The most autocratic government does not deny the right of individuals to make contracts, and it permits contracting parties to prescribe the terms of their contracts. But it appears that that right is denied to the owners of real estate within the District of Columbia. They are not permitted to enter into contracts with individuals respecting their own property, but must employ "standard forms of leases and other contracts," prescribed by the commission. It is a most remarkable suggestion that the right of contract is denied, and that the Government, through an agency created by it, will write the contracts between individuals.

It would seem we have not emerged in the District of Columbia from a status to the level of contract. Such a provision is to me most repugnant, and I am sure will be distasteful to those who have partaken of the spirit of our institutions. The idea of a Government standardizing contracts and standardizing the relations between individuals is to me an absurd and, indeed, a monstrous proposition.

It is easy to declare that private property is affected with a "public interest," but such a legislative declaration, if applied to many forms of property, would prove almost confiscatory.

Senators criticize those who urge the Government to seize the railroads, deprive the owners of the same, and turn them over to employees of the railroads for the purpose of operation. We say that it is economically unsound and politically unwise, if not immoral, to nationalize coal mines and other forms of property, or to subject such property to governmental control. We have insisted that the growth of this Republic and the prosperity of the people have resulted from the application of the principles of certain schools of political economy which recognized the right of individuals to acquire, hold, own, and control property. A proper individualism is essential to the preservation of our Government and the principles of liberty which it represents. Destroy the right of contract, the right of ownership in property, the right of individuals to control and manage and operate their property, and the glory of this Nation will depart. Communism is a deadly and dangerous creed. The socialism of Karl Marx, which finds expression in the Bolshevism of Russia, is destructive of liberty and morals and religion. It develops a brutal, calloused, materialistic people, and if persisted in will culminate in the destruction of those uplifting social forces and moral and religious principles and precepts which are essential to the progress and development of the human race and to the triumph of a splendid civilization.

This legislation will encourage demands for State socialism. It will be regarded as a precedent to invite attacks in municipalities and States upon the right of property and the right to control property and to contract with respect to the same. It may be regarded by socialists as a stepping stone to the control and ownership by the Government of houses for the use of the people.

I can not but believe that the proponents of this measure are making a mistake. They are permitting, in my view, a present evil to obscure their vision and bias their judgment, as a result of which they are proposing a measure the principle of which is condemned by experience, refuted by the principles of political economy, and denied by the letter and spirit of the Constitution of the United States. Those supporting this legislation proceed upon the assumption that the Government can enter into the fields of private endeavor and deal with enterprises and business undertakings and business pursuits that are exclusively within the province of individual effort.

But, as I have stated, and I again repeat, the measure will prove abortive and will fail to realize the expectations of its defenders.

As stated, I have only glanced at one or two sections of the bill, but I am sure a critical examination of it will reveal provisions equally as objectionable as those to which I have alluded. This legislation, in my opinion, is not only crude, but it is an anachronism. It seeks to lay the heavy and clammy hand of bureaucracy upon the people of the District. It does not encourage but will discourage investment. I am afraid that it will lead to further demands for governmental interference with the rights of individuals with respect to the control and development of their own interests and their own property.

We should stand not for socialism but for Americanism. The American people are not communistic or socialistic. They are opposed to Bolshevism. They believe in individual initiative, in self-development, in the right of contract. They have confidence in themselves and in their power to meet the problems of the day and to advance high the standard of freedom and civilization. This is no time to indulge in iconoclastic experiments or to tamper with the foundations of republican institutions. Let us rather encourage enterprise, remove impediments and restrictions in the way of individual development and progress, and give to every man under the flag a free and equal opportunity to work out his political and industrial salvation. If free opportunity is denied by combinations, by monopolies, or capitalistic combinations, the law should be rigorously applied and punishment speedily administered. But this Republic is dedicated to freedom—freedom of thought, freedom of speech, freedom of religious views, freedom to engage in callings and pursuits which accord with individual preference. In this hour it is important that the landmarks erected by the fathers should not be forgotten, and the principles underlying this Republic should not be effaced from the hearts of the people.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the conference report be agreed to?

The report was agreed to.

INCREASED PAY OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up House joint resolution 151.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 151) to provide additional compensation for employees of the Postal Service and making an appropriation therefor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to the amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not care to delay the passage of the joint resolution. It has already been delayed too long. I think there is much merit in the proposition of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], but, as I said before, the committee have tried to consider the whole question upon the lowest basis that seemed to be consistent with the good of the service at this time. However, for the purpose of getting the joint resolution into conference, I shall not ask for any record vote on the amendment, but will allow it to be submitted to the action of the Senate, in order that it may be disposed of immediately.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] will be agreed to, as I know that the fourth-class postmasters are generally woefully underpaid. There are other branches of the Post Office Department in which the postal employees are underpaid, and I am therefore in favor of the entire joint resolution. It is not for the good of the public service nor in the interest of sound economy that a great number of our faithful public servants, after long years of service, should not receive proper compensation, and many of the most competent be thus forced to seek other employment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I feel as though I ought to state that the fourth-class postmasters, under the provisions of last year, received $1,200,000 as a gratuity. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi increases the amount, over and above the $1,200,000 additional which is proposed, by something over $700,000.

As I said the other day, I have not any doubt that many fourth-class postmasters are underpaid, though some of them are not underpaid. However, a commission has been appointed for the purpose of determining and classifying these salaries, and the committee believes it has provided a sufficient amount to continue these offices for the remainder of this year and until the report of the commission is presented.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Passing from that a moment, would it interrupt the Senator if I asked him what pay has been fixed for messengers around the post offices?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certain messengers who are receiving a salary of $1,000 or more we have increased the same as we have the clerks, but in other cases where they are receiving but $840 and are not in the classified service and are not to be promoted, we make their salaries $1,000 instead of $840.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I really feel that their increase is, perhaps, more than it ought to be compared to the employees occupying more responsible positions.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The class of which I am speaking are only increased $160; that is, their salary is raised from $840 to $1,000, and I think $1,000 is as little as we should pay them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The work of a messenger, however, is not of the same class as the work of the other employees.

Mr. TOWNSEND. And we have not put them in the same class.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be adopted. The chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads stated in the opening discussion of this question that the theory of the joint resolution was to allow a greater percentage of increase to the employees of the Postal Service who receive the smaller salaries than to those who receive the larger salaries. If the provisions of the joint resolution are worked out on that theory, this amendment should be adopted. There are employees getting $1,000 a year or $1,200 a year who are receiving 15 per cent and in some instances more than 20 per cent increase. It does seem to me, therefore, that it is all wrong, inasmuch as other employees are receiving a larger increase, that fourth-class postmasters who are receiving only from $200 to $999 a year should be allowed but a 10 per cent increase.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to ask the Senator from Mississippi is he has modified his amendment so as to allow a postmaster receiving less than $500 a 20 per cent increase?

Mr. HARRISON. No. I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that I feel that in conference this matter can be worked out on such a basis that the fourth-class postmaster who receives less than $500 may be allowed an increase of 15 per cent or 20 per cent, as the case may be, and those who receive more than that be allowed probably a little less, and so forth. My amendment, however, increases the 10 per cent to fourth-class postmasters to 15 per cent, which is very small, indeed. In addition to that, my amendment provides:

> And in all cases where the post office is kept in a room or building in which no other business is conducted they shall be allowed a reasonable sum, to be determined by the Postmaster General and not to exceed $50 per quarter, to cover the cost of rent, fuel, and light.

That would not allow any rental charge to the postmasters who, in order to attract customers for their business, use a little side room in their places of business for post-office purposes; but where there is a separate building maintained for the purpose of carrying on the post office, and where necessarily fuel and light must be furnished at times, it is left in the discretion of the Postmaster General to pay such postmasters for that service not in excess of $50 a quarter.

Mr. GRONNA. Would that apply to postmasters receiving up to $1,000 a year?

Mr. HARRISON. That would apply to those receiving up to $999 a year. I think it would apply to all fourth-class postmasters. I hope the amendment will prevail.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask for a division.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the years and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIAL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I inquire if the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio, and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KING (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair for the day with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I understand, however, if he were present he would vote "nay," so I will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. FLETCHER. I inquire whether the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. ELKINS. I have a pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the Senator from New Nexico [Mr. FALL] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I find that I can transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. I make that transfer and vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is necessarily absent. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and, for that reason, withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington (after having voted in the negative). The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. I am paired with that Senator during his absence, but I transfer the pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. WARREN (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. I inquire if he has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. WARREN. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. DIAL. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR];

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN];

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS];

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]; and

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] are detained by illness in their families. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are detained in attendance on a meeting of the Committee on Education and Labor. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] are detained from the Senate on public business.

Mr. GAY. The senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] are detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—28.

Ashurst	Gronna	Norris	Shields
Chamberlain	Harris	Nugent	Smith, Ga.
Dial	Harrison	Page	Spencer
Fletcher	Jones, N. Mex.	Phelan	Sutherland
Gay	Kendrick	Ransdell	Trammell
Gerry	La Follette	Sheppard	Underwood
Gore	McNary	Sherman	Williams

NAYS—23.

Beckham	Henderson	McCumber	Pomerene
Borah	Jones, Wash.	Moses	Stanley
Brandegee	Keyes	Nelson	Townsend
Calder	King	New	Walsh, Mont.
Capper	Lodge	Penrose	Warren
Curtis	McCormick	Poindexter

NOT VOTING—45.

Ball	Hale	Martin	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Harding	Myers	Smoot
Colt	Hitchcock	Newberry	Sterling
Culberson	Johnson, Calif.	Overman	Swanson
Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Thomas
Dillingham	Kellogg	Phipps	Wadsworth
Edge	Kenyon	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	Kirby	Reed	Watson
Fall	Knox	Robinson	Wolcott
Fernald	Lenroot	Simmons
France	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.
Frelinghuysen	McLean	Smith, Md.

So Mr. HARRISON's amendment to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further amendments?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "$150" and insert "$240," so that, if amended, it will read:

Who receive compensation at the rate per annum of * * * $1,300, $1,400, $1,500, or $1,600, to be increased $240.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, this amendment will increase by $90 the amount to be paid the postal employees who are receiving $1,300, $1,400, $1,500, and $1,600. The committee recommends an increase of $150 for men in these grades, and my amendment gives them $240. If this amendment is adopted, I shall offer the same amendment on line 13, which will increase the men getting $1,100 and $1,200 by $240 rather than $200.

I offer this amendment because I am convinced that the sum recommended by the committee is not sufficient. In New York City there are vast numbers of men leaving the service. In fact, we find it impossible to get men to apply for these places. I have in my hand a telegram from the local secretary of the Civil Service Commission in New York. In it he states that at the November examination, in 1913, 2,881 men applied to enter the examination for letter carrier. At the examination in September of this year but 21 applied. This indicates very clearly that private employment offers better opportunities.

Mr. President, the other day when I was in New York a letter carrier came to see me. He was receiving $1,500 per annum, which is the average rate received by the great majority of the clerks and carriers in the Postal Service. This man told me that he had been living in a little house where he paid $30 a month rent. The house had been sold, and he was compelled to move. He had searched the city over, and the very best he could do for a home in which his wife, four children, and himself could live was $55 a month. That left him $840 a year to feed and clothe a family of six. So it seems to me that, with this condition of affairs existing in our cities—and, of course, most of the men of the rates of salary for which I have proposed an increase reside in the cities—we have got to do a little better than the committee has recommended.

Mr. President, much was said yesterday by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] about the wave of profiteering now sweeping the country. I know that many men in every walk of life are guilty of this practice, but who can assert that the men employed in the Postal Service have asked for unusual consideration? The cost of living is to-day at least 125 per cent higher than before the war. The men in the Postal Service have been increased 15 per cent; this bill gives them another 10 per cent, so that their total increase will be 25 per cent. I simply propose to give them an additional 5 per cent. Surely this is not unreasonable. Reference has been made to the fact that men, both in and out of the Government service, are not producing as much as they formerly did. This, however, can not be maintained where the men in the Postal Service are concerned. During and since the war they have rendered patriotic service to their Government, and if we expect them to continue to do so they must be paid accordingly. I sincerely trust that the Senate will agree to this amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I think I have already said enough about this subject to give the Senate a right understanding of the committee's attitude. I have not the exact figures, but I have no doubt that this amendment of the Senator from New York will add at least $7,000,000 to this measure. It comprehends the largest class of employees in the Post Office Department. Now, I do not wish to state that everybody in the service is satisfied with what the Senate committee has proposed. I do know that the representatives of these organizations feel that the Senate committee has done well, and that what we have done will tide the Post Office Department over until we get a hearing on the general proposition of readjusting salaries.

I do not think this amendment is right at this time as an emergency measure. The Senate committee is not prepared to say now what ought to be paid as a just and reasonable salary to these men. We have not attempted to do it. We have not had time to do it. Nobody expected that we would undertake it. What we have done is to obtain the information that we could secure as to what was necessary to maintain the efficiency of the Post Office Department. We believe that what the committee recommends will accomplish that end.

If the Senate desires to increase not only the House provision, which was $150, but that same provision approved by the Senate, $150 additional, by making these higher graded men receive exactly the same increase that the substitutes receive per hour, or the first-year men, where the separations from the service are the greatest, why, it is up to the Senate to decide. I think myself that it is wrong; that it has not been properly understood; and that it ought not to be acted upon without due consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there are two or three amendments which I wish to offer for the purpose of carrying out the intent of the committee.

The Post Office Department reported to us on the classification of the employees. Since that report was made it has suggested and others have suggested some verbal changes.

I ask that on page 3 of the joint resolution, after the word "Ohio" in line 10 there be inserted the words "and employees of the mail-equipment shops." We thought we had covered them, but the question has been raised that possibly we may not have done so unless we put in those words.

I offer that amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. In line 12 on page 3, after "$1,000," I move to insert the words "or less," so as to read: "$1,000 or less, to be increased $240."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ought to say that on line 9, page 3, the word "and" should be stricken out after "substitutes," in view of the other amendment that we put in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Post Office Department suggests another amendment as necessary on page 4. Before the word "who" in line 2 I move to insert the words "and the United States stamped-envelope agency, Dayton, Ohio."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. One of the objects in putting in this amendment is that the provision here for village-delivery carriers seems to have been a hard and fast provision. I relied entirely upon the statement of the Assistant Postmaster General as to what salaries they received. I now find that they receive a different rate of salary, which is less than $1,000, and where they serve only half the time we want to make the same provision apply to them that we apply to rural-delivery carriers who serve only a portion of the time; and this amendment will accomplish that purpose.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] yesterday suggested an amendment. Was that agreed to?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That was adopted at the time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the joint resolution and amendment and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. BANKHEAD conferees on the part of the Senate.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany in open executive session.

The motion was agreed to.

THE INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, yesterday afternoon at the close of the proceedings the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was addressing the Senate on the Shantung amendments. He had not concluded his remarks. He has very graciously yielded to me that I may address the Senate for a little while on the subject of the industrial conference. He will proceed with his address after I have concluded.

In opening the industrial conference on Monday of this week, Secretary of Labor William B. Wilson stated that—

> The right of any man to cease working for another for any reason that is sufficient to himself is the basic element of human liberty. The right of any person to refuse to operate his plant at any time he desires to do so is the exercise of a property right guaranteed by the Constitution. It does not follow that because these rights exist it is necesary to exercise them. They must nevertheless be safeguarded. Having done that, and having devised machinery by which justice can be secured and by which everybody at interest has the opportunity of knowing that justice has been secured, it is not likely that the right to cease work will be exercised by sufficient numbers or the right to cease operating industrial plants will be carried to such an extent as to seriously affect the welfare of the balance of the people.

Covering this same subject, Secretary Wilson, before the governors' and mayors' conference at the White House, in March, said:

> I do not believe that any country owes any man a living, but I do believe that every country owes every man a chance to earn a living.

One may therefore infer that the Secretary of Labor believes that no artifice, restriction, or convention should be placed between a man and his opportunity to engage in work or his right to cease work, or between an employer and his right to employ or cease to employ, and that having insured these rights the Secretary believes that it is not likely that these rights will be exercised by sufficient numbers to affect the welfare of the balance of the people.

Yet during the last six months, largely because of attempts to devise machinery to enforce these rights, work throughout the United States has ceased to such an extent that production has been greatly curtailed and prices have correspondingly increased, and national progress has been toward lower rather than toward higher standards of living, which are the ultimate measures of industrial systems.

As I understand it, this conference was called by the President for the purpose of reaching, if possible, some common ground of agreement and action with regard to the future conduct of industry, to the end that we may obviate the wastefulness caused by the continued interruption of many of our important industries by strikes and lockouts.

It is the earnest hope of thoughtful men that this industrial conference will not fail to make "public welfare" the golden rule of its deliberations, and it is their well-grounded belief that public interest will be served by no temporary expedients for immediate current industrial ills.

Temporary conditions in industry are not the real issues. Temporary remedies may do more harm than good, just as the policy of following the line of least resistence during the war aggravated the industrial controversies we have had since the armistice was signed. Rather than devise passing palliatives and defer the final reckoning it would be prudent, in the opinion of some, to adjourn the conference and permit economic pressure to write its ruthless solution.

This conference should not be viewed by its participants as between "scientificos," exploiters of natural resources and human beings, on the one hand, and I. W. W.'s, Bolshevists, exploiters of the public through organized sabotage and slacking, on the other hand.

In a country where there are more jobs than men and more resources than can be developed there can be no permanent quarrel between labor, the producer of wealth, and the true capitalist, who is the investor in permanent wealth which possesses reproductive power.

In a country where there are more men than jobs there may be some purposefulness in the restriction of output of each man through short hours, closed shop, or otherwise, but in a country such as the United States and at a time such as the present, when there is a crying need for men and output, there can be no sensible reason for the creation of machinery designed to decrease output, whether this machinery be created by the employer, in the form of artifices for hoarding, or the employee, in the form of closed shops, an institution borrowed from foreign parts where men were more numerous than jobs.

The public will have little patience in seeing its interests subordinated and its production held in abeyance while either employer or employee perfects machinery or systems for selfish protection or exploitation. If the spirit is wrong, no amount of machinery can be created to adequately serve public welfare, necessity, and convenience; if the spirit is right, the machinery already in existence can continually be perfected.

We had I. W. W.ism long before any of us heard of Bolshevism. There has been a steady and ominous increase in resentment against fortunes built on real or imaginary privilege, and now it seems that a considerable element in this country points the finger of suspicion toward every business success. Some people appear to believe that bankruptcy is the one trade-mark of honesty and that material success, regardless of the efforts and intelligence behind it, is somewhat criminal.

Of course the former view is as erroneous as the latter. Both are wrong and must be put aside if we are to work out a constructive program. There is good and bad in every human activity. To discover the good qualities in contemporary organized labor and current industrial management, to coordinate and preserve them, while discarding all that is vicious in collective bargaining as now practiced and in private ownership and management now prevailing, is the test of real industrial statesmanship.

A NEW INDUSTRIAL DAY.

If we are facing a new industrial day, we should face it without looking back too much on old prejudices and suspicions if real progress is to be made in this conference, and there must be complete confidence between the industrial factors; there must be cordial relations and a large measure of faith between the conferees, and a readiness to admit past errors and estimate at their real value virtues, past and present.

Not only is this attitude essential to the success of the negotiations between the delegates, but without it there can be no clear diagnosis of the ailments. There should be—the country is expecting it, and has a right to expect it—a clear statement of the issues, a statement of our industrial problem as free from prejudice and passion as is humanly possible. For many years the public has heard so many contentions and arguments colored by the self-interest of those who stated them that there is utmost confusion in public thinking. It is up to the conference to set them right, to tear away the husks and dead leaves and reveal the true nature of the industrial fruit we have been growing in the United States.

If the delegates, regardless of the industrial factors they represent, can not think in terms of common good and public welfare, we need expect nothing permanently helpful from these deliberations. The public good is the key to this situation, and it can not be unlocked by any other key.

The two factors in our industrial life—employer and employee—have been so intent on defending themselves against each other, that both, at times, appear to forget that the cake they bake as factors they must also eat as the public.

Is it not significant that in an era of unprecedented living costs we hear so much about "sharing the profits with labor" and so little about sharing the profits with the public? If there is a profit melon to be cut, why not hand it to the public in the form of reduced prices?

Labor representatives on several occasions recently have insisted that wage increases were necessary to meet the increased cost of living, and that if no curb was put on this latter further wage increases would be necessary. Labor, of course, must have a living wage, but if there are unusual profits to be divided, why not distribute them in the form of lower living costs rather than by handing them out to one of the industrial factors?

Furthermore, the dividing of profits, indeed, giving all present profits to labor, will not decrease the price level or materially benefit labor. Business was conducted at a loss amounting to $630,000,000 by 119,000 corporations, one-third of those reporting to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the year 1917. From profits must be deducted taxes, upkeep of plant, and so forth. Profits must be accumulated, not only for development of plant throughout the United States but also for development of plant in foreign countries. Up to the beginning of the war our accumulated profits had been $6,000,000,000 less than our plant investments in this country. We borrowed this money from abroad, and we can no longer borrow the accumulated profits—that is, capital—from abroad.

Unfortunately we have formed the habit of thinking in the terms of capital and labor. A capitalist is one who invests his time or his energy in the acquisition of commodities which are enduring in value and have a potentiality of production. The wage earner is literally a capitalist if he thus invests his time and money. Those who invest the results of their efforts in consumable goods and in idleness are spendthrifts. Those who fritter away the result of their efforts are inclined, when the time of need arrives, to attempt to extricate themselves from their unfavorable situations by demanding a right to share in the permanent goods of increasing value which have been acquired by their more industrious companions and to call such companions "capitalists."

It is fortunate for the conference, perhaps, that the war has brought out in bold relief many of the causes of industrial infelicity and discord. Higher wages, the curtailment of production, and the interruption of distribution are always factors in higher prices. To-day their influence is more apparent than ever; privilege, always making for the restriction of opportunity, to-day shows up in more vicious colors; the desire for power and the tendency to abuse power once gained, always present in industrial and social groups, to-day is more clearly discernible than ever.

One phase of the conference task is to reestablish the authority of contract; for unless we can find a way to make effective an agreement after it has been entered into, how is any business to proceed to that maximum activity on which the world's welfare depends?

Labor asserts, with some justification, that great iniquities have resulted from modern corporation business. We are so organized in that field that not only labor may be, but also the minority stockholders may be, the victims. One hundred dollars in stock may control a corporation in which millions are involved, and the interests having less than a majority of stock, even though in money they lack by $100 of the majority, have been, are, and can be exploited by the majority interests if the latter see fit to go in for intrigue against the minority interests.

FEDERAL INCORPORATION.

Has the time come when Federal incorporation is the next logical step in industry? Is this not a step, American in its spirit, more effective than Government ownership? Federal incorporation would give us such Government control as would effectively protect both labor and minorities in corporation business, and at the same time would retain the thoroughly American development of private initiative and hustle of private management. To turn the railroads, for example, to the control and operation of labor is to transfer the control and operation from one class of private interests to another, and there is no reason to believe that future ills will not equal if they fail to surpass the past ills. Federal incorporation would give the Government such power as is essential to guaranteeing justice to labor, shipper, passenger, majority and minority stockholder, and at the same time there would be no diminution of incentive in endeavor and efficiency, because private initiative would remain free in its executive and operative capacity.

With the close of the war labor occupied the most favorable moral position it has ever enjoyed.

Since the armistice labor has insisted that it shall retain all the advantages it gained during the war; that there shall be no wage reductions, but that our industrial readjustment should be made on the war wage level. In the first months after the armistice this position was maintained in the face of a prospective oversupply of labor, so threatening that the United States Government, through the Department of Labor and the War Department, under the direction of Col. Arthur Woods, carried on a nation-wide campaign for the reemployment of soldiers and the stimulation of labor-absorbing activities.

PRICES STILL INCREASING.

At the cessation of hostilities prices had risen, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, to 107 per cent above prewar levels. On the early prospects of an abundance of labor and possible overproduction, prices receded by March, 1919, to 98 per cent over the prewar level. Labor, however, was determined to hold the status quo in wages and working conditions, or make them even more favorable. Strikes were of increasing frequency until we are having an unprecedented number of them. Some of these strikes were not so much for the prosperity of the workers, but, in their real effect, strikes against replenishing promptly the national shortage of goods; strikes, therefore, against public welfare and favorable to the maintenance of the high cost of living against which the labor element, and all other elements, have been and are complaining.

These were and are strikes not only for higher wages, but for shorter hours, producing idleness, lack of effort, and reduced output. During the six months succeeding the armistice the production of peace commodities, even with the release of machinery and labor from war production and with the returning soldiers to recruit the force of producers, has been estimated by some authorities as but half the production of peace commodities during the six months preceding the armistice, when our maximum effort was concentrated on war activities.

There are other influences, of course—the Federal Trade Commission asserts one of these is the abuse of storage facilities and possibilities—entering into the increasing costs of living, but labor disturbances, resulting in decreased production, have largely been responsible for sending the price level up again, until to-day it is 128 per cent above the prices current at the beginning of the war, an increase of 30 per cent in six months.

Labor can not escape the responsibility for much of this increase in living costs from 98 per cent in March to 128 per cent in September. The effects of currency inflation and of export business had largely spent themselves by March and can not properly be counted as factors in the increase in living costs from March to September. The lack of production is the major cause, and this has resulted in the main because labor has ceased to produce and has brought its economic power to bear on the solution of what it holds to be a more equitable division of the wealth already extant. While we are quarreling we are consuming, and soon the monkey of contention will have consumed the cheese, and if at last we agree on an equitable division we will find there is no cheese to divide. Everyone in his senses realizes that we should be creating new wealth rather than concerning ourselves with divisions of wealth already created. Whether such division be made through barter, speculation, or wage adjustments, still it is dividing and not creating.

Public welfare clamors for increased production at once; industrial welfare demands a permanent policy of bargaining, so that the minimum of uncertainty as to future production costs can be had.

PUBLIC INTEREST FIRST CONSIDERATION.

The conference can not be a success unless every act is based on consideration of the public interest and industrial stability. The conference can not be a success if one side or the other attends with the idea of getting something for itself rather than contributing something to the common interests and public welfare. The pugilistic attitude demanding this, that, or the other, and threatening to back up the demand with tie-ups, disorders, or revolution leads only to ruin. To make collective bargaining a a camouflage for consolidating the gains of organized labor is to prejudice industrial owners and the general public against such virtues as there may be in collective bargaining. Subterfuge and pretension must be torn aside, deuces called deuces, and spades called spades. May we have a frank statement of purpose from all concerned and compare those purposes and arrive at the inevitable compromise, and, having arrived, establish responsibility on the part of all parties to it; let us raise labor to the same level of responsibility as we hold employers; let us put the public in as the Government on the same plane of responsibility; let us not have labor agreeing and no way of holding it accountable when delinquent in its obligations under the agreement; let us not have the Government agreeing and not there when it comes to shouldering responsibility for its agreement. Let the owning interest be subjected to no greater responsibility, and no less, than devolves on the other two elements.

THE ULTIMATE PURPOSE OF UNIONISM.

The Nation must gradually improve the standards of living. We have gone backward since March in this respect. Labor pays its own wage, and the consequence of what labor as labor does must be borne by labor as the public. The American Federation of Labor, representing the highest development of labor thought and practice, is yet human and makes its mistakes, and must admit them, as must the employing interest admit its mistakes. It is obvious that employees can not go to their employers one at a time and receive the consideration and justice forthcoming when they appear through group representatives. Collective bargaining has its economic virtue, and as such it deserves to prevail as an accepted practice in industry. But if collective bargaining is to be prostituted and used as a weapon for ultimate domination of management, of profits, of political action, and of social conventions, then do we have anything less than a government within a government? Let us know now to what end the union movement travels. Where does it draw the line on its quest of power? Having a unionized nation, what then? Here is the danger which the public intuitively senses. The inescapable logic of nation unionism is an inner government more powerful than the outer or constitutional government.

It may be admitted, perhaps, that properly handled such an inner government might prove a blessing, but we must judge its future on its record to date. Power in unionism finally comes to rest in a few hands; these may count votes unfairly; they might surpass the most corrupt political machine in the manipulation of alien and ignorant workers; and we then have an inner government dominated by a few powerful men without the consent of the constitutional government and with the aid and influence of the alien, and, as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] suggests to me, without the pale of the law.

If the one alternative is such a national unionism, then the open shop is essential to perpetuate our Government on the foundations of its Declaration of Independence and of its Constitution. But, also, this open shop must not in fact be a closed shop; a union man should enjoy the same rights in this shop as a nonunion employee.

If we can have from this conference a clear, honest statement of the actual conditions in industry, the real purposes of the groups which have been in conflict for years, if the public can have an authoritative statement of the industrial situation as it is to-day and as it has developed since the Civil War, the conference will not have labored in vain, but to approach the task as a temporary one requiring temporary treatment surely is to add insult to the injury and increase confusion. It is to lead labor to expect divisions of profits where there are no profits, to expect privilege without responsibility, which eventually leads to disaster; it is to lead the public to expect reductions in prices when there can be no reductions in prices if we are to produce abnormal profits and then divide them between employer and employee; it is to urge our citizens to turn investors without protecting their investment, leaving them to the tender mercies of the wolves which travel in sheep's clothing; it is to work inestimable injury on the legitimate and productive business of the Nation and solve nothing, but only intensify and aggravate the irritations and make the final reckoning more certain and vastly more precarious and menacing.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. The true way in which to meet organized minorities, when they shall attempt to exercise undue control of the Government or of the rights of the people in the Government, is to establish the organized majorities of the country through the ballot box, that the conscience and power and opinion of the men and women of the country can make itself felt in these ways. It is due to the failure of our administrative processes to control monopolies in large degree and our failure to deal with the questions which affect the high cost of living, which unavoidably, because of matters which were within no man's control, recently have gone beyond all bounds, that there has been a growing discontent all over the world, and men have organized and naturally tried to improve their conditions, unmindful to some extent of the interests of the large majority of men who are the great consumers and the great producers; but the great producers and the great consumers ought to have a right to be protected through the organization of the majority, the one great union in this Nation, the union which appears here on this floor by representatives chosen by the people of this country at the ballot box. There is where the people have a right to control, and it is through the representatives on this floor and on the floor of the House of Representatives that the remedy will be largely found for the high cost of living.

Mr. CALDER. I thank the Senator for his comment. There is no question that, in the last analysis, that is the place where the remedy wil be found.

NOT A PARTISAN ISSUE.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Not a partisan issue," relative to the league of nations, appearing in the Columbia Herald, a Democratic daily newspaper of Columbia, Tenn. Columbia is the capital of Maury County, Tenn., a splendid section of the country, beautiful and fertile as any in the world, and inhabited by a population of the most enlightened and broad-minded people in the world. The late Senator Robert L. Taylor well described it as "the dimple of the universe." It is a very able editorial and I think it will be somewhat enlightening to the Senate.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"NOT A PARTISAN ISSUE.

"Nothing could be more unfortunate than that the ratification of the league of nations should be made a party issue. In the past it has been said that the Americans were partisans in their own country but beyond the territorial limits they were simply Americans. This assuredly was the case during the late war, although the President in his appeal for the election of a Democratic Congress appeared to label the war as a Democratic measure. All of us, however, know that such was not the case.

"The ratification of the league of nations covenant is not a personal or a party issue. It is unpatrictic to attempt to make it a partisan matter. Democrats, supporters of President Wilson, ardent patriots during the war, frankly can not 'swallow whole' the entire covenant, because their Americanism is too intense to permit it. That is all. Because a man loves his country better than a political party or places his allegiance to flag above his loyalty to a party leader surely ought not to condemn him before patriotic Americans, however anxious they may be to try the experiment of the league of nations.

"There are Americans who can not, much as they would like to, follow the President when he declares his efforts are being given to put into effect a league of nations that 'will be greater than the Government of the United States.' This language is that of the President. Now, there are Democrats in this country who would never help to establish any government that would be greater than the Government established in Independence Hall, born amid the thunders of Yorktown's guns, and rededicated and reconsecrated to its eternal principles at Gettysburg's sacred shrine. They appreciate all the idealism of the President; they abhor war just as much as he does; they may not always have been 'too proud to fight,' but they are just as peace loving as the Chief Executive; nevertheless, when it comes to any supernation that shall in the slightest degree determine when this Nation should fight or should not fight for principles dearer than life itself, they must be pardoned if they insist upon standing upon the Constitution of the United States and beneath the folds of Old Glory and ask to be excused.

"Some of the most brilliant minds in the world conceived the idea of a league of nations. In truth, the idea is not new. A similar effort was made at Westphalia more than two and a half centuries ago to set up a force to police the world and prevent wars. It failed. President Wilson and those who stand with him are sincere and devoted to a very lofty ideal. They place all humanity above the interests of one country. In their desire to serve mankind they look across boundary lines; they are willing to sail uncharted seas; to place the destiny of their own nation at least partially within the keeping of many nations of many races and tongues. They are moved by high and noble aims. No one can question their sincerity.

"But the advocates of the league and all the ideals for which it stands must concede equal sincerity and honesty to those rather old-fashioned Americans who place the Stars and Stripes above every other flag that ever floated to heaven's breezes; who love country and its institutions better than they do the black man south of the Equator, the yellow man of the East, or the motley peoples of southern Europe and the Balkans. They may not live as high above the clouds as the President, but with their feet firmly planted upon the Constitution of the United States they are thinking more of perpetuating the opportunities which their own Nation affords for their own children and children's children than they are about preserving the territorial integrity of motley nations that were born from the travail of the recent war. The issue of the league covenant should not be and must not be made a partisan one."

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, resumed consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany.

Mr. NORRIS resumed the speech begun by him yesterday. After having spoken for 2 hours and 20 minutes he yielded the floor for the day.

EXECUTIVE SESSION WITH CLOSED DOORS.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business with closed doors.

The motion was agreed to, and the doors were closed. After five minutes spent in executive session with closed doors, the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate, as in legislative session, adjourned until Monday, October 13, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION.

Executive nomination received by the Senate October 11, 1919.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Charles B. Faris, of Missouri, to be United States district judge, eastern district of Missouri, vice David P. Dyer, retired.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate October 11, 1919.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Leslie A. Miller to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Wyoming.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

John W. Bennett to be United States attorney, southern district of Georgia.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Ernest L. Parker to be receiver of public moneys at Lewiston, Idaho.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Ernest E. Reese, to be hydrographic and geodetic engineer in the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, Department of Commerce.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

The following-named second lieutenants to be first lieutenants in the Marine Corps:

Charles A. Wynn,
Thad T. Taylor,
Glenn D. Miller,
Herbert Rosenzweig,
Thomas E. Watson,
Burwell H. Clarke,
Walter G. Sheard,
Paul Brown,
Roger W. Peard,
John D. Nevin,
Peter C. Geyer, jr.,
James E. Davis,
Lloyd L. Leech,
Charles P. Gilchrist,
Joseph E. Brewster,
Raphael Griffin,
Karl I. Buse,
Harold S. Fassett,
Samuel A. Woods, jr.,
George C. Hamner,
James M. Bain,
George B. Reynolds,
James T. Moore, and
Nimmo Old, jr.

The following-named first lieutenants to be captains in the Marine Corps:

Charles A. Wynn,
Thad T. Taylor,
Glenn D. Miller,
Herbert Rosenzweig,
Thomas E. Watson,
Burwell H. Clarke,
Walter G. Sheard,
Paul Brown,
Roger W. Peard,
John D. Nevin,
Peter C. Geyer, jr.,
James E. Davis,
Lloyd L. Leech,
Charles P. Gilchrist,
Joseph E. Brewster,
Raphael Griffin,
Karl I. Buse,
Harold S. Fassett,
Samuel A. Woods, jr.,
George C. Hamner,
James M. Bain,
George B. Reynolds,
James T. Moore, and
Nimmo Old, jr.

The following reserve and warrant officers to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps:

Angus Wilson,
Fred Lueders,
Charles S. Beale,
John F. Duffy,
William R. Perry,
Bert Pearson,
Charles G. Knoechel,
John F. Evans,
Ray W. Jeter,
Louie W. Putnam,
Stephen F. Drew,
Charles F. Finger,
William S. Robinson,
James E. Snow,
Harry Paul,
John W. Hingle,
Augustus Aiken,
Austin G. Rome,
Arthur J. Trask,
Joseph Jackson,
Earl C. Nicholas,

Joseph M. Swinnerton,
Leslie G. Wayt,
Charles A. Smith,
Arcnie Farquharson,
Robert W. Winter,
Max Cox,
Edgar S. Tuttle,
William L. Erdman,
Ernest L. Russell,
William F. Becker,
Charles H. Martin,
Ross L. Iams,
George Nielsen,
Harry E. Leland,
John J. Darlington,
Robert P. Harris,
Frank S. Flack,
Eli Savage,
Frederick D. Harbaugh,
Charles C. Carroll,
Norman Johnston,
Spencer N. Phillips,
William T. Crawford,
Francis Kane,
Edward A. Platt,
Charles Wald,
George S. Furey,
Charles R. Francis, and Edward G. MacFayden.

The following-named second lieutenants to be first lieutenants in the Marine Corps:

Kenneth R. Berkey,
Lindley H. Pryor,
William K. MacNulty,
Ralph W. Luce,
George F. Stockes,
Rowan C. Pearce,
Stanley E. Ridderhof,
Elton C. Hersman,
Charlton P. Lee,
Julian N. Frisbie,
Ervin R. Whitman,
Benjamin W. Atkinson, jr.,
William S. Fellers,
Henning F. Adickes, and Augustus H. Fricke.

POSTMASTER.

KANSAS.

Burton C. Peterson, Lyons.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, October 11, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Infinite Spirit, Father of all souls, for the complete revelation Thou hast made of Thyself in Jesus Christ; for the disclosures Thou hast made in Him of man at his best, by which we understand that the genius of the Christian religion shall never be fulfilled in any man, until he has developed harmoniously and symmetrically all that is purest, noblest, Godlike, in his being; that there is no royal road to perfection, no short cut to heaven.

Teach us therefore patience, diligence, kindness, generosity of soul, until under the dispensation of Thy providence we all come unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; and Thine be the glory forever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the Journal. I understood from the reading that it contains the statement that Mr. WALSH made the point of order against the motion to recommit offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE]. The point of order was made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD]. The Journal should be corrected.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal as corrected will stand as approved.

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask permission of the House to proceed for four or five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

CORRECTION.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may I correct the RECORD first?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. On page 6700, column 2, line 34, the word "must" should be "much." I ask that it be corrected.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I assume it is not at all necessary to call the attention of the House to errors of that sort in the RECORD. They can be corrected simply by calling them to the attention of the clerk in charge of the RECORD, Mr. Andrew W. Smith, in Statuary Hall, and asking him to have the permanent RECORD corrected where it is a matter of misspelling or where a word is not in the proper place.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to the gentleman from Wyoming that I know that that can be done in some instances, but I thought that such matters in the body of the RECORD, matters which come up in debate, where corrections were made concerning the debate, it was necessary for the action of the House to be taken.

Mr. MONDELL. It does not require to be merely a correction of a grammatical error or misspelling or a transposition of a word where the intent is very clear, and where an error has been made for some reason or other.

Mr. BLANTON. I thank the gentleman for the information. Hereafter I shall pursue that suggestion.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Tennessee to proceed for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as it is likely that I shall not be able to read in the five minutes allotted to me certain communications between the Postmaster General and myself, I will ask that they be incorporated in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the communications indicated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, perhaps there is nothing more important to this House than that the statements made on the floor by its Members should be entirely accurate. The dignity of the House, the dignity of the membership, can not be maintained if false and incorrect statements are made on the floor of the House that go finally unchallenged. We speak here under the shield and the protection of the Constitution. No man can be called to answer on the outside for what he says on the inside of this House. Therefore it is the more important that everything that is said about persons who have not seats in this House shall be said accurately and with a view to truth and in the public interest. Otherwise, if that privilege is made the means by which one slanders, traduces, and calumniates another, it is a most foul and infamous degradation of the privileges of the House.

I assume that if any man on the floor of this House makes the statement or draws an inference from facts and afterwards finds the same to be incorrect, his manhood will compel him to rise up on the floor of the House and make the amende honorable. If he makes a statement purely for partisan purposes, regardless of the truth, for the purpose of taking advantage, we can not expect apologies from such because they possess not those instincts that actuate the conduct of gentlemen. So when a man makes a statement of fact here, if he finds it to be erroneous, if he is an honorable man he will retract it. If he still believes, after it has been traversed that he is correct, he will produce the proof to sustain his position. But one of two things can be done. When a man says a thing is true and finds out that he has been misinformed and that it is not true, he must retract it. If he believes it to be true, he must prove it. If he does neither, he must be relegated to that unenviable position where in the judgment of the honorable men of this House he has neither decency, respectability, nor virtue to attend him.

Now, while I make these general remarks, I do not want it to be understood by the House that I am making them applicable to any particular individual in this House. I thus remark because certain things have happened in this House which need correction.

I am going to assume that the gentleman of whom I shall speak a little later is a thoroughly honorable man, and that if he finds that he has been mistaken he will correct his statement, or that if he still believes he is not in error he will furnish proof to sustain his position. If he does neither, he stands subject to the judgment of this House under the rules that I have laid down and to which all must agree.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON. I ask for one minute more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, on the 11th of September a debate occurred in the House in reference to the Newark, N. J., post office and the action of the Postmaster General in attempting to control, as was alleged, the Civil Service Commission in the appointment of an official—a postmaster. This debate is fully set out in the RECORD, and in it the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] charged not only that the post-office inspectors were falsifying records, but he charged the Postmaster General with stating that which was not true in reference to the matter.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I notice that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] is for the moment not on the floor.

Mr. MOON. I am not going to say anything about the gentleman from New Jersey which would reflect on him in the least degree. I do not know whether the gentleman from New Jersey was correct or not in his statements. I want to say, however, that the inferences which he drew from his own statement do not seem to be justified from the statements that he made, and I offer the statement of the Postmaster General and records to show that he is in error.

I addressed a letter to the Postmaster General on this subject, which I will insert in the RECORD at this place, and I have from him a reply to that letter, in which he demonstrates very clearly that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] is thoroughly in error, and that the action taken by the department was upon the recommendation of Republican and not Democratic inspectors, whose action was correct. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], as an honorable man, must apologize or prove his charge.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

The letters referred to are as follows:

COMMITTEE ON THE POST OFFICE AND POST ROADS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., October 9, 1919.

Hon. A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: A few days ago Representative LEHLBACH, of New Jersey, addressed the House in connection with the appointment of presidential postmasters under the Executive order of March 31, 1917, and reference was made to the number of cases referred by you to the Civil Service Commission for review of the ratings; also the Newark case.

Will you kindly advise me promptly how many cases at the present time have been returned by you for the purpose of having the ratings reviewed and are still with the Civil Service Commission, who were the inspectors who investigated the charges of political activity against Mr. Bock, former postmaster at Newark, N. J., and with which of the political parties is each affiliated, if you know?

It has been claimed by Mr. LEHLBACH that the charges in the case of Mr. Bock were not substantiated by the evidence. Will you kindly advise me as to this? Also furnish me with a copy of the report made by these inspectors who visited Newark, and any other pertinent facts which may have a bearing on this case, so that I may know the facts.

Sincerely, yours,

JOHN A. MOON.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., October 8, 1919.

Hon. JOHN A. MOON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR JUDGE MOON: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of the 3d instant, relative to statements made on the floor of the House by Representative LEHLBACH with respect to the appointment of presidential postmasters under the Executive order of March 31, 1917. I wish to state that the number of cases handled since this order was issued is as follows:

Number of nominations from eligible register, 1,267.

Number of nominations of first eligible, 1,188, or 93.7 per cent.

Number of nominations of other than first eligible because of death or refusal of first eligible to accept, 26, or 2 per cent.

Number of cases where other than first eligible was nominated because of character or residence of No. 1, 35, or 2.8 per cent.

Number of nominations of other than first eligible for various reasons, such as health of No. 1, tuberculosis, skin disease, etc., 18, or 1.5 per cent.

Number of cases still in the hands of the Civil Service Commission, 466.

Number of cases before the President for consideration awaiting determination of the application of the act of July 11, 1919, 35.

Number of cases certified by the Civil Service Commission but still under consideration by the department, 285.

In his statement on the floor of the House, Mr. LEHLBACH stated that: "While it was well known that in a number of cases vacancies have been unfilled for a year or more because of the Postmaster General's failure to coerce the Civil Service Commission to change its ratings in compliance with his desires, it was not believed that his contumacy and effrontery had developed to such astounding proportions that 786 of the most important post offices throughout the country are left without permanent appointees to administer them. He speaks of 466 of such cases being still in the hands of the Civil Service Commission. It will be interesting to note, should he eventually comply with the House resolution, how many of these cases are still in the hands of the Civil Service Commission because of reference by the Postmaster General on the ground that the original ratings were improper."

Mr. LEHLBACH apparently is under the impression that acting postmasters are serving at all of these offices, but as a matter of fact there are acting postmasters at only approximately 25 per cent of these offices. In the remainder of the cases the present incumbent has either resigned or is not to be reappointed, but is continued in office until his successor is appointed and qualified, so that many of the offices referred to by Mr. LEHLBACH are in charge of regularly appointed postmasters. Of the 466 cases still in the hands of the Civil Service Commission, Mr. LEHLBACH stated that it would be interesting to note how many of these cases are still in the hands of the Civil Service Commission because of reference by the Postmaster General on the ground that the original ratings were improper. Had Mr. LEHLBACH made the slightest inquiry he could easily have ascertained either from the Civil Service Commission or the Post Office Department that of the 466 cases referred to only 23 had been returned to the commission for review because of protests filed with the Post Office Department, and that the remainder were referred to the commission for the purpose of holding an examination to enable it to certify an eligible register which had not yet been done.

With reference to the investigation at Newark, N. J., Mr. LEHLBACH stated: "When the charge was lodged against Postmaster Bock two post-office inspectors were sent to Newark to make an investigation. They took statements of a number of the people in the city of Newark; they thereupon falsified certain of the statements, and on the basis of the statements so falsified made their report, which received the formal approval of the chief inspector. When the papers were referred to the Civil Service Commission the suspicions of that body were aroused on the face of the case, and Mr. Doyle, of the commission, was sent to Newark to make a personal investigation. He discovered the fact that the statements of several persons had been altered, and procured from them correct statements and also affidavits to the fact that the earlier statements had been falsified."

In accordance with your request, I wish to state that the two post-office inspectors referred to were both Republicans and of the same political faith as Mr. Bock. As requested by you, I am inclosing a copy of the report of these inspectors, also Exhibits A, B, and C. It requires but a reading of this report to show that the inspectors making the investigation were not only broadminded, but absolutely just and fair in their conclusions. The report also shows how groundless is Mr. LEHLBACH'S statement. Mr. Bock was perniciously active in politics, and his actions are a matter of record and the record speaks for itself. It shows that he not only violated the orders of the department which had been issued by a Postmaster General of his own political faith, but during the time he was postmaster solicited contributions for political purposes and disbursed the funds so collected. It is true, as charged by Mr. LEHLBACH, that one of these inspectors has since been promoted. The inspector referred to is Mr. Mosby, who was only recently appointed inspector in charge, and appointed solely because of his record, not only as a fearless investigator but one who did not hesitate to present the facts as disclosed by his investigations. There can be no question that Mr. Bock was guilty of pernicious political activity; that he has not only violated orders issued by a Postmaster General of his own political faith, but his actions were highly repugnant to and in violation of the very principle of civil service. At a time when the administration is endeavoring to remove these positions as far from political patronage as possible, to appoint a man guilty while holding office of such pernicious actions, of which Mr. Bock is clearly shown to be guilty, would be in violation of the spirit and letter of the Executive order issued by the President on March 31, 1917.

Very sincerely,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY COMMITTEE OF ESSEX COUNTY,
Newark, N. J., July 15, 1912.

DEAR SIR: The Republican county committee of the county of Essex is preparing for an active and aggressive campaign for the reelection of President William Howard Taft and Vice President James Schoolcraft Sherman.

The election of the entire Republican ticket in the city, county, State, and Nation is of the utmost importance to those who believe in representative government and in the principles of the Republican Party.

The legitimate expenses in this county of a campaign of this kind are necessarily heavy, and these expenses must be met by voluntary contributions. If you believe in the great Republican principle of protection to American industries, and desire to maintain the integrity of the Republican Party, you are earnestly requested to make as large a contribution as possible.

By giving this your prompt, thoughtful, and favorable consideration you will greatly aid and encourage this committee.

Very truly, yours,

FRANK J. BOCK, Treasurer.

Please make checks payable to Frank J. Bock, treasurer, Strauss Building, Newark, N. J.

Subject: Charges against the postmaster, Newark, N. J.
Case No. 250114-C. H. B. Mosby, W. B. Robinson.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 19, 1913.

The CHIEF POST-OFFICE INSPECTOR,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: We have the honor to return herewith the above-numbered case, which relates to charges that the postmaster, Frank J. Bock, at Newark, N. J., "has been neglecting his official duties in the interest of a real estate business and other projects in which he is concerned, and that for a long period of time after his appointment as postmaster he retained the position of treasurer of the Essex County Republican committee and in said capacity was particularly active in politics," and we present the following report as the result of a personal investigation at the office named from the 13th to 16th instant, both dates inclusive:

As to the charge of neglecting his official duties in the interest of a real estate business and other personal projects, the investigation developed that the same was not well founded. Interviews with employees and patrons of the office disclosed that the postmaster has devoted, since he assumed charge of the office, about six hours daily to his official duties. While he has no fixed office hours, as a rule he reports at the office about 9 a. m. and remains thereat until noon, returns to the office about 2 p. m. and remains until 5 p. m., and frequently visits the office in the evenings after business hours.

The official duties performed by him consist of general supervision of all divisions of the office; personal attention to complaints by the public and to all correspondence of importance; reviewing reports and financial statements of the office; selecting employees and assigning their duties; the discipline of employees and presiding at semimonthly conferences of the various supervisory officers for considering ways and means of improving the local service; and making daily tours of the workroom and the various divisions of the office. It might also be stated that he has, since January 1, 1913, given much personal attention to the inauguration and handling of the parcel-post system.

From careful inquiry and observation we are satisfied that, as a result of the intelligent personal attention the postmaster has devoted to the office, there has been much improvement in the service, and this is a subject of frequent favorable comment on the part of the employees and the public.

As to the attention he devotes to his private business, we found that the time he thus consumes would average probably two hours daily, and that his private business does not require his daily attention. He has charge of the sale of the residential lots of a real-estate company, which some years ago laid out a large tract of land, but most of the lots have since been sold; and Mr. Frank B. Sinnott, a real-estate agent and candidate for the postmastership, stated to us that in his opinion the small amount of unsold lots required but little of the postmaster's attention. The postmaster's stenographer, who impressed us with his apparent truthfulness, said the postmaster did not give in excess of two hours daily to his private business, and this was either in the mornings before office hours or at lunch time; that the real-estate business was not conducted at the post office, and he had not written for the postmaster any letters pertaining thereto.

Referring to the charges of political activity, the postmaster has been for a number of years one of the leading Republican politicians of the city of Newark and county of Essex, N. J., and is generally so recognized. He was appointed postmaster January 16, 1912, and assumed charge of the office February 9, 1912, at which time he was acting treasurer of the Republican county committee of the county of Essex and chairman of the Republican committee of the ninth ward, Newark, N. J. These positions he continued to hold, and on October 1, 1912, was regularly elected to the office of treasurer of the Republican county committee. In the capacity of treasurer and war chairman he served actively throughout the presidential primary campaign in the spring of 1912, and the presidential and municipal campaigns in the fall of that year. He resigned the treasurership of the county committee December 27, 1912, and chairmanship of the Ninth Ward February 28, 1913. An examination we made of the minutes of the Essex County Republican Committee established these facts. As treasurer of the Essex County Committee, Mr. Bock solicited campaign funds by means of circular letters, bearing his stamped signature as treasurer, one of which we secured and submit herewith as Exhibit A. He disbursed, by means of checks bearing his signature, the funds of the committee and handled all finances pertaining thereto. However, there was no evidence adduced that any circular, bearing his name as treasurer and soliciting political contributions, was sent to any post-office employee at Newark, N. J., or that he, while postmaster, attempted to influence any of the employees politically. He also attended the regular monthly meetings of the committee as an officer thereof, and was present at call meetings for the discussions of party matters, such as the making of a slate of delegates to political conventions and a slate of candidates for municipal offices of the city of Newark. He participated vigorously in the discussions at such meetings, according to the statement of the recording secretary.

As chairman of the ninth ward Republican committee he called meetings of the ward committee and presided thereat; he recommended to the county committee persons for appointment as challengers and workers, and at the elections of 1912 and at previous elections he was active in supervising the efforts of poll workers and others employed in like capacity. In the ninth ward he is and has been the recognized active leader of the Republican Party. These facts were obtained from personal interviews with various Republican leaders in Newark, some of whom are personal and political friends of the postmaster; from officers of the committee, and from prominent members of opposite political faith.

The postmaster admitted that he had been an active political leader up to the time of his appointment as postmaster, but denied any activity since that time, claiming that he held the position and performed the duties of committee treasurer in a perfunctory way. However, he stated that he, as ward chairman, called the political meetings and presided thereat, but this, too, in a perfunctory manner; and he did not deny that he received political contributions and signed all checks in payment of bills incurred by the county committee.

As bearing upon the credibility of the postmaster's statement to the effect that after his appointment as postmaster his position as treasurer and the performance of the duties incident thereto were merely perfunctory, it is worthy of some notice that the members of the county Republican committee regarded the position of treasurer as filled by him as being so "perfunctory" as to merit his reelection on October 1, 1912. After his appointment as postmaster he stated he considered the advisability of resigning as ward chairman and county committee treasurer, but was persuaded by the county chairman, Mr. Dalrymple, to hold the positions until after the fall election.

As further evidence of the postmaster's active participation in politics since his appointment as postmaster, we submit herewith notices (Exhibits B, C and D) of three different Republican committee meetings called by the county chairman, Alfred D. Dalrymple, and John R. Flavell, secretary, under dates of August 14 and October 12, 1912, the headings of which bear conspicuously the name of Mr. Bock and other officers of the committee. Mr. Bock was present and voted at the afternoon meeting of August 14, 1912 (Exhibit B), when the candidacy of certain favored persons for the Republican nomination for various county and municipal offices was indorsed by the executive committee.

We interviewed numerous persons of political and business prominence in the county of Essex, from whom the facts herein set forth were obtained, some of the more prominent persons being as follows:

Simon P. Northup, title officer, Prudential Building.
John F. Sinnott, real estate dealer and Democratic eleventh ward chairman.
John M. Rodabeck, automobile commissioner.
B. W. Terlinda, publisher and ninth ward Democratic chairman.
Jerome T. Congleton, member Republican county committee, eleventh ward chairman.
John R. Flavell, secretary of county Republican committee.
D. F. Gavin, recording secretary Republican county committee.
E. Tracy Lauterman, newly appointed postmaster, East Orange, N. J.
Fred T. Sticler, superintendent of mails.
William F. Cyphers, assistant postmaster.

Each of the above-named persons stated that it was the general understanding that Mr. Bock was one of the three or four active and influential Republican leaders of Essex County, and that he was very active during the 1912 political campaigns in furtherance of the interest of the party and its candidates.

Mr. Terlinda, Democratic ward chairman of the ninth ward, stated that on election day in the fall of 1912 Mr. Bock rode over the ninth ward consulting with and advising the Republican workers, and that he was the recognized active Republican leader of that ward.

Jerome T. Congleton, a member of the Republican county committee in 1912, stated that Mr. Bock participated in the committee meetings and party conferences and caused the ninth ward Republican committee, of which he was chairman, to indorse the candidacy of John L. Reid for mayor, and secured for him a like indorsement of the county committee as against Louis V. Aaronson.

D. F. Gavin, recording secretary of the Republican county committee, and a warm personal friend of the postmaster, stated that Mr. Bock regularly attended, during 1912, the meetings of said committee and actively participated in the political discussions which occurred thereat; that his political activity during the 1912 campaigns was greater than that of the chairman of the committee, Mr. Dalrymple; that as treasurer of the committee he collected money for campaign purposes and for the expenses of the committee; that he was also chairman of the ninth ward Republican committee during 1912, and his duties as such consisted of calling meetings of the committee and presiding thereat, of selecting election workers, of seeing that measures were taken to insure the proper organization of the Republicans of the ward, and their active participation in the campaign; that Mr. Bock was active in his ward on election day in the fall of 1912 advising the workers; that it was Mr. Bock's efforts that secured the executive committee's indorsement of the candidacy of Mr. Reid for the Republican mayoralty nomination; and that he was influential in organizing the Taft Republican Club and was president thereof in 1912.

Charles Meyer, stenographer in the postmaster's office, stated with reference to the postmaster's political activity, that in company with Mr. Dalrymple and other party leaders the postmaster attended the Chicago convention in June, 1912; that at the request of the postmaster he wrote and mailed for one Rodriquy, during office hours, several letters of invitation to a reception to be given in honor of the candidates for delegates to the Republican national convention at Chicago (Exhibit E); that he had noticed stationery of the county committee on the postmaster's desk; that it is generally understood that the postmaster and three or four others are the political leaders of Newark; and the assistant postmaster, Mr. Cyphers, while having little knowledge of political affairs, stated that the postmaster was regarded as one of the political leaders of the county.

The facts disclosed by the investigation reveal that Frank J. Bock, postmaster at Newark, N. J., was particularly active during 1912 in politics as an officer of the Republican county committee and also as an officer of two other political organizations; that his activity did not cease, and that he did not resign his political positions until the campaign of last year had been terminated. His actions in this respect have been prejudicial to the best interests of the service; have been contrary to the spirit of the civil-service law and rules, and directly opposed to the long-established policy of the department as set forth in a letter of the Postmaster General, inclosed herewith, dated November 20, 1906, to the President of the Civil Service Commission, in which it was stated:

"* * * You are informed that it is not the practice of this department to prohibit postmasters from holding positions as members of political committees, but it does prohibit them from serving in the capacity of officers of such committees."

Said letter was embodied in the "Civil Service Act, Rules and Executive Orders, edition of June, 1908," and on page 32 of said pamphlet it was stated, being an extract from Executive instructions of July 14, 1886:

"The influence of Federal officeholders should not be felt in the manipulating of political primary meetings and nominating conventions. The use by these officials of their positions to compass their selection as delegates to political conventions is indecent and unfair; and proper regard for the proprieties and requirements of official place will also prevent their assuming the active conduct of political campaigns."

Therefore we recommend the removal of the postmaster and the closing of the case. Form 577 is submitted herewith.

Very respectfully,

H. B. MOSBY,
W. B. ROBINSON,
Post Office Inspectors.

EXHIBIT B.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY COMMITTEE OF THE COUNTY OF ESSEX,
Newark, N. J., August 1½, 1912.

DEAR SIR: A special meeting of the executive committee of the Republican county committee will be held at headquarters, corner Halsey and Academy Streets, Newark, N. J., on Monday afternoon, the 19th day of August, at 4.30 o'clock sharp.

You are earnestly requested to be present.

ALFRED N. DALRYMPLE, Chairman.
JOHN R. FLAVELL, Secretary.

EXHIBIT C.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY COMMITTEE OF THE COUNTY OF ESSEX,
Newark, N. J., August 1½, 1912.

DEAR SIR: A special meeting of the elective members of the county committee will be held on Monday evening, the 19th instant, at 8 o'clock sharp, at headquarters, Strauss Buildings, Halsey and Academy Streets,

Newark, N. J., for the purpose of suggesting candidates for nomination to be voted for at the primary on September 24 next.

Every member is earnestly requested to be present.

Respectfully, yours,

ALFRED N. DALRYMPLE,
Chairman Republican County Committee.
JOHN R. FLAVELL,
Corresponding Secretary.

EXHIBIT D.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY COMMITTEE OF THE COUNTY OF ESSEX,
Newark, N. J., October 12, 1912.

You are cordially invited to attend a Republican mass meeting to be held at Krueger's Auditorium, Belmont Avenue, Newark, on Tuesday evening, October 15, 1912, at 8 o'clock.

Hon. Edmund W. Wakelee, chairman of the Republican State committee, will preside.

Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, the world-famed orator, will speak.

Addresses will also be made by Louis V. Aronson, Republican candidate for mayor of Newark, and the Republican city, county, and congressional candidates.

Music by Voss's band. Ladies invited.

ALFRED N. DALRYMPLE, Chairman.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment? I want to make a motion with reference to the Hawaiian post-office bill.

Mr. WALSH. I withhold the point for a moment.

POSTAL SERVICE IN HAWAII.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up from the Speaker's table the Hawaiian post-office bill, H. R. 7972, with Senate amendments, and move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up the bill (H. R. 7972) to improve the administration of the postal service in the Territory of Hawaii, with Senate amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Is not the postmaster at Honolulu getting $4,000 a year now?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; he is not. He is getting $3,600, and this bill provides for making branch nonaccounting offices of all the other post offices in the islands, which will increase the work of the postmaster at Honolulu, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, so that he is entitled to $4,000. The Postmaster General approves. The gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. KALANIANAOLE] is present, and he asks me to make this motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that no quorum is present. In the opinion of the Chair no quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following-named Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Dallinger	Graham, Ill.	Lee, Ga.
Andrews, Md.	Darrow	Griest	Lesher
Anthony	Davey	Griffin	Linthicum
Babka	Davis, Minn.	Hardy, Tex.	Little
Bacharach	Dempsey	Haugen	Luce
Baer	Dewalt	Hersman	McAndrews
Bell	Dooling	Holland	McArthur
Benson	Doremus	Houghton	McClintic
Bowers	Doughton	Hull, Iowa	McKenzie
Brand	Dupré	Husted	McKinley
Britten	Dyer	Hutchinson	McLaughlin, Nebr.
Brooks, Pa.	Echols	Ireland	McPherson
Browning	Edmonds	Jefferis	Magee
Brumbaugh	Ellsworth	Johnson, S. Dak.	Maher
Buchanan	Emerson	Johnson, Wash.	Mann
Burke	Ferris	Johnston, N. Y.	Mansfield
Caldwell	Flood	Jones, Pa.	Mason
Cantrill	Focht	Juul	Mead
Caraway	Foster	Kendall	Merritt
Carew	Frear	Kennedy, Iowa	Montague
Casey	Fuller, Ill.	Kennedy, R. I.	Mooney
Chindblom	Fuller, Mass.	Kettner	Moore, Ohio
Clark, Fla.	Gallagher	Kiess	Moore, Pa.
Classon	Gallivan	Kincheloe	Moores, Ind.
Cleary	Gandy	Kleczka	Morin
Collier	Garrett	Kreider	Mott
Costello	Goldfogle	LaGuardia	Murphy
Crago	Goodall	Langley	Neely
Crowther	Goodykoontz	Larsen	Nelson, Wis.
Currie, Mich.	Gould	Layton	Nicholls, S. C.
Curry, Calif.	Graham, Pa.	Lea, Calif.	Nichols, Mich.
O'Connor	Reed, N. Y.	Smith, Ill.	Upshaw
Olney	Riordan	Smith, N. Y.	Vaile
Osborne	Robsion, Ky.	Smithwick	Vare
Paige	Rowan	Snyder	Venable
Parker	Rowe	Steele	Ward
Pell	Sanders, N. Y.	Stephens, Miss.	Watson, Pa.
Peters	Saunders, Va.	Stephens, Ohio	Webb
Platt	Schall	Strong, Pa.	Welling
Porter	Scott	Sullivan	Wilson, Ill.
Purnell	Scully	Swope	Wise
Radcliffe	Sells	Taylor, Ark.	Wood, Ind.
Rainey, H. T.	Siegel	Taylor, Tenn.	Woodyard
Ramsey	Sisson	Thompson	Wright
Reber	Slemp	Tinkham

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and forty-eight Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

INDUSTRIAL VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 4438.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of a bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4438) to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent——

Mr. WALSH. I am not asking unanimous consent; I am asking to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was inclined to think that disposition could be made of the entire hour and a quarter.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire if the gentleman is on the committee?

Mr. WALSH. No.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. WALSH. I am.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is there no member on the committee opposed to the bill?

Mr. WALSH. You can rake the committee with a fine-tooth comb and find nobody opposed to the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, this bill first came to the attention of the House as a body day before yesterday although introduced some time ago. I have been busy with other matters since then and have not been able to give the bill a very careful study, and therefore I ask the indulgence of the House so far as the nature of my remarks in connection with it.

I favored the soldiers' rehabilitation bill. The other day, in the course of a discussion, reference was made to a comparison between the soldiers' bill and this bill, and some of the testimony before the committee appears to imply that this would be regarded as supplementing that legislation. There is absolutely, in my opinion, no comparison between the two measures. We were under obligations, in honor bound, to do everything possible for the returning soldiers, especially those physically disqualified for the continuance in the pursuits in which they may have been engaged previous to entering the service. That is a Federal Government duty.

We as representatives of the people are called upon to pass suitable legislation for their rehabilitation so far as it is in our power to do so. But to draw any comparison between that bill and this is to my mind absolutely begging the question. There is no reason why this bill should have any status before the Congress because we have voted for the soldiers' bill.

I am opposed to this kind of legislation, particularly at this time. It would seem to me that there could be no more inopportune time than the present to call up a bill of this nature when the very board in whose hands the execution of this legislation is to be given is under great criticism, rightly or wrongly I will not say, but they are certainly under great criticism to-day for their failure to have executed in a proper manner the legislation already intrusted to them. There can be no question about that. We read it every day in the press, and the Committee on Rules has now under consideration a resolution for investigation.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What board does the gentleman refer to, the Vocational Educational Board?

Mr. TREADWAY. The Vocational Educational Board, in whose hands would be placed the carrying out of this law.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman does not mean the Soldiers' Rehabilitation Board.

Mr. TREADWAY. I mean the original board. Let me call attention to one or two particular figures of the bill before us. In the first place, the bill was in the last Congress, and it would seem to me that by this time it could have been properly considered by such a leading committee of the House as the Committee on Education, and presented to us in a good form.

I note that in line 4, page 1, this legislation is to apply to persons disabled, but I find no designation of what would constitute a disabled person, nor who is to decide as to that disability. There is no definition except in general terms, no provision in the bill itself in any way defining disability. That seems to me to be a very important omission in the construction of the bill.

In section 2 we find another great objection to the phraseology of the bill. It may conform to former methods of legislation, but it directly prescribes the manner in which the legislation must be passed by the States to have the so-called benefit of this legislation.

In all our States the methods of procedure varies, and it strikes me, from line 16 in paragraph 3, the absolute designation of the kind of legislation that must be passed by the State is subject to grave criticism.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, wlil the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Did the gentleman vote for the Fess-Hughes Vocational Educational Board?

Mr. TREADWAY. I did.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would state to the gentleman that the same provision is in that.

Mr. TREADWAY. I understand that it is a standing provision, where there is cooperation, and I will touch upon that point later. We are getting to a very close approximation, in a great deal of legislation, of paternalistic control in Congress over State affairs, and therefore we may have to adopt some such legislation as is in this clause if this method of cooperation is to be continued between the States and the Federal Government. It is a mighty attractive sort of proposition to put up to the States to say to them, "If you will put up one dollar, the Federal Government will put up another to match it"; and that is exactly what this proposition is. You are trying to induce us, as Representatives from various States, to be able to say to our State legislatures that the Federal Government is the most liberal sort of organization going; that it will match every State dollar with a Federal dollar. But whose dollar is that that you are going to match it with? It is the money of the taxpayers of those various States, and nothing else. We have had several illustrations of this kind of legislation—of matching dollar for dollar. You are simply asking the taxpayer of your State to pay out just that much more money, and you are matching it, dollar for dollar, in the taxation scheme.

There is no question in the world that if we are to have legislation of this kind it should be handled by the States themselves. I think the State of Massachusetts was among the first to adopt the workmen's compensation act. As I recollect, that act was in 1911 declared constitutional by the supreme court of our State. One or two other States had previously adopted a workmen's compensation act, I think New Jersey and New York, and possibly others.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. BEE. If we pass this bill, what becomes of the workmen's compensation acts and the procedure in the various States?

Mr. TREADWAY. I was coming to practically the point of the gentleman from Texas. Somewhere in support of this bill I have seen reference to the statement that this is a corollary and supplements the workmen's compensation act, and should be under the control practically of the same sort of a board that handles the workmen's compensation act.

We have advanced rapidly in the workmen's compensation legislation in the various States. There are now 38 States that have such legislation. If this should supplement the workmen's compensation acts, the fact that the States have established the workmen's compensation acts is absolute argument for the continuation by that same sort of a board with the States. The States should pass this legislation rather than the Federal Government.

Mr. BEE. Unless this legislation is amended, will not the effect of it be to substitute this law in the States for the various workmen's compensation aets?

Mr. TREADWAY. I should think it was open to that criticism.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. WALSH. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to another section, section 5, where there is appropriated $100,000 this year and $150,000 in future years, for investigations and studies. That simply means that you are putting a number of men on the pay roll for that sort of investigation, so called.

Mr. GARNER. Propaganda.

Mr. TREADWAY. It is a propaganda, as my friend from Texas says, and has nothing to do with the rehabilitation of men injured in industrial pursuits. You are asking for appropriations reaching up to a million and half a year. In other words, for that sort of a propaganda you are going to have 10 very good positions from $5,000 down——

Mr. HULINGS. Fifteen.

Mr. TREADWAY. Fifteen positions?

Mr. HULINGS. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, whatever the number is, for the handling of a million dollars. It is entirely out of proportion.

There has been no call for this legislation so far as the hearings go. A few educators, a few interested in this same sort of vocational education, appeared before a joint committee in the last Congress. No big industries are represented. This matter can be absolutely handled and cared for by the States. There is no public call that it should be taken over by the Federal Government.

In view of the effort to establish good, big positions, and the disproportion of the amount used for investigations, together with the drawbacks that I have pointed out in the phraseology of the bill, I am thoroughly convinced that this is bad legislation and ought not to be enacted at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MAPES having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8624) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel,' approved August 10, 1917."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 8986) granting the consent of Congress to the Paris-Hugo Bridge Co. to construct a bridge and approaches thereto across Red River, near Arthur City, Lamar County, Tex.

INDUSTRIAL VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, it would be impossible for me within the limitation of 10 or 15 minutes to undertake a complete analysis of the provisions of this bill and the purposes sought to be accomplished under its operation. For a number of years I have thought it a strange thing that no definite and concrete policy had ever been inaugurated either by State or the Federal Government to retrain for useful and gainful employment the multiplied thousands of men and women of this Nation who become permanently crippled through industrial or occupational accidents. This necessity was presented at the hearings on the bill for the vocational retraining of disabled soldiers, but it was thought not expedient to incorporate the industrial cripples' feature in that bill. So impressed was I with the great economic and humanitarian appeal that legislation of this nature carries that in the Sixty-fifth Congress I introduced House bill 12880, which is, with only a few changes in terms, the bill we are now considering. I again introduced it early in the Sixty-sixth Congress, and at both sessions the bill was favorably reported by a unanimous vote of the Committee on Education.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] said that there did not seem to be any general demand for legislation of this character. I assert to the membership of this committee that that was one of the impelling reasons that convinced the committee after hearings of the urgent necessity for the immediate passage of a bill of this kind. The very fact that legislation of this kind has heretofore been ignored, the fact that there are in the United States of America to-day a total of 300,000 industrial cripples, for whom heretofore no coherent or concerted action has been taken by State, municipal, county, or Federal Government, the fact that there came before our committee representatives not only of all the great manufacturing institutions of the United States, representatives of the eleemosynary institutions of the country, who are interested in philanthropic institutions, representatives of organized and unorganized labor, sufficiently convinced the committee of the urgent necessity for this legislation. In fact, there appeared before the joint hearings on this bill representatives of every class of our people, who showed us the urgent necessity for decisive and immediate legislation upon this great problem. Among them were Dr. R. M. Lieter, director American Museum of Safety; Charles H. Verrill, United States Employees' Compensation Commission; Samuel Gompers, president American Federation of Labor; Frederick W. Keough, president National Association of Manufacturers; John B. Andrews, secretary American Association for Labor Organization; John Mitchell, chairman New York Industrial Commission; Arthur E. Holder, representative of labor on Federal Board; Douglas C. McMurtrie, director Red Cross Institute for Crippled and Disabled Men of New York.

Now, what is the problem with which we have to deal? For years and years we have had going on in this country in our industries, in our manufacturing establishments, on our farms, in our mines, on our railroads, an annual toll of permanent cripples that amounts to staggering figures. Gentlemen of this committee would probably be amazed at the number. I regret I have not time to go into an analysis of them for the various occupations, and a statement of the astounding number of these disabled men and women there are in this country to-day, amounting at least to 300,000 and increasing annually all the time, more than 50 per cent disabled in their earning capacity. Now, what is the character of moral and national duty that we owe to these people, if we owe them any? Why, when our soldiers went to the front there was no man here who said we did not owe a duty to retrain those who came back disabled, because they were serving their Government in a great national crisis.

But you take these men and women covered by this bill, were they rendering any service to the Government? Why, they are composed of people of every element of our citizenship, of men who are injured upon railroads carrying on the transportation facilities of the country absolutely necessary for its economic and industrial life; men injured down in the bowels of the earth, working in the coal mines to produce fuel which will sustain the life of the Nation against the rigors of winter; and women, if you please, all over this country working in the shops to earn an honest living for themselves and their families; and a great preponderance of these, hundreds of thousands who are business men, men with families dependent upon them. What is the result when they are disabled? Not only the enormous economic loss that ensues because of the loss of their earning capacity, but in addition to that loss they become a positive charge in a great number of instances either upon charity or the generosity of the community in which they live. They compose the aggregate in industry in this country, my friends, who have become not by their own choice but by some misadventure so crippled that they can not earn a living. What does this bill propose? That the Federal Government shall take charge of them and educate them? Not at all. The bill expects national leadership, but the real burden will be upon the States. There are any number of precedents for that policy. Take the Smith-Hughes vocational educational bill, passed a few years ago, that has now been adopted by every one of the 48 States of this Union. What did that provide for? That bill—and the gentleman from Massachusetts voted for it, and I doubt not the other opponents of this measure voted for it—provided that the Government should cooperate with the States for the education of normal pupils in the schools, not crippled, not unfortunate, not maimed, not handicapped, but in the possession of their normal faculties. Why? Because this Government recognizes that the progress and prosperity of this Nation depends upon the aggregate intelligence and efficiency of its citizenship. Therefore we appropriated a million dollars a year under that bill, to be distributed to the States in proportion to their population, like we propose in this bill for this purpose. To educate the youth of this country along the line of intelligence and efficiency, avocations and pursuits. Now, what does this bill propose to do? To follow exactly the same principle of legislation. The purpose of this bill is not so much for the money that may come out of the Federal Treasury, but the main purpose is to give Federal leadership and inspiration and stimulus to this great movement. The result, when it is put into effect, will be like that of the Smith-Hughes bill, under which already 200,000 pupils of this country are in vocational schools learning to increase their efficiency.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that because the States have not performed their duty toward its unfortunates that therefore that duty rests upon the Federal Government to do it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Why, if the States had failed to perform their duty in the building of good roads, the Federal Government went to their assistance; and in regard to agricultural extension, the Government went to their assistance under the provisions of the Smith-Lever bill. In the case of the land-grant colleges, this Nation bestowed an aggregate of its lands to the extent of millions and hundreds of millions of acres to aid the primary education of the public schools of this great country. The following summary discloses what the Federal Government has done directly to aid primary and higher education:

Total of national grants for education.

[From Monroe's Cyclopedia of Education, article on "National Government of the United States and education."]

Grant and purpose.	Acres granted.	Fund derived from sales.	Probable future income.[1]	Total income.
1. For common schools:
Sections for schools	81,064,300	$103,000,000	$410,000,000	$513,000,000
Saline grants	900,000	1,000,000	.....	1,000,000
Five per cent of land sales	.....	7,187,316	7,000,000	14,000,000
Surplus revenue	.....	14,000,000	.....	14,000,000
Internal improvement act	5,000,000	6,000,000	8,000,000	14,000,000
Swamp-land grants	45,000,000	15,000,000	2,000,000	17,000,000
Forest reserve per cent	.....	1,000,000	[1] 25,000,000	26,000,000
Total	131,964,300	147,187,316	452,000,000	599,000,000
2. Aid for higher education:
University grants	3,407,643	5,000,000	27,500,000	32,500,000
Land-grant colleges—
Grants of land	11,367,832	13,736,178	25,000,000	39,000,000
Experiment station grants	.....	14,000,000	[1] 30,000,000	44,000,000
Laws 1890 and 1907	.....	23,920,000	[1] 62,500,000	86,420,000
Total	14,775,475	56,656,178	145,000,000	[2] 200,920,000
3. Grants for other types of schools:
Normal schools	1,500,000	2,500,000	17,500,000	20,000,000
Deaf, dumb, and blind	560,000	.....	5,600,000	5,600,000
Reform schools	500,000	.....	5,000,000	5,000,000
Total	2,560,000	2,500,000	28,100,000	30,600,000
4. Summary of grants	149,299,775	206,343,494	[2] 725,100,000	[2] 829,520,000

[1] Calculated for 20 years from 1911 at present rate of increase.
[2] These totals are not the correct sums of the items, but are given as shown in the work cited.

And that is one reason why the Government should undertake it, because no other institution or agency or political subdivision up to this hour has. What is the result? Why, we have this enormous wastage in our industrial life. It amounts annually in loss of earning capacity to $100,000,000. You have seen these beggars with little tin cups in their hands on the street, or selling pencils, or in the poorhouse. You have seen these people maimed and handicapped; and what we propose to do here——

Mr. GARLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will.

Mr. GARLAND. I will state to the gentleman that the State of Pennsylvania has this sort of a bill at work.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am glad to hear it. This will only be an additional amount to go to them. Now, who controls the operation of this measure? It is not the Government taking charge of State affairs. If you will read the bill you will find that the State board of vocational education or State board of Federal compensation shall be in actual control of the retraining; and this answers the question of my friend from Texas. This does not handicap in the slightest degree the operation of State compensation now, but only provides where there are compensation boards that the legislature of the State shall pass proper laws to make them assistants in the administration of this law within the State. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I yield the gentleman five minutes additional.

Mr. OLIVER. To what extent will the appropriations carried by this bill really give relief to the 300,000 cripples of the country, and how is the money carried in this appropriation to be expended by the different States?

Mr. BANKHEAD. If my friend will read section 1 of the bill, on page 3, he will see that it provides that the funds provided shall be expended in the State under the supervision or control of the State board.

Mr. OLIVER. Take, for instance, Alabama; and that State will be entitled to about $17,000 out of this appropriation; and it is not intended that the board and lodging of those who are taking training shall be paid out of this sum, and yet it seeks to offer benefit only to those who are unable to give the training to themselves. How would the $17,000 provide any adequate aid to any large number of cripples in our State?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to my friend that it is a meager beginning, but the real burden is put on the States. If they want to make it effective, they have got to help. The Federal appropriation is limited, and I anticipate the same experience that we had with land-grant colleges all over the country. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] pointed out that at least twenty times more has been spent by each State than has been spent by the Federal Government in those great institutions of learning. The States are not compelled to accept the provisions of this act if they do not wish to do it. It is entirely optional with a State whether it desires to accept the benefits of this legislation. As I stated, the main purpose of the legislation is to start and give stimulus and dignity to the leadership in this great humanitarian purpose.

Mr. BLACK. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to ask him a question on just one phase of the bill. It provides that this relief shall only be extended to those who are injured in certain cases. If a man is disabled by any sort of action, why should he not come under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The purpose of this bill, I will state to the gentleman, is to give any man who may be injured in any form of legitimate occupation or enterprise an opportunity to take advantage of it.

Mr. BLACK. Why should it be necessary he should be in an active pursuit?

Mr. BANKHEAD. There was a difference of opinion whether it should not embrace people of all classes, people suffering from occupational diseases, like tuberculosis, and so forth, but the majority thought it unwise to extend the field that far, and so we put reasonable limitations upon the purposes of the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. For a brief question.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to ask if this pamphlet, the joint hearings, which I hold in my hand, contains all of the hearings held on the bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; in substance. In the last Congress I introduced this bill and Senator SMITH of Georgia introduced it in the Senate. We had these hearings, and they covered every phase, as we thought, and the conditions are exactly similar now as they were then. Therefore we thought it unnecessary and unwise to hold additional hearings on this bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am not criticizing the committee's attitude. The gentleman in criticizing my statement that there was not a general call for such legislation as this denied that position and referred to the hearings. Now, I have carefully looked them over, and I find that 12 gentlemen testified. I would like to ask if he thinks those gentlemen represent the best sentiment of the country?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They practically represented every element of industry and society in the United States in a large sense. Of course, I do not mean in a specific and limited sense.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask the same privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks the same privilege. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, it is with some hesitancy that I rise to oppose the bill sponsored by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] and by my friend who has just left the floor. In asking for this legislation I know that those gentlemen are actuated by no improper motives, and I feel sure that they, at least, are convinced that the legislation is proper. But I do believe, however, gentlemen, that it is possible for a good man to be carried away with his hobby. And I do not believe that an investigation of the hearings on this bill, that were conducted at the last Congress—there being no hearings during this Congress—and a realization of the time will justify this legislation. And for that reason, at this time, I desire to speak against the bill.

There can be no question but that if this legislation is right we should take the further step and offer the vocational training and rehabilitation to the man that becomes sick and afflicted by reason of his service in these institutions, the same as the man who is crippled. And if the principle here is right, the Federal Government should take charge of all State affairs. Take the State of Kansas, for instance, and we have a compensation act, under which it is supposed to take care of these cases. Our law is supposed to be just and equitable in those cases. While there is not any money appropriated by this bill for the care of the cripple, there is money appropriated to justify further investigations of his condition and to authorize a pay roll and a large number of appointees to go into those investigations.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Gladly.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman use the term "appropriated" technically?

Mr. TINCHER. No; I do not mean to use it technically. I take it, however, if this Congress sees fit to undertake this legislation, that the appropriations herein authorized would, as a matter of course, follow from the Committee on Appropriations. And I would dislike to support a bill which mentions an appropriation or authorizes an appropriation unless I would be willing and glad to vote for that appropriation when asked for by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. What does the gentleman mean when he says that it does not appropriate anything for the training of the cripples, but does for the administration?

Mr. TINCHER. As I understand the measure, I say you take the man who is taken care of by the workmen's compensation act and he can not qualify under this act.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. TINCHER. You say that the man who is taken care of by law under that can still say that he is disabled and unable to care for himself and can come under this act?

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman is incorrect in that statement.

Mr. TINCHER. My best understanding of this bill—and if I am wrong in it I want the gentleman from Ohio to correct me in his own time—is that it authorizes duplicate investigations. It authorizes the expenditure of money, just as we are prone to do here in Congress, where the State is already spending money for the same purpose. My understanding is, if the gentleman will pardon me, that it will take too much money to administer this law, and I believe I am justified in that position by reason of the attitude of the country to-day toward the board in which you invest the authority to administer this law. That board to-day is on trial, under the charge that it is incompetent to expend the money properly that is already appropriated to it.

If any individual were on trial, charged and accused by the people whose money he was spending that he did not know how to properly expend that money and was not properly expending it, you would hesitate about putting more responsibility and intrusting more money in the hands of that individual, and it is the same way with Congress in respect to an institution like this. Congress ought to hesitate about placing more money in the hands of this institution to expend. Congress would not think of doing such a thing in the case of an individual, and it should not think of doing it in the case of this board.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has the gentleman heard any criticism of the Federal board because of its failure to carry out the Smith-Hughes Vocational Act, similar in character to this?

Mr. TINCHER. I have not; but I have heard of this Vocational Board conducting as many as three or four examinations on one soldier boy before admitting him to training when one examination ought to have been sufficient, and still withholding him from school on the ground that there was something wrong with him before he enlisted in the Army. I may say that since then they have backed down and admitted that they reached that decision improperly.

The very day that this bill came before the Committee on Rules that committee was engaged in hearing testimony against this board; and now the Congress, which is supposed to reduce appropriations and revenues——

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. TINCHER. No; I have but a moment. The gentleman can get time in his own right. We are starting an appropriation which we know is just a beginning. This is just a postage-stamp starter. Gentlemen know that if this Vocational Board, the same that is here now, starts in with this proposition, it will be here in a few months asking for millions of dollars of appropriations.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Has there been any increased demands upon the Federal Treasury by the land-grant colleges under the Smith-Hughes bill and under the Smith-Lever bill? This is fixed.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman permit me to make this answer? This board to which you are intrusting this proposition asked this Congress for $6,000,000. You gave them four millions and a half. They asked for $6,000,000 additional. The President said it was not enough. They are going now to ask Congress for $21,000,000 for another proposition, when every soldier in the United States that I have had any dealings with says they are not carrying out properly the provisions of the law and are wasting the money that has already been appropriated. Until they are cleared of the charge that is being brought out now by the Committee on Rules I say that this Congress, which is supposed to be conservative and in favor of reducing taxes on the taxpayers of this country, ought to pause and consider this matter very carefully. I am opposed to this legislation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I realize there are many things that so appeal to the tender sympathies of every man that he would like to do something to aid in alleviating suffering wherever it may be found. The poor, the crippled, and the aged, who can not care for themselves, appeal to us, and appeal to us very strongly, indeed; but I am persuaded that the care of them ought to be provided for by the taxation of the several States, which have a power over taxation and the collection of money that the Federal Treasury does not possess.

Already I feel that we have gone far afield, especially when we view the condition of the Treasury of the United States as a result of the war. Prior to the outbreak of the war the bulk of our revenue was raised by indirect taxation, and a very large portion of it came from the tariff. For the calendar year 1917 3,500,000 men and women in America made income-tax returns. The most we ever raised in a single year by customhouse duties was $334,000,000, and last fiscal year we raised only about $184,000,000. I do not care how you adjust the tariff, you will probably never again get tariff duties that will bring in a sum more than the $334,000,000 that was collected in the fiscal year 1910.

Why do not the States do this? Every State legislator, owing his place to the electorate of a county or a district, is apprehensive of that electorate when election day comes around if he has done anything to increase taxation. And yet you are about to take a step here now—and I assume that you will take it—that is going to mean increased taxation to the American people. We are going to talk about economy, but no man—I care not which side of the aisle he sits on—can in the next elections say anything about economy or criticize the lack of economy if he votes for a bill of this kind, which absolutely requires annual appropriations.

For two weeks the Select Committee on the Budget has been holding hearings, and we were often told that not all of the blame for appropriations was attached to the committees of Congress that have appropriating jurisdiction. Much of that responsibility originates with a legislative committee that brings in a new activity for the Government to carry on, and the proper appropriating committee is powerless to do anything except to follow the law and report out an appropriation.

Let us see what we have for this fiscal year, so far as education is concerned and what our appropriations are for that purpose. The cooperative agricultural extension act of May 8, 1914, carried a permanent appropriation of $3,080,000. The Agricultural appropriation act for this year enlarged that by $1,500,000, making $4,580,000 to be expended by the Government this year for that purpose.

The act of February 28, 1917, creating the Federal Board for Vocational Education, carried a permanent appropriation of $3,182,000 for this year for cooperative vocational education. We have also appropriated for this year $14,000,000 for vocational rehabilitation of soldiers and sailors. I do not complain about that. The board in that respect is doing a service which was caused by the war, and I want to do everything I can to give that board all the power and all the money necessary to make self-supporting citizens out of the boys who were unfortunate in that Great War, so that they can earn a livelihood.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. For a question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the gentleman think that all the appropriations to which he has referred meet with the full and cordial approval of the American taxpayers?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know anything about that. I have not talked with them.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I agree with the gentleman's view. Does he think any limit could be imposed if we once started upon the policy suggested here?

Mr. GOOD. There does not seem to be any.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Applied to insurance against accident, insurance against sickness, to old-age pensions, and almost everything that is conceivable that would appeal to human sympathy?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is entirely right. Here is a family of children. The father is sick, the mother is sick, and the children are dying of disease. Are we to withhold our support from them? Here is an old man or an old lady who has been a useful citizen. Shall we deny the support that will give them a livelihood? I undertake to say that these are subjects that appeal to the human heart; but in deciding them we must decide the functions of government, and I take it that it was never the intention of the founders of this Republic and the framers of the Constitution to provide that all of these services should be paid, no matter how worthy they might be, out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman another question? Has he heard any of the supporters of this bill specify any provision of the Constitution which can be taken as a source of the power that is contemplated to be exerted by this measure?

Mr. GOOD. No; and I have not heard of a Member of Congress outside of the Committee on Education who has received a single letter from his constituents urging this legislation. I will ask any gentleman to rise who has received any such letter.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I have.

Mr. NOLAN. I have received such letters.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. So have I.

Mr. CARSS. I have.

Mr. GOOD. Only four or five Members of the House out of the 435, except members of the Committee on Education, have received letters asking for this legislation.

Mr. CARSS. Are there 435 Members here to answer about that?

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. No; I have only a little time.

As I have stated, the act of May 8, 1914, carries $3,080,000 for this year. The act of February 28, 1917, appropriated $3,182,000. We have appropriated $14,000,000 for vocational rehabilitation. I had a report yesterday that the Board of Vocational Education had practically broken down; that it was overloaded with this work, and will admit that it can not perform it. Yet here is a bill which, according to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], if all the industrial cripples should take advantage of it would throw 300,000 more persons upon it for consideration. Why, that board every week or two has many of the district officers not only write but wire the true records of field employees.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. No; I can not yield. And now you saddle upon this board, that has broken down and can not function, this enormous additional work. Read a recent statement of the American Legion, complaining that this Federal board has not functioned. After you enact this proposed bill and the soldiers and sailors complain of the failure of this board to care for them, point your finger to the act now under consideration and say to these boys that this bill made it impossible for the Federal board to function for them. The current Army appropriation act carries $2,000,000 for vocational training. The act making provision for the agricultural colleges and colleges of mechanic arts carries a permanent appropriation of $2,500,000 for this year. All the acts I have enumerated make available for this year $26,262,000 for educational purposes. Where is the money called for by this bill to come from? Every man who votes for it must recognize that he must vote for another tax upon the American people. I firmly believe that every bill we now pass making it necessary to appropriate money out of the Treasury in the future will compel the raising of that money either by the sale of bonds or by additional taxation. Here is legislation to accomplish an object which is desirable, but I say to you that the local authorities of the States and counties should always and must always be obligated to care for their sick, their poor, and their aged, if they can not earn a livelihood and have not been able to save anything upon which to live. Are we to take in all of these? The one appeals to me as strongly as the other. If we do, instead of $1,000,000 a year, it will take $100,000,000 a year and more to provide for them. Let us make the bill comprehensive. If we are going to lend support to one person because he is unfortunate, let us extend it to all our unfortunates and do it with an open hand. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FESS. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to give my support to this legislation, which proposes Federal aid in cooperation with the States in providing vocational training for those crippled in industry, with a view of enabling them to again engage in gainful and useful occupations.

No right-minded person will, I am sure, fail to sympathize with the objects and purposes of this legislation. There are, however, some who question the necessity, desirability, or wisdom of the Federal Government embarking upon this enterprise of vocational training for those unfortunately crippled in the world's activities. It is to this view of the matter that I shall address my brief remarks on the subject.

The views of a very great many people have undergone a change in the past few years relative to the responsibility of organized society to the helpless and unfortunate. More and more the world is coming to realize the duty that rests upon society as a whole to look after, care and provide for the weak, the helpless, and the unfortunate.

So far as these duties and responsibilities are to be met and performed through governmental agencies the primary responsibility is, of course, on the local and State governments. They are to a considerable extent responsible for the conditions which surround the citizen in his employment. They are on the ground and familiar with the conditions and armed with authority to deal directly with the situation.

All this being true, it is natural that it be urged that as the responsibility is primarily that of the State and local community, as they are best qualified for the undertaking and their citizens are those most directly interested, they should assume and perform a duty and responsibility so clearly theirs.

These arguments have much force with those who realize the importance of confining the activities of the Federal Government within proper bounds, and the even greater importance of insisting that the States and their communities shall, for their own good and that of the people generally, continue to assume and exercise their local duties and responsibilities.

There is, however, a growing sentiment in favor of national leadership, stimulus, and direction in various lines in which the primary responsibility is local and in which the States and communities must wield the laboring oar, and that sentiment has been strongly expressed in behalf of legislation such as that now before us. Without minimizing State and local responsibilities for the rehabilitation and the restoration to lives of usefulness of those who suffer the accidents of industry, humanitarians, welfare workers, labor leaders, captains of industry, and forward-looking folks of all classes have urged that the Federal Government assume a position of leadership and guidance in this work of practical humanitarian endeavor.

The bill provides not only for Federal encouragement and direction in cooperation with the States in the work of preparing those injured in industry for lives of further usefulness, but it also provides for Federal contributions toward this cooperative work. These contributions will, of course, encourage the States and the communities in the performance of their duty in this regard, but more important than any cash contribution is the fact that the National Government recognizes the importance of saving industrial cripples from lives of despair and dependence; of placing them in the way of self-help; restoring them to a condition enabling them to do their useful part in the world's work. [Applause.]

Of course, it is going to cost a little money. It will actually cost a million dollars, and my, how gentlemen do hesitate to expend a million dollars in this humanitarian work! Gentlemen who have had no hesitation at all in voting billions for the destructive work of war; men who have without question or a qualm voted for appropriations running into the hundreds of millions, which, while perhaps necessary or warranted, serve no helpful purposes in the cause of humanity, in the upbuilding of the race, or in making more tolerable the conditions of living, hesitate at this comparatively small proposal of appropriation which, if wisely expended, will serve to save thousands from becoming human derelicts.

No man who ever occupied a seat in this House has spoken more frequently or more earnestly than I against undue and improper extensions of Federal authority, jurisdiction, and control. But, gentlemen, I have learned something in the more than 20 years of my service here, and I trust I have grown with the growth of the sentiment of the country in favor of progressive legislation. I trust that I can see things in the light of to-day rather than from the viewpoint of the past.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. For a question.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman regard the appropriations which Congress has voted of hundreds of millions, as he says, not necessary and desirable?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not said that. I have said that Congress has voted billions for work of destruction, and I have cast my vote for those appropriations, appropriations, as a whole, running far into billions. In the face of all that, looking at the matter from the standpoint of cost, it seems to me men are rather exaggerating the situation when they say that the spending of a single million dollars for purposes which are helpful and useful, as proposed in this bill, is a gross extravagance, and objectionable from that viewpoint.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. MONDELL. We want to help keep down appropriations; we must keep down appropriations; but it seems to me that in the desire of gentlemen to keep down appropriations they should pay their attention to vast sums that are expended for purposes of more or less questionable necessity rather than to rise in opposition to these comparatively small proposed appropriations for purposes that appeal to the heart and conscience of every one of us, and relative to which the only question is whether or not the Federal Government should participate in the worthy and helpful work. I want to help keep down the vast appropriations for military purposes and out of the vast sums thus saved be able to do something for humanity.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What has the State of Wyoming done along this line?

Mr. MONDELL. The State of Wyoming has done very good work, but will do better work under the encouragement, stimulus, and direction of the Federal Government.

Mr. WALSH. Has it a board to take care of industrial cripples?

Mr. MONDELL. I think so.

Mr. WALSH. For how many years has it had it?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know. Wyoming may not have done as well as the great State of Massachusetts, but I believe that even Massachusetts will do more under the encouragement and stimulus of a Federal organization.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman state whether this is a desirable appropriation or one that is absolutely necessary?

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman answer my question? Is it desirable that men who are crippled shall be restored to lives of usefulness, or is it essential that they should be? That question can and will be answered by the vote on this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman answer another question?

Mr. SNELL. I ask that the gentleman answer my question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, the executive head of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, Dr. Prosser, in a communication sent to Members of Congress under date of August 22, estimates the number of disabilities to American soldiers, sailors, and marines resulting from the war at 250,000. That estimate includes only men who have been discharged with a disability rating of 10 per cent or more. The report on this bill indicates that the number of persons disabled in industry only throughout the United States is estimated at 280,000. In other words, if this bill is enacted into law the burden thrown upon the Federal Board for Vocational Education will, numerically at least, be somewhat more than doubled. It had on its hands, since we gave authority under the act of June 27, 1918, 250,000 disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines; under this law there will be added 280,000 civilians who will be eligible for vocational education.

The question then arises how the action of Congress in doubling the task of the board at this time will be construed by the country. Will it be construed as an indorsement, as a testimonial of their achievement in handling the soldier problem with which they have been at work for something over a year? Is there any escape, gentlemen of the House, from the conclusion that if we double their task the country will say that Congress regards as entirely satisfactory the work that they have already done in caring for the soldier?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield? Will the gentleman explain what he means by doubling the work under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. ROGERS. I have stated that there were 250,000 soldiers, sailors, and marines within the purview of the board, and that this adds 280,000. I do not see why that does not more than double their work, from a numerical standpoint at least.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is under a misapprehension. Will he allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROGERS. Could the gentleman do it in his own time, because I have only eight minutes? Then the question arises, what the attitude of the House and the country in fact is upon the past achievements of the Federal Board for Vocational Education. I have no desire, and I know no Member of this House has a desire, to condemn without a hearing what the Federal board has done or has failed to do; but I think it is fair to say—and I think almost every Member of the House will agree with me in this—that the Federal board is not generally deemed to have been successful with its problem of rehabilitating the soldier.

I have in my hand the Vocational Summary, issued by the Federal Board for Vocational Education, for the month of September. That gives the actual number of people which have been dealt with by the Federal board during the year and three months when the act has been in operation. As I have said, there are 250,000 disabled service men. This table shows that the Federal board on August 23 had established contact with 170,000 of those 250,000 men. In other words, the Federal board had then received applications for aid from 170,00 men, and it had failed to establish contact at all with 80,000 men more. Of the 170,000 men who had appealed to the board for aid 23,000 had been recommended for training by the agencies of the board; 146,000 applicants had not been recommended or had not been reached in the machinery of the board's activities. Of the 170,000 suppliants for aid 7,812 men on August 23 had actually been put in training. In other words, less than 8,000 men had been started on their way toward vocational usefulness through the medium of the training authorized by the act of Congress. Further, I am advised on authority which I have not seen contradicted—that is, an article in the American Legion Weekly of about two weeks ago—that on September 4 33 men, having completed their training, had entered gainful occupation as a result of the board's assistance.

I am frank to say that I am not sure that those figures which I have given are correct, though they have been officially issued by the board itself. I have indicated that the board stated that on August 23 it had established contact with 170,000 soldiers. Dr. Prosser, in his communication to Congress, which I have mentioned, says that the board had established contact with only 133,000 soldiers on August 22, one day prior to the date of the report printed in the Vocational Summary. Which is right I do not know. There is a disparity of over 35,000. The Congress does not know which of those official statements is correct. Every man in this House knows that the Federal board has not yet been able to take up in earnest and effectively and efficiently the training and the placing of the great mass of our soldiers in gainful occupations.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I can not yield now. The experience of Great Britain is this: They have 1,000,000 cripples from the war. We have a quarter of a million crippled soldiers and sailors. Great Britain discharges the soldier one day, it surveys him for training the second day, and puts him into training the third day.

That has been done by means of a highly decentralized organization which they have perfected to a marked degree. The United States, through its Federal Board for Vocational Education, takes from three to six months, according to testimony before the Committee on Rules the day before yesterday, before it even puts in training the men who call upon the United States for aid under this act. I repeat that less than 8,000 men out of 250,000 disabled soldiers had in fact been put in training on the 23d of August.

Mr. FESS rose.

Mr. ROGERS. I can not yield. It was testified at the hearings before the Committee on Rules on my resolution the day before yesterday that of every dollar appropriated by Congress for the work of this board, 40 cents went to expenses of administration. It was testified that there were 20,000 paid employees of the board, some of them in Washington, some in the 12 districts throughout the United States. If that is true, it has taken about two and one-half employees per soldier put in training during the last year. If that is true, it has taken about 600 employees per soldier put into gainful occupation after training during the last year when the Federal board has been functioning.

As I say, I am not disposed on ex parte testimony to condemn the Federal board; but the question is pressing for consideration whether the Federal board has been able to handle or will be able to handle the soldier problem alone. If we pass this law, it is a vindication, a justification of the conduct of the board and of the achievements which it has wrought. With conditions as they are, I am not willing to give that testimonial.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reckon it is out of date to intimate that this bill is not justified under our Constitution. It might be justified under the welfare clause, as so many things have been, but if it can be justified, then the Federal Government is authorized to erect hospitals in every ward in every city, schools in every village and every county, and there is nothing that can not be authorized under the general welfare clause, if it be admitted that some good would be accomplished by it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I suggest this to my friend, that he is saying almost what Mr. Justice Story said a good many years ago in his Commentaries on the Constitution, that if the view of the welfare clause which seems to be now prevalent is warranted, then this ceases to be a Government of limitations and restrictions, and becomes a Government of unlimited authority and power.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I thank the gentleman very much, and, without further arguing that question, I hope I shall never vote for a measure that shows on its face that it is unconstituional. A number of gentlemen seem to forget that when we vote away hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars that the money we vote away here must be earned somewhere. A tax is imposed on the people by the Federal Government, or else it is a tax imposed by the State, and whether the State spends the money for the care of their people, or the Federal Government, it must be earned. Gentlemen here say they favor this legislation because it gives the Federal Government the right to take the lead in this great humanitarian problem. I want to ask, Is it possible that the States have no more initiative and no more capacity to take the lead in humanitarianism, and must we come to the Federal Government to lead us as helpless children? Gentlemen, I want to ask, if this law is enacted, where is the limit of like laws in the future? Absolutely there is none. There is no justice in taking care of a cripple injured on a farm and not taking care of one who has been born crippled or who was crippled elsewhere. One farmer has a plow run away with by his team and is injured; another farmer is riding to town and is thrown from his horse and is injured. The one is as much a burden upon his community as the other. One is as much a subject of care and humanitarian care as the other. This bill would take care of one and not the other. This legislation picks out a certain class. If I should vote for any such unconstitutional legislation, I would, at least, make it uniform and universal. I would apply it to all who were crippled. The time may come when we should pass old-age pension laws, the time may come when we should pass laws to care for all the helpless, to build houses to take care of them, and when we should pass laws to care for the sick and to build hospitals to take care of them. If we do reach that time, I trust the States will pass the laws. Is it possible that the State is going to abandon all its functions? We have asserted State rights and clung to them. The time has come when we should assert and perform State obligations and duties. [Applause.] The fact is by shirking State duties we are losing State rights, and every man who votes for a measure which puts an arm into the Treasury of the United States to take out money and pay for something that the State ought to do—because, as it was stated here, he is afraid to go before the State legislature and tax the taxpayers of his own State with the burden—is voluntarily, consciously or unconsciously, surrendering the whole of the doctrine that, on our side of the aisle at least, we have always professed to adhere to. There is nothing in the world in this bill to justify it that would not justify any expenditure of money for any benevolent purpose in any State, county, or precinct all over the broad area of the United States. In addition to that, this bill picks out certain classes—industrial classes, farming classes. Why should the charity of the Government be extended to one class more than another.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If we are to help the poverty stricken and helpless, let us not be partial. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Were not the sufferers of the Galveston flood a particular class of our people who received aid from the Federal Government?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. We have by one precedent after another extended aid and in many instances refused to extend aid. In cases of great calamity we have used Army tents and other property, and I think outside of that we have in a few instances overridden the Constitution under urgent appeals to our sympathy, but that kind of admittedly unjustifiable legislation ought not to be made and can not be made any justification for permanent legislation of that kind. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, we have provided very properly for the rehabilitation of persons disabled in war. That work is to be done by the Federal Board for Vocational Education. That board's work will end and it must go out of existence when they have given such training as they can to our maimed and wounded soldiers, but under this bill that board will not only be made permanent but it will grow in the number of its employees and the money it spends from year to year. Not many years hence it will be spending hundreds of millions of dollars, and be the established precedent for the establishment of more and more bureaus to spend more and more millions of tax money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I am absolutely opposed to the consideration of this legislation at this time. In fact, I am absolutely opposed to giving more power or money to a board where there is at least very grave and serious doubt whether they are able to perform at the present time the duties that have already been imposed upon them or expend the money already granted them in a capable and efficient manner. We had day before yesterday about a four hours' hearing in regard to this Federal Vocational Rehabilitation Board. There are the hearings—of course, it is impossible to place them before the House, as they have not been printed, but I am absolutely sure that if every Member of this House would read those hearings and see the charges that have been made by creditable persons in regard to the inability of this board to perform the duties already imposed upon them, you would not be willing at this time to impose double duties on the same board or grant them any more money. I am absolutely——

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I can not. If this were a private matter or a business proposition, we would never consider for a single moment the extending of the functions of a board or bureau until we had succeeded in getting it better organized, better established, and better able to cope with the conditions confronting it than this board has been able to do up to the present time. I am also opposed to considering this legislation at the present time on the ground that while it may be desirable legislation it is certainly not necessary legislation, and as it authorizes appropriations it is no time to consider it when we take into consideration the condition of the Public Treasury. Every man in this House, when you talk to him in the lobby or in his office or anywhere else, will say that we must not pass any appropriations unless they are absolutely necessary at the present time; that they do not believe in passing any measures except those that are absolutely essential to carry on the present activities of the Government, and they desire to decrease rather than increase them. There is no demand from any part of the country that we should create additional boards or give additional privileges and money to boards already established, and for that reason it is inopportune to even consider such legislation at this time. Now, the gentlemen who are the proponents of this bill keep referring to the soldiers' rehabilitation act.

That has absolutely nothing to do with this act. The Government was under obligation to take care of its soldiers. The other is merely a desirable thing on the part of the Government. Let the various States do their own work in this line and not put everything up to the Federal Government. Let the States assume this obligation and take care of their dependent just a the Government at the present time is taking care of its soldiers. Especially is this true when up to the present time the Government has not been able to do what is absolutely obligatory upon it, to say nothing about entering this new and much broader field. This bill only carries an initial authorization of $500,000. It must be matched by $500,000 by the individual States. Now, let us see what that means. From the testimony before the Committee on Appropriations and also before the Committee on Rules the other day it costs from $1,200 to $1,800 to educate or rehabilitate an individual man, while this bill only provides about six or seven dollars per man. Not enough under present conditions to get the names of the men, to say nothing about what must be done later.

Testimony was offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], I believe, that there were about 300,000 industrial cripples in the country at the present time. On the basis of what it has cost the Federal Government to rehabilitate these soldiers, it would cost for this new scheme $30,000,000 for the first year, and we are making appropriations of $1,000,000, or about 3 per cent of what it will cost if we go into it to the extent as provided for in this bill.

Now, as I look at this proposition, this is merely a "starter," and it is going to cost millions upon millions before it is ever carried out and go much further than most of us expect. I think before we enter upon this wider field we should fulfill our obligations to the soldiers and see how much that is going to cost. And when this board is able to function, able to do the work that is asked of it, it will be plenty of time for us to enter into the wider field and take up the rehabilitation of the industrial cripples of the country. I believe the time is now here for Congress to stop, look, and listen before it makes any appropriations that are not absolutely necessary. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], a member of the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, it has been asserted that this bill is a paternalistic measure, and such assertion is true. Ordinarily I would be opposed to every species of paternalistic legislation.

Mr. HERSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret exceedingly that I can not yield to the gentleman from Maine. I have only five minutes, and am sorry that I have not the time.

This bill does not seek to aid persons who have already lived their full 65 years, in full possession of all their faculties, and endowed with full mental and physical strength and vigor, but who failed during the period of their maximum earning capacity to save up out of their annual income and lay aside sufficient to take care of them in their old age; but this proposed legislation seeks to make over, rehabilitate, and restore to full earning capacity, in so far as education and training makes possible, the young man who has not yet reached the prime of life, and, in many cases, even the young man who has not yet reached his majority, but who, by having suffered a physical injury, has been deprived of the chance to live as you and I live and whose life has been made purposeless, disconsolate, and without hope.

Every crippled human looks through the glass of life darkly. Just how darkly, neither you nor I are in a position to know, unless we have experienced and suffered the same or a similar affliction. It is said that a parent who has never lost a child is not in a position to adequately sympathize with the father or mother whose child has been taken. And I submit that we Members of Congress who are in full possession of our faculties, and who have never suffered physical injury, who have perfect our hands and arms, our feet and legs, our eyes to see, who can walk and run and jump as we will, are not in a position to see through the eyes of the cripple, destitute of funds and property, looking the cold world squarely in the face without backing or assistance, and in competition with it must earn his daily bread.

It was my misfortune while in college, through an accident in a football game, to walk upon crutches for six long months, during which time, through my own efforts keeping books at night for a mercantile firm, I was earning my own current expenses, and I would then have been willing gladly to have forfeited half my life to be restored to my former physique. Not until I saw others running when I could not did I fully appreciate the boon and blessing of being whole physically. During this short experience I then made up my mind that in life I would never let an opportunity pass to assist in every way possible all human beings so unfortunate as to be crippled. This is the moving influence which makes me in this case overlook and waive the paternalistic phase of this bill, and makes me willing to vote for it, provided its announced purpose is not changed and it is properly amended in one vital and necessary particular.

Since this debate began day before yesterday it transpires that this bill will not do that which we expected from its announced purpose in lines 7 and 8 on page 1, wherein it states that the cripples for whom it is to provide rehabilitation are those "who are without sufficient means to provide for their own rehabilitation and their return to civil employment," leading us to believe that the beneficiaries of this legislation are the destitute cripples of our land.

Yet, when opening this discussion last Thursday, the chairman of the committee, the distinguished educator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], stated that in order to obtain the training provided for in this bill it would be necessary for the disabled persons to pay for same, whereupon—on page 6656, column 2—the gentleman from Michigan propounded the following question:

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Suppose he did not have money enough to go to school?
Mr. FESS. He would be unfortunate, that is all.

Hence, the present situation indicates that this bill must be amended if its expressed purpose of rehabilitating destitute cripples is to be carried ou.

In this connection I desire to call the chairman's attention to the fact that the only provision in this bill attempting to specify to whom the courses of training shall be open and available is subdivision (5) of the first section, which, at top of page 4 of the bill, reads:

That all courses for vocational rehabilitation given under the supervision and control of the State board and all courses for vocational rehabilitation maintained shall be available, under such rules and regulations as the Fderal board shall prescribe, to any civil employee of the United States disabled while in the performance of his duty.

When the bill is read for amendments I shall offer the following amendment, so as to carry out the original intent of the measure, to wit:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: On page 4, line 1, beginning with the word "that," strike out all of the balance of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The vocational rehabilitation provided for herein shall be given under the supervision and control of the State board, and all courses shall be available, under such rules and regulations as the Federal board shall prescribe, to all persons, in such destitute circumstances that they are financially unable to provide their own rehabilitation, disabled in industrial pursuits, including agriculture, trade, commerce, manufacturing, mining, transportation, all mechanic arts, and to civil employees of the United States disabled while in the performance of their duty: Provided, That persons who have received compensation for injuries and other disabled persons who are able to pay for same may be given rehabilitation training upon paying reasonable tuition therefor."

Clearly this amendment should be adopted. Unless it is adopted or this defect is otherwise remedied, I can not support the measure.

Then again, Mr. Chairman, I believe that all of section 5 should be stricken from the bill, and I shall offer such an amendment at the proper time.

It has been repeatedly stated that the only function of the Federal board under this bill will be to apportion and pay over the money to the various States. At the time we first considered the soldiers' rehabilitation bill I took the position that in that we should make provision for destitute industrial cripples, as with very little additional overhead it could be done. All of the research and investigations made by the Federal board with respect to the soldiers is equally applicable to the industrial cripple, and in section 5 we are merely duplicating this expense when it is entirely unnecessary. The appropriations provided for in section 5 are wholly unnecessary, for the Federal board has sufficient machinery already, and whatever further money we spend should be spent directly upon the cripples themselves. I sincerely hope that the chairman will see fit to accept this amendment, for this avenue of waste should be eliminated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 17 minutes remaining.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to be advised when I have consumed seven minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is entirely agreed that notwithstanding the fact we have appropriated money for vocational education and for the rehabilitation of our soldiers who have been crippled in the war, that this is an entirely new departure. And I wish to deny the right of the Congress of the United States to appropriate money for this particular purpose, notwithstanding the fact that they may have appropriated money for vocational education.

Why, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who last addressed us, stated that because he was unfortunate in his youth and knows what it is to have suffered in his early years, he made up his mind that he would give his consent to a Federal appropriation to help the cripples. There is no duty resting upon the Federal Government to rehabilitate men who are crippled in private enterprise. [Applause.] And there is nobody who has yet pointed to a line or a word of the Federal Constitution warranting any such action as that.

Why, gentlemen, legislation such as this will be hailed with glee by that element now within our borders who were raided the other day in the great city of New York, that branch of society that prefer to be known as the "Reds"; who believe that they owe the Government nothing, but that the Government owes them everything, even to furnishing them free doctors and free women. And this is setting a precedent that will justify legislation in the future to furnish free doctors to the children of the land, to take money from the Federal Treasury every time they are attacked with the whooping cough or the measles.

I say the duty rests upon the 48 States of this Union and the various municipalities within those States to take care of the men who have become so unfortunate as to have been crippled in industry.

Now, who is it that favors this? Well, I assume that if this great labor conference that has been called by the Chief Executive and is now attempting to organize in Washington could begin to function that possibly they might be able to get a resolution through favoring some such legislation, because I assume Mr. Samuel Gompers, as the spokesman of labor, has no objection to the great industrial States of the Union furnishing over one-half of the money that will go into the Federal Treasury to be expended for this purpose. I assume that this organization in the great West, which seems to be growing and increasing in number, and which is only a few steps removed from the principles which have brought Russia crashing down over the heads of the people—I refer to the Nonpartisan League—favors some such idea as this. I say that after we have come out from a great war, with a tremendous burden of debt that is to meet us in the future, we should not at this time embark upon this journey.

Ah, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], the distinguished leader of this side, said that he had learned a great deal in 20 years. I know one thing that the gentleman from Wyoming has learned in 20 years, and that is if the States refuse to perform the duties that rest upon them it is pretty easy to get Uncle Sam to take up that burden and pay the expenses that ought to be borne by the individual States and the communities that go to make them up.

Why, sir, this is but getting the camel's nose under the tent. A million dollars!—the gentleman from Wyoming says, "A mere paltry sum." I say we ought not, by conferring this extra jurisdiction upon the Federal Vocational Board, to say to the soldiers of the country, the crippled and the maimed who went across the ocean to make the supreme sacrifice if necessary—I say we ought not to say to those boys in the Army and Navy, "We are satisfied with what the Vocational Educational Board has done for such of your number as have needed aid from the Federal Treasury through this board; we approve of the administration they have given as touching the improvement of the crippled soldier, and therefore we will enlarge the jurisdiction of that board and have it take care of the farmer who falls off his horse or his laborer who tumbles out of a haymow."

Why, Mr. Chairman, if we embark upon these measures there is no limit to the jurisdiction which the Federal Vocational Board will be asking of this Congress. This appeal is made simply and solely from them, because there is no great demand from any of the States of this Union, from any of these 284,000 cripples; there is no great demand that Uncle Sam should come to their aid. The State of Alabama, I understand, has a large number of cripples within her borders. Why does not Alabama and the cities and towns of Alabama go to the rescue and to the aid of those men? And why should Ohio and Illinois and New York and Massachusetts and Pennsylvania be called upon to contribute to the Federal Treasury for their aid? Because those five States will pay into the Federal Treasury more than one-third, and nearly one-half, of the revenue by direct taxation.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman has asked why Alabama should call upon other States to help in taking care of her cripples. I want to state to the gentleman that so far as my part of Alabama is concerned, nearly all of its cripples were injured in the service of great corporations, the owners of which live in the States which the gentleman has named, and who are able to live there because they derived great profits out of the labor of these men who have been injured in their service in my State.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman want the industry taken away and have the people refuse to work in Alabama simply because the owners live in some other State, or does the gentleman want those owners to move from the other States to Alabama? Which does the gentleman desire?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The industry is a partnership in which the people of the various States are interested, together with the people of my own State. The care of the cripples maimed in the industry should also be a partnership—a joint interest of the people of the various States. Why should Alabama bear the whole burden?

Mr. WALSH. The law of partnership does not apply to operations of the Federal Government under the Constitution of the United States. These 48 States can not escape their responsibility simply because somebody owns an industry in a particular State and sees fit to reside in some other State. Why, in many of the industrial States of this Union. States that have become great, they are now providing for group insurance that is borne by the various industries, to which the men themselves are not called upon to contribute. In many of the other States we have workmen's compensation laws that take care of these various things; and if those States can pass those laws, why can not all and each of the 48 States pass similar laws and administer them? Why should we say, "Uncle Sam, you are partly responsible and you must be held for contributions in aid of these men, because Alabama or Texas or some other State has not passed a law to do it"?

I submit again to this committee in all seriousness that we ought not at this time, with the burden of debt that is facing us, embark upon this policy, even with the "paltry appropriation of $1,000,000." [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen who are opposing this bill either do not understand it or deliberately misrepresent it. You can not arrive at any other conclusion. Gentlemen assume here—all of those who are opposed to this bill—that the Vocational Board are to administer this bill. The Vocational Board are not to administer this bill. This is not a bill for the administration of the Vocational Board. This bill is for the purpose of aiding and stimulating the States. The Vocational Board will not have anything to do with a single industrial cripple, in so far as his education is concerned, except in the apportionment of these funds. This law is to be administered exclusively under the supervision and control of the State boards.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. TOWNER. No; I can not yield, Mr. Chairman, because I have no time to yield.

That is one of the assumptions that is not borne out by the facts. Now, then, that of course makes it absolutely inapplicable as a ground of objection to this bill. Again, they say this board is incompetent for the administration of the act. The board will not attempt to administer it. It has no business except merely to see to the distribution of the funds and to see that they are properly administered. It will not add one single particle of work to the present operative work of the board.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If this Educational Board is not going to administer this, who is?

Mr. TOWNER. Let me state to the gentleman from Missouri this fact: The present Vocational Board administers absolutely and in its entirety, and has absolute administrative power and executive power with regard to the application of the work to the individual soldier. The Vocational Board with regard to this has nothing to do except to distribute the funds.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; and it is placed exclusively under the control of the States, just as the vocational act is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What are these fellows, on page 8, with big salaries going to do?

Mr. TOWNER. They will have, of course, the duty of apportioning this sum and seeing that the funds are properly administered. That is all the duties they have to perform.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will you fellows accept an amendment to strike these fellows out of this bill?

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, I do not think they should be stricken out, but I think some of the salaries might be reduced to the betterment of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. TOWNER. I can not yield all my time, I will say to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. All right.

Mr. TOWNER. Gentlemen here say that there is no power in the General Government to grant this money. I have heard that said time and again. If that is the case, then for at least 75 years of the life of this Government we have been continually passing appropriation acts that were unconstitutional. It is too late to raise that proposition. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] said on the floor here that we were now spending $26,000,000 a year for education. They argue it is unconstitutional. You can not lay your finger on the provision of the Constitution that they say will justify it. On the contrary, gentlemen, long years ago we commenced by giving the public lands of the United States to the States for their schools. What power of the Constitution did we have to do that? Later we passed the bill which established the land-grant colleges, and gave them large grants of land from the United States, throughout the Nation. What power did we have to do that? Later we continued and now continue to the present day to give these colleges money from the Public Treasury. What power have we to do that, year by year, and every year? And now they say we are spending $26,000,000. They say it is constitutional to expend $26,000,000 already appropriated by those gentlemen who are now opposing this bill; but when a new proposition for education comes up, it is unconstitutional and you can not find any power in the Constitution. Ah, gentlemen, that will hardly be an answer to the general demand in this country for this legislation.

Gentlemen say that the only people who will be pleased by the passage of this bill will be the Bolshevist laborites. Gentlemen, if there is any justification or excuse for the Bolshevist laborites in this country, it is because we have not done our duty to the legitimate interests of labor in this country. [Applause.]

And now, when we can do something that will be of benefit to them, gentlemen come here and say, "Oh, you must not do this, because it will encourage Bolshevism." Ah, it is the very best cure for Bolshevism that could be suggested, and, in my judgment, the only cure.

Let us see what this means: It does not mean, as gentlemen assume—and that is another assumption—that this is a charitable institution to take care of these men. No such proposition is suggested. These boards in the States assume to take care of them. The State compensation laws assume to take care of them. This has nothing to do with that. This simply says, as an economic proposition, as a humanitarian proposition, if a man is injured in industry so that he becomes at once a burden to his family and the State, if we can give him a few weeks or months of education and put him back in the productive class, so that he can again become a self-supporting American citizen, then we have done something for the Nation and the State, and the Nation has an interest in maintaining its citizenship and making them self-supporting. That is the proposition that we have involved in this case; but it is something that has not yet been done.

Gentlemen say, "If you embark on this enterprise, that means it will be constantly increasing." It will not. Experience shows that it is not necessary. It has not been necessary to increase the funds under the Smith-Hughes Act. It is not proposed to increase the funds. The fact is that, once having set in operation this proposition and this scheme as we did the others, then it will be carried on from year to year with increasing appropriations by the States that will make it unnecessary for the General Government to make further additional appropriations; and I believe it will not be long before we will be able to cease making Federal appropriations entirely.

Now, I want to call attention to one other great mistake. Gentlemen say we will have to take care of 300,000 cripples. There is no proposition of that kind before you. It is estimated that there are now in existence in the United States 300,000 men who have been injured in industry; but a very small proportion of them need assistance. Let me tell you how that works out: There are 74,000 men injured in industry in the United States every year, but 52,000 out of the 74,000 have lost only one finger and 9,000 more have lost only two fingers. Now, these men do not have to be reeducated. As a matter of fact, less than 14,000 out of the 74,000 will ever or can ever make application for industrial training—for rehabilitation to put them back into industry. A large proportion of them go back voluntarily. They do not need any further training.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. For a brief question.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. I should like a concrete statement of how one of these crippled men can get into the school you speak of?

Mr. TOWNER. This goes to the States, which have already, under the vocational-training act, established schools to which people in those States are sent for vocational training. All they have to do is to send them to schools already established. The expense, so far as that is concerned, will be very small.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. Supposing a man who is crippled has not any money with which to pay his expenses at this school where the tuition is free?

Mr. TOWNER. In all probability that man will be taken care of by the State.

Now, gentlemen, just a word about the amount of money that is required. My colleague from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] puts practically the whole responsibility of maintaining the fiscal independence of this country upon the Board of Vocational Education. Gentlemen, after all it is only a question of what money will be spent and for what purposes. Gentlemen, in your own experience have you ever heard in your community one single man, be he ever so niggardly and stingy, complain about the taxes that he has to pay for schools? He would not dare do it. There is only one class of taxes and expenditures that are not criticized in the United States to-day, and they are the expenditures for education. If gentlemen want to justify their conduct for what they do here, they can not do better than to go before their constituents and say, "I helped to take care of the industrial cripples and place them again in the list of self-supporting citizens of the United States." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I wish I had an hour or an hour and a half to talk about this bill, but I have five minutes and can not cover much ground in that time. Under the five-minute rule, as the bill is read for amendment, I can get time now and then, and I will have something more to say about it. I am against this bill. [Applause.] The gods help those who help themselves. If there is one danger that we are running upon with more than railroad speed in the United States, it is in making the Government, especially the United States Government, and the State government as well, the guardian of everybody. [Applause.] The result is it begets inefficiency. In my judgment, the best manhood North and South, on the average, was when with 3,000,000 people we won our independence, greatly increased until we now have 110,000,000 people—the best manhood that we ever had in this country was when this Government was in its formation and when you were making the States and when the people were self-reliant. [Applause.]

I am not concerned, gentlemen—I have said it before and I may enlarge upon it under the five-minute rule in considering the merits of this bill—I am not concerned for the man or the woman or the child that has to live by the sweat of their faces. It breeds good manhood, its breeds good womanhood. I would like to have the men listening to me now stand up and say what they did. Take my friend from Texas, take the Texas delegation, take the Illinois delegation, you are here in Congress, but did you make your own way? You can not confer efficiency upon somebody. On the average—and we legislate for the average—the weak, feeble-minded, the man that is incapable of laboring, and the woman and the child, are cared for by the States right on the ground by and through local self-government, and very well cared for, with insane asylums and hospitals. Now you propose to care for them by the United States under an organization that has spent a million dollars since it was organized for the purpose of giving vocational education to our returned soldiers. It is stated has spent a million dollars, and what have they done for vocational education? It is stated in this paper—I do not know whether it is right or not—that there are two soldiers who have been given employment under this organization to one member of the vocational board. And it has cost a million dollars already. Now, let me tell you I have great respect, gentlemen, for the school-teachers, I have great respect for the college professors, for the college presidents, I have great respect for the men that have vision, vision, vision, while the rest of us do not have vision.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. CANNON. I was going to say that nine-tenths of the people that have vision are visionaries. [Laughter and applause.] They dream this, that, and the other. Beginning with Germany, they are responsible for the present condition of the world. Germany was wonderfully efficient; Germany had colleges, scientists, and visionaries, and they got up a propaganda and spread it over the earth. We see the results. Now you say, do you want to kill off the college professors? Nay, nay, I do not want to do that, but I do not want all the visionaries to overthrow our form of government. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BURROUGHS].

Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Chairman, the gods help those who help themselves, says the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and I am sure that we all agree with that sentiment. But how about the man who can not help himself. Who helps him? How about the man who, through no fault of his own, has lost the means of taking care of himself? How about the man, like that poor fellow who came, or rather was brought, into my law office a year or two ago—I remember it well—who, through no fault of his own, had had both legs cut off at the body? Who is going to take care of him? Now, that is the sort of man, that is the sort of case, Mr. Chairman, that this bill is designed to help.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURROUGHS. No; I would like to yield to the gentleman, but I have only five minutes. This is a good bill and it ought to pass.

As stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], chairman of the committee, this bill in substantially its present form passed the Senate without a dissenting vote on June 21 last. It comes into the House with the unanimous report of the members of the Committee on Education. It is, in my judgment, one of the most meritorious measures that we have been called upon to consider at this session of Congress. It ought to receive, and I sincerely trust it will receive, substantially the unanimous support of this House on both sides of the Chamber.

Consider for a moment the situation which makes this legislation necessary.

From testimony appearing in the printed joint hearings before the Senate and House committees it was shown that each year there are more than 2,000,000 industrial accidents in this country, resulting in loss of time, and more than 700,000 where inability to work extends through a period of at least four weeks. The representative of the National Association of Manufacturers of the country, representing more than 4,000 manufacturing concerns, stated at the hearings that if any value at all could be placed upon human life, the cost of industrial accidents in this country would be found to amount to $2,000,000,000 a year. That is one-third of all the deposits in all the savings banks in the United States. The hearings also showed that at the present time there are between 200,000 and 300,000 industrial cripples in the country who are permanently disabled to a degree equal to 50 per cent and more. The average age at which such injuries are received is said to be between 30 and 33 years; in other words, at a time when the injured person has a right to assume that he has 20 or 25 years at least of his working life ahead of him. Conservative estimates made by those who were in position to speak with authority were to the effect that there were not less than 15,000 persons substantially totally disabled in industrial pursuits in this country every year.

Now, the purpose of this bill is to reeducate and rehabilitate these injured persons. We want to take them off the scrap heap where they have been thrown as a part of the wreckage of humanity and put them back into productive industry. We want to take away their dependency upon relatives and upon society and make them once again self-supporting, self-respecting members of the community. The bill is a conservation measure, a reclamation measure, as well as a great humane, patriotic, and far-sighted measure.

Two main arguments have been urged against it—

First, that the particular agency designated in the bill through which Federal functions are to be performed has not proved itself to be an efficient agency in the performance of other similar functions; and

Second, that the plan involves the expenditure of a lot of money, and that under present circumstances the Government can not afford to embark upon such an enterprise.

Neither of these arguments, in my judgment, should influence Members to vote against this bill.

The Federal Board for Vocational Education is now administering the funds provided by the Smith-Hughes Act, which established the system of vocational education in this country. It is doing that in cooperation with State agencies substantially as is provided in the terms of this bill. This board is also administering the law passed in 1917 for the rehabilitation of disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines. This latter function it is performing without reference to the States because that was and is conceived to be solely a Federal function.

Whatever criticism has been made by the Federal Board for Vocational Education has, I believe, been confined almost entirely to its administration of the law providing for the rehabilitation of disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines. Under that law this board has entire administrative and executive control. It makes all investigations, determines who should and who should not receive benefits under the act, and provides the necessary instruction to those found entitled to the benefits of the act.

Under this bill the functions of this board will be almost entirely supervisory. Certain moneys are to be provided by the Federal Government for this work and this money is to be apportioned among the several States according to population and provided that certain conditions specified in the bill are complied with by all the States. Of course, it is necessary that there should be some Federal agency to supervise the administration of this act and see to it that the conditions specified are met by each of the States desiring Federal aid.

Even granting all that has been said in criticism of this board in conection with the soldiers' rehabilitation act, where it has full administrative and executive control, it does not follow by any means that this board may not perform with entire satisfaction and complete success all duties imposed upon it in this bill, as, indeed, it appears to have performed with entire satisfaction and with complete success all similar duties imposed upon it under the terms of the original Federal vocational act.

If the Federal board is not efficient as at present organized it is entirely possible to force a reorganization of this board. Perhaps that ought to be done. I am frank to say that I am not well enough acquainted with the facts to state positively at this time whether it ought to be done or ought not to be done. But whatever the fact may be in that regard, the shortcomings of this board ought not to prejudice or delay the passage of this wise and beneficent legislation.

To those who say that we can not afford to appropriate the money provided in this bill my answer is that we can not afford not to appropriate it. [Applause.]

I believe I am just as anxious to economize, to cut down expenditures, and to save money for the Government at this time as is any Member of this House. I realize the need, I may say the absolute necessity, of the strictest economy under present circumstances, but I am supporting this bill because I believe it is in the interest of true economy. I am supporting this bill because I believe it is not only a humane proposition but because it is a first-rate business proposition as well. If I can make two blades of grass grow where only one grew before I consider that good economy and good business. If by spending $1 I can save $10 I am not only willing but glad to do it, even in the present condition of the national finances. That is just what I understand this bill is designed to do. Here are from 200,000 to 300,000 persons in the country to-day who, unless some training of this sort is given them, are not only not producing anything but are actually a burden to their relatives, to society, and to themselves.

Take a pencil and paper and figure for yourselves what it is costing right now to support these 200,000 persons. Even at $5 a week, and they can not be supported in the almshouses for less than that, it would, as I figure it, amount up to the enormous sum of $50,000,000; and remember, too, that many of these people have families that must also be cared for. Remember, too, that this is not simply for one year but that it is going on year after year. Remember, too, that this does not take into account the economic loss due to inability to work, and consequent loss of wages, which would mount up to hundreds of millions of dollars more.

By this bill we are seeking to eliminate this enormous, this appalling economic waste. Enough has been accomplished already under the soldiers' and sailors' rehabilitation act to demonstrate some of the possibilities along this line. We know that at least some of this wreckage can be salvaged. We know that a fair proportion of persons supposed to be totally disabled can be restored to be self-respecting, self-supporting members of societies. We know that the Nation as well as the State is vitally concerned in this problem of the conservation of its man power. When the opportunity presents itself, as it is now presented, to save not less than $50,000,000 a year—and it probably would be after a few years many times that amount—by the expenditure of a half a million or a million dollars annually, it seems to me this is not only good philanthropy but good business as well. I sincerely hope the bill will pass. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. WALSH (interrupting the count). Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and who are without sufficient means to provide for their own rehabilitation and their return to civil employment there is hereby appropriated for the use of the States, subject to the provisions of this act, for the purpose of cooperating with them in the maintenance of vocational rehabilitation of such disabled persons, and in returning vocationally rehabilitated persons to civil employment, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the sum of $500,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the sum of $750,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and annually thereafter, the sum of $1,000,000. Said sums shall be allotted to the States in the proportion which their population bears to the total population of the United States, not including Territories, outlying possessions, and the District of Columbia, according to the last preceding United States census: Provided, That the allotment of funds to any State shall not be less than a minimum of $5,000 for any fiscal year. And there is hereby appropriated the following sums, or so much thereof as may be needed, which shall be used for the purpose of providing the minimum allotment to the States provided for in this section, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the sum of $66,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the sum of $46,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and annually thereafter, the sum of $34,000.

All moneys expended under the provisions of this act from appropriations provided by section 1 shall be upon the condition (1) that for each dollar of Federal money expended there shall be expended in the State under the supervision and control of the State board at least an equal amount for the same purpose: Provided, That no portion of the appropriation made by this act shall be used by any institution for handicapped persons except for the special training of such individuals entitled to the benefits of this act as shall be determined by the Federal board; (2) that the State board shall annually submit to the Federal board for approval plans showing (a) the kinds of vocational rehabilitation and schemes of placement for which it is proposed the appropriation shall be used; (b) the plan of administration and supervision; (c) courses of study; (d) methods of instruction; (e) qualification of teachers, supervisors, directors, and other necessary administrative officers or employees; (f) plans for the training of teachers, supervisors, and directors; (3) that the State board shall make an annual report to the Federal board on or before September 1 of each year on the work done in the State and on the receipts and expenditures of money under the provisions of this act; (4) that no portion of any moneys appropriated by this act for the benefit of the States shall be applied, directly or indirectly, to the purchase, preservation, erection, or repair of any building or buildings or equipment, or for the purchase or rental of any lands; (5) that all courses for vocational rehabilitation given under the supervision and control of the State board and all courses for vocational rehabilitation maintained shall be available, under such rules and regulations as the Federal board shall prescribe, to any civil employee of the United States disabled while in the performance of his duty.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This is the sort of bill that appeals to the sensibilities of men. It is liable to appeal to their sensibilities with such force as to override their judgment. It is a great pity that everyone who is crippled can not be repaired. It is a great pity that everyone who is sick can not be taken care of. Such duties should be discharged by States, counties, and municipalities, but not by the United States Government, for it is not an eleemosynary institution. One trouble under which we labor in Congress to-day is that the State governments have practically abdicated their functions—dodged their duties—and everything is loaded onto Congress. I have been here long enough to see that bad habit grow most portentously. Some of these days, if I do not quit lecturing, and I think I will quit, I intend to prepare a lecture on the compromises of the Constitution, taking them up seriatim. They made one logrolling arrangement that is costing this Government untold millions of dollars, and that was that the Federal Government should have control of interstate commerce, if they would let the African slave trade run, until 1908. The abuse of that interstate commerce clause—making it a pack horse for the universe—is largely the reason why Congress is almost in perpetual session in these latter days.

Everyone comes to Uncle Sam to get some of his money. He seems to be regarded as a general Santa Claus. We have come to a pretty pass. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says—and he ought to know something about it—that there is going to be a deficiency in the revenues of this Government this year of $3,500,000,000. Why go on rolling up that deficiency? The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] says that it will cost only a million dollars. Of course, we have got so that we think in billions, unfortunately, and a million dollars, which to the fathers was a very large sum, is to us a mere bagatelle. Until within a few years we thought in thousands, occasionally rising to millions. Every dollar that is appropriated means sweat and toil and labor somewhere, and you are loading up the backs of the taxpayers in this country until they are cracking and about to break. It is said by the proponents of this bill that the United States Government gives only a dollar where the State gives another dollar. Where does the United States Government get its dollar? Out of the taxpayers. Where does the State get its dollar? Out of the taxpayers, and the taxes are high enough now, and every man in the House who has three ideas above a Hottentot is devoting his thoughts to how to cut down these tax bills, and if we do not cut them down these places that know us now will know us no more forever. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] undertakes to bolster up this thing upon the ground that years ago we gave away vast parcels of land for educational purposes. That was all right. It was given away and it worked a good purpose. Uncle Sam had land then to give, while to-day he has not a 160-acre tract left in the United States that is fit for cultivation unless it is doctored up in some way by irrigation or drainage, and I am in favor of both. When I was a child my father used to put me to sleep with a song—

Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a farm.

And it was God Almighty's truth then, but it is not now. The United States Government never had a dollar of its own in its life, except the result of proceeds of public lands. It has no estate. Neither had the State of Missouri or the State of Illinois or any other of these States. This bill is not on all fours with the acts giving land for education in the days that are done. The situation has changed radically. While the purpose underlying this bill, it is true, is good—and nobody sympathizes with the afflicted more than I—we ought to leave something for individual initiative and something for State action. For instance, any man in this country who will allow his children to grow up bowlegged ought to be put in the penitentiary or in an insane asylum. It is easy to cure, and yet walking down the street yesterday I saw a man in front of me and the biggest hog in the State of Missouri could have run between his legs and never touched them at all. A very simple operation in infancy or childhood would have cured his deformity. Bowlegs should be straightened, but I humbly submit that it is not Uncle Sam's duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why do not parents take care of that thing instead of coming to the Congress of the United States to have bowlegs and other afflictions like that cured? We have got to cut down these appropriation bills. I was in favor of the soldier's vocational education bill because we will never be able to repay the debt that we owe the men who fought for the flag of the country. [Applause.] But this is not a parallel case at all. Oh, they say, it will only cost a million; but that is a starter, that is the camel's nose under the tent, and you all know it—any of you that are fit to be here know it. I have seen several of these bureaus created since I have been here. I have seen three departments created, and I will tell you how they worked. They will have a little tiny bureau with 5 or 10 or 15 people in it, and the first thing you know it has grown like Jonah's gourd vine, until they have hundreds of them, and it gets to be a great big thing. Then they clamor to be made a department, and there is a bill coming up here some time that proposes to make a Cabinet member of the Commissioner of Education, a secretary of education, and I am against it. The first thing you know they will have as many employees down there in that Bureau of Education as they have in the War Risk Bureau, with its 14,000 employees jostling each other around in each other's way.

I am as much in favor of education as any man who ever lived. I plowed corn and mauled rails and broke rock and cut corn and wormed tobacco in order to get money enough to go to college.

I began to teach school before I was 15. The only qualification I really had was my size [laughter], and down in Kentucky just after the close of the Civil War size went a good piece in the community. [Laughter and applause.] I was president of a college when I was 23 years old down in West Virginia, so I have a right to talk about educational matters. I saw to it that my children both secured good education. My son graduated at or from, or, to use Senator HENRY CABOTT LODGE'S formula, "was graduated from," two or three universities and colleges. Now, if he has as much common sense as he ought to have he will succeed in the world. But whenever that bill comes in here to make a useless department out of the Bureau of Education, I am against it, and I will use every parliamentary means at my command to beat it. The United States Government can not do everything; it is utterly impossible. The best thing for Congress to do would be to pass a resolution here directed to the States advising them to resume their governmental functions [applause] and let us alone. Now, they all "cuss" Congress. It is an open season for Congressmen the year round for these newspapers and magazines. They abuse us with unanimity. Some college professor wrote a whole article in a magazine recently on this budget business, in which he assumed all the way through that if it were not for the departments up here that Congress would be so extravagant and reckless as to vote away the Goddess of Liberty on top of the Capitol. Just the opposite is the truth. If it were not for Congress these departments up here would gobble everything betwixt the two oceans.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Just one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It got so bad, as Mr. Speaker CANNON knows, that we absolutely had to pass a law here making it a criminal offense for the head of a department or bureau to spend more money than Congress appropriated, and these doctrinaires who write these essays about the sins of Congress and the virtues of these departments should be taken out into some cool and sequestered spot and tapped for the simples. [Laughter and applause.]

The milk in this coconut is to create a lot of new fat jobs. The appropriation for the first year is $500,000.

The following part of the bill shows that the salaries of officials absorbs 10 per cent of that as a starter:

No salaries shall be paid out of the fund provided in this section in excess of the following amounts: At the rate of $5,000 per annum, to not more than one person; at the rate of $4,000 per annum each, to not more than four persons; at the rate of $3,500 per annum each, to not more than five persons; and no other employee shall receive compensation at a rate in excess of $2,500 per annum: Provided, That no person receiving compensation at less than $3,500 per annum shall receive in excess of the amount of compensation paid in the regular departments of the Government for like or similar services.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I regret that under the circumstances we can not continue the consideration of this present bill because we have promised at 3 o'clock to make a motion to rise in order to take up some other matter. Therefore I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman permit a parliamentary inquiry for just a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 4438 had come to no resolution thereon.

FOOD PRODUCTS, FUEL, AND RENTS (H. RES. NO. 329).

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 329.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed with the consideration of the conference report agreed upon by the managers on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on H. R. 8624, being an act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food prodcts and fuel," approved August 10, 1917. That all points of order on said conference report shall be considered as waived. That there shall be one hour of debate, to be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the conference report. That at the conclusion of debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the conference report, without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] desires briefly to make a unanimous-consent request, and I yield to him.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I first ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department has decided unanimously that it ought to present a matter to the House as soon as possible, and for that reason I am going now to prefer a unanimous-consent request, and I shall try to express in it the situation as well as I can. The matter we want to discuss with the House and to make plain to the House is in reference to some matters arising out of the plant at Nitro, W. Va., that is about to be sold, or is in process of sale at this time. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the reading of the Journal on Monday next the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department may report to the House verbally on the plant at Nitro, W. Va., and that it may address the House for one hour at that time, the time to be controlled by the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has preferred the request which the House has heard. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois touching the control of the time, if he would not be willing to provide that one half of the time should be controlled by the chairman of the subcommittee on ordnance and the other half by the minority member?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, it was my purpose, Mr. Speaker, to yield to the gentleman from Tennessee and divide time with him. I understand that Mr. JEFFERIS, the other member of our subcommittee on ordnance, does not desire to discuss the matter, and therefore I may say to the gentleman there will be at least no trouble about that. However, Mr. Speaker, it might be necessary for me to discuss this matter a little longer than half an hour. I do not know whether I can finish what I have to say in that time, but in that event I would suggest that it is very likely that we can get additional time from the House, and with that understanding I will concede that what the gentleman from Tennessee asks should be incorporated in the unanimous-consent request. I should like, however, Mr. Speaker, the indulgence of the Members of the House if we find we need to discuss that longer that they will give us more time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies his request so that half an hour shall be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from Tennessee. Is there objection?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, under the rules of the House next Monday is set aside for the consideration of business reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia. It has been several weeks since the committee has had a day in the House, and there are some bills on the calendar of very great importance. So I hope the gentleman from Illinois will be able to find some other day. From what he says it is liable to take a greater part of the afternoon if he brings his matter up. I dislike to object, but I hope the gentleman can find some other day for its consideration.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If the gentleman will yield, I will state very frankly to the House why I think this ought to be brought up now. This sale over there is in progress now. If the House and the people of the country are to be informed about it, this thing will not wait. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, what the situation is as regards the program of the House, but it might be possible that next Tuesday could be set aside for District day, so that the day might be devoted to that; but so far as this is concerned I have not gone to the Rules Committee with it, because I thought very likely the Members of the House would concede us this right to come in on Monday without a rule. I do not want to interfere with the gentleman's work, as I think it is important, but I think it important, too, if we are to make this report, that it be done quickly.

Mr. MAPES. I will say to the gentleman that I consulted a few days ago with the leaders on the majority side, including the Speaker, in regard to bringing up District business on Monday, and it was the consensus of opinion that Monday should be devoted to District business. It seems to me the gentleman could well put his matter over one day. Monday is the regular District day, and I would not feel as though I could consent to having it set aside.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MAPES. I object, Mr. Speaker.

FOOD PRODUCTS, FUEL, AND RENT (H. RES. NO. 329).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the rule I have submitted makes in order the consideration of the conference report on the bill from the Committee on Agriculture.

Some question has arisen about the language of the rule. I do not agree that other language to accomplish the same purpose would be preferable to the language that is used in this rule, but I do agree with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and with others that this is not the proper way to legislate, and that conferees should not be encouraged to bring in legislation in conference reports that has not been considered by either House, but that if it is done it should be done by resolution authorizing the conferees to exceed their authority in advance, rather than in the consideration of the conference report after it has been agreed to under a rule making the objectionable matter in order in the conference report.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question.

Mr. GARD. Can the gentleman imagine more encouragement than to bring in two of these extraordinary rules in two successive days?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I was just approaching that question. The matters under consideration have been hanging in conference for many weeks, and the conferees seem to have been unable to come to a conclusion in harmonizing their differences in any other manner than that in which they have agreed in the report submitted to the House. We are all almost worn to a frazzle. The House is tired; the Senate is tired, and if we keep on the country will be tired of what we are doing. It is important that we conclude our business at the earliest date possible, and it is important that the subject matters considered in this conference report be adjusted before Congress takes a recess or adjourns.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Assuming that what he has just said is exactly the truth, is that any justification for passing legislation at this time and at this moment?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am not justifying the passage of the legislation. I am justifying the right of the House to dispose of the matter one way or the other, and do it finally. The resolution does not commit the House to agree to the conference report. It submits the conference report to the House to be voted upon on its merits. That is what the resolution does that I have just submitted.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, it is characteristic of conferees—and I say this without intending any reflection upon the present conferees—to be entirely satisfied with their work and to seek the method of disposing of it which will be the quickest and which will give them the least difficulty. Hence the declination of the conferees in this case, as in the case that was before the House on yesterday, to take the method of a concurrent resolution, which would give to the House the opportunity to consider the legislation that they propose. For the convenience of the conferees we are asked to take this extraordinary method of passing a rule which prevents the House from considering legislation, in any proper sense of that term, that the conferees have themselves put into this bill. I am opposed to that. It involves a dangerous principle of legislation, and in this particular matter, as a practical proposition, it is worse than even that of yesterday, and for this reason: Let gentlemen recall the history of the legislation which is really in dispute here, namely, the rent legislation applying to the District of Columbia. That has not been before this body in any form for actual consideration. What occurred? The food bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture and passed by the House was sent to the Senate. There, under some sort of peculiar rules, which I do not understand—the gentleman from Missouri, the former Speaker of this House, once expressed it, probably very accurately, when he said that that body had no rules and did not observe what they did have—but under some sort of rule they take up a bill concerning rents in the District of Columbia and put it on an Agricultural bill. That comes back to this body. And what occurs? The amendments are disagreed to informally, theoretically considered, but practically never read to the House. No chance to amend, no opportunity to perfect that legislation. And in that crude form it goes to conference, and the conferees find themselves in a condition where to give vitality and vigor to the very purpose or supposed purpose of the other body they must change the language of that particular bill or that particular part of the bill that was in dispute, and hence were compelled to exceed their authority. Now, what ought to have occurred, Mr. Speaker, was that the conferees should have brought here a concurrent resolution authorizing them to place in the bill the language which they found necessary. I should gladly have voted for a rule to make such a concurrent resolution in order, and thus bring it before the House for consideration under the general rules of the House.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. WELLING. Why did not the House conferees do that very thing and ask for a resolution?

Mr. GARRETT. The only answer I can give to the gentleman is that the conferees were satisfied with their work. It may be good work—and I am saying this without any reflection on the conferees. They were satisfied with their work, and this was a quicker method, in their opinion, to bring about final action upon their proposition.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman seems to level his criticism against the conferees. Primarily it rests against the House. Why was not that sent to the Committee on Agriculture and considered in the House in the first instance? The House took an easier course. The criticism rests primarily on the House and not on the conferees.

Mr. GARRETT. I am not criticizing the conferees in any offensive manner, I trust. What I am criticizing is this particular practice of legislating. If I were one of the conferees I would doubtless be satisfied with their work. But I am pleading for the integrity of legislative procedure; I am pleading for the opportunity of this House to pass upon this legislation in a way that it would have the opportunity to amend it if in its wisdom it thought it was desirable to amend it. That opportunity does not exist here now, because this conference report must be voted up or down as a whole, and there is no chance to place upon this legislation any amendment, however germane it may be or however desirable it may be. Against this sort of policy I protest. I realize that it is futile now, probably, so far as this particular rule is concerned; but I desire to give my support to the notice which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] served upon the House yesterday, which he has reiterated again to-day, and I desire to assure him that he will have my support in the future against rules of this character.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for one minute.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has just stated that this matter has not been given consideration by the House. If any matter has been given consideration by the House, I believe it is the rent proposition. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it has been before this House twice—first, the Saulsbury resolution, and then the amendment thereto, besides the conference report that we had here a week ago.

Mr. GARRETT. I referred to the legislation involved in this particular bill and what has occurred in this Congress. There was nothing the other day except talk. There was no opportunity to amend.

Mr. HAUGEN. The facts are as I stated before. The amendments were hurriedly drawn, and the conferees thought it absolutely necessary to rewrite them in order to accomplish the results desired by the amendments. We have not changed the principle. The principle is the same, but we have clarified the language and made clear just what is desired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, when this bill came over from the Senate with this amendment to it, it should have gone to the Committee on Agriculture, and there the amendment would have been written, so that it would not be subject to a point of order, as it was when it came as a conference report. But I was persuaded not to object to the unanimous request that was made, that it might go to conference instead of to committee, with a view of hastening the bill to early passage.

As I have said on previous occasions, this bill is not all I would have, but I wish to repeat that it is all we are going to get. Delay after delay, running through a year and a half now, has enabled the profiteers to feed upon the Government employees and the public generally in the District of Columbia.

Again, as I said, this bill will either be good or bad, as the commission is good or bad. We can all only hope that it will be good. But I do wish to say in this connection that the profiteers to-day have out their candidates for the places of commissioners that are provided for in this bill. More than that, a citizen from Ohio, who is one of the principal lobbyists against the passage of an antirent profiteering bill, is still busy; he is still knocking at the doors of both Houses of Congress, asking for delay, asking that nothing be done. That is the plan. My judgment is that this rule should be adopted without delay, and then let us have the advantage of the legislation that is in the bill. I repeat, it is not all that I want, but it is something. Every time it has been tinkered with it has been hurt.

I said to you the other day that if this bill were sent back to conference it was reasonably certain that it would come back impaired in some respects, and it has so come back. It has been impaired some little. The conferees, in endeavoring to do justice with a certain condition, have yielded somewhat to it, and in order that they might be induced to yield, one particular instance has been cited to them which has some merit to it, in order to open the gates so that any number of apartment houses and boarding houses may become exempt from the provisions of this law.

I again wish to repeat that the further this thing will go the worse it will get, and to-day we are compelled to make choice between doing away with the alleged sacredness of a rule of the House or to permit profiteering to continue. Which are you going to take? There is no rule so sacred that it may not be suspended momentarily in order that great justice—justice crying almost to heaven—may be done. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Accordingly the Clerk will report the conference report.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I think the report ought to be read. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The conference report was read.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8624) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel,' approved August 10, 1917," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "section 1"; and on page 1, after line 2, of the engrossed bill insert the following:

"That this act may be cited as 'the food control and the District of Columbia rents act.'

"Title I. Food control act amendments."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Title II. District of Columbia rents.

"SEC. 101. When used this title, unless the context indicates otherwise—

"The term 'rental property' means any building or part thereof or land appurtenant thereto in the District of Columbia rented or hired and the service agreed or required by law or by determination of the commission to be furnished in connection therewith, but does not include an hotel or apartment.

"The term 'person' includes an individual, partnership, association, or corporation.

"The term 'hotel' or 'apartment' means any hotel or apartment or part thereof, in the District of Columbia, rented or hired and the land and outbuildings appurtenant thereto, and the service agreed or required by law or by determination of the commission to be furnished in connection therewith.

"The term 'owner' includes a lessor or sublessor, or other person entitled to receive rent or charges for the use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel or apartment, or any interest therein, or his agent.

"The term 'tenant' includes a subtenant, lessee, sublessee or other person, not the owner, entitled to the use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel or apartment.

"The term 'service' includes the furnishing of light, heat, water, telephone or elevator service, furniture, furnishings, window shades, screens, awnings, storage, kitchen, bath and laundry facilities and privileges, maid service, janitor service, removal of refuse, making all repairs suited to the type of building or necessitated by ordinary wear and tear, and any other privilege or service connected with the use or occupancy of any rental property, apartment, or hotel.

"The term 'commission' means the Rent Commission of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 102. A commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the Rent Commission of the District of Columbia, which shall be composed of three commissioners, none of whom shall be directly or indirectly engaged in, or in any manner interested in or connected with, the real estate or renting business in the District of Columbia. The commissioners shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The term of each commissioner shall be two years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he succeeds. The commission shall at the time of its organization and annually thereafter elect a chairman from its own membership. The commission may make such regulations as may be necessary to carry this title into effect.

"All powers and duties of the commission may be exercised by a majority of its members. A vacancy in the commission shall not impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the commission. The commission shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

"SEC. 103. Each commissioner shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year, payable monthly. The commission shall appoint a secretary, who shall receive a salary of $3,000 a year, payable in like manner; and, subject to the provisions of the civil-service laws, it may appoint and remove such officers, employees, and agents and make such expenditures for rent, printing, telegrams, telephone, law books, books of reference, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, and other supplies and expenses as may be necessary to the administration of this title. All of the expenditures of the commission shall upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the commission be audited and paid in the same manner as other expenditures for the District of Columbia.

"With the exception of the secretary, all employees of the commission shall be appointed from lists of eligibles supplied by the Civil Service Commission and in accordance with the civil-service law.

"SEC. 104. The assessor of the District of Columbia shall serve ex officio as an advisory assistant to the commission, but he shall have none of the powers or duties of a commissioner. He shall attend the meetings and hearings of the commission. Every officer or employee of the United States or of the District of Columbia, whenever requested by the commission, shall supply to the commission any data or information pertaining to the administration of this title which may be contained in the records of his office. The assessor shall receive for the performance of the duties required by this section a salary of $1,000 per annum, payable monthly, in addition to such other salary as may be prescribed for his office by law.

"SEC. 105. For the purpose of this title the commission or any officer, employee, or agent duly authorized in writing by it, shall at all reasonable times have access to for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy, any books, accounts, records, papers, or correspondence relating to any matter which the commission is authorized to consider or investigate; and the commission shall have power to require by subpœna the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all such books, accounts, records, papers, and correspondence relating to any such matter. Any member of the commission may sign subpœnas, administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence.

"Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such books, accounts, records, papers, and correspondence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. In case of disobedience to a subpœna or of the contumacy of any witness appearing before the commission, the commission may invoke the aid of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia or of any district court of the United States. Such court may thereupon issue an order requiring the person subpœnaed to obey the subpœna, or to give evidence touching the matter in question. Any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. No officer or employee of the commission shall, unless authorized by the commission or by a court of competent jurisdiction, make public any information obtained by the commission.

"SEC. 106. For the purposes of this title it is declared that all (a) rental property and (b) apartments and hotels are affected with a public interest, and that all rents and charges therefor, all service in connection therewith, and all other terms and conditions of the use or occupancy thereof, shall be fair and reasonable; and any unreasonable or unfair provision of a lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of such rental property, apartment, or hotel with respect to such rents, charges, service, terms, or conditions is hereby declared to be contrary to public policy. The commission upon its own initiative may, or upon complaint shall, determine whether the rent, charges, service, and other terms or conditions of a lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of any such rental property, hotel, or apartment are fair and reasonable. Such complaints may be made (a) by or on behalf of any tenant, and (b) by any owner except where the tenant is in possession under a lease or other contract, the term specified in which has not expired, and the fairness and reasonableness of which has not been determined by the commission.

"In all such cases the commission shall give notice personally or by registered mail and afford an opportunity to be heard to all parties in interest. The commission shall promptly hear and determine the issues involved in all complaints submitted to it. All hearings before the commission shall be open to the public. If the commission determines that such rents, charges, service, or other terms or conditions are unfair or unreasonable, it shall determine and fix such fair and reasonable rent or charges therefor, and / or fair and reasonable service, terms, and conditions of use or occupancy. In any suit in any court of the United States or the District of Columbia involving any question arising out of the relation of landlord and tenant with respect to any rental property, apartment, or hotel, except an appeal from the commission's determination as provided in this title, such court shall determine the rights and duties of the parties in accordance with the determination and regulations of the commission relevant thereto.

"SEC. 107. A determination of the commission fixing a fair and reasonable rent or charge made in a proceeding begun by complaint shall be effective from the date of the filing of the complaint. The difference between the amount of rent and charges paid for the period from the filing of the complaint to the date of the commission's determination and the amount that would have been payable for such period at the fair and reasonable rate fixed by the commission may be added to or subtracted from, as the case demands, future rent payments, or after the final decision of an appeal from the commission's determination may be sued for and recovered in an action in the municipal court of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 108. Unless within 10 days after the filing of the commission's determination any party to the complaint appeals therefrom to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, the determination of the commission shall be final and conclusive. If such an appeal is taken from the determination of the commission, the record before the commission or such part thereof as the court may order shall be certified by it to the court and shall constitute the record before the court, and the commission's determination shall not be modified or set aside by the court, except for error of law. If any party applies to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shows to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the court may deem proper. The commission may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which shall be conclusive, and its recommendations if any for the modification or setting aside of its original determination, with the return of such additional evidence. In the proceedings before such court an appeal from a determination of the commission, the commission shall appear by its counsel or other representative and submit oral or written arguments to support the findings and the determination of the commission.

"SEC. 109. The right of a tenant to the use or occupany of any rental property, hotel, or apartment existing at the time this act takes effect, or thereafter acquired, under any lease or other contract for such use or occupancy or under any extension thereof by operation of law, shall, notwithstanding the expiration of the term fixed by such lease or contract, continue at the option of the tenant subject, however, to any determination or regulation of the commission relevant thereto; and such tenant shall not be evicted or dispossessed so long as he pays the rent and performs the other terms and conditions of the tenancy as fixed by such lease or contract, or in case such lease or contract is modified by any determination or regulation of the commission, then as fixed by such modified lease or contract. All remedies of the owner at law or equity, based on any provision of any such lease or contract to the effect that such lease or contract shall be determined or forfeited if the premises are sold, are hereby suspended so long as this title is in force. Every purchaser shall take conveyance of any rental property, hotel, or apartment subject to the rights of tenants as provided in this title. The rights of the tenant under this title shall be subject to the limitation that the bona fide owner of any rental property, apartment, or hotel shall have the right to possession thereof for actual and bona fide occupancy by himself, or his wife, children, or dependents, or for the purpose of tearing down or razing the same in order immediately to construct new rental property, hotel, or apartment if approved by the commission, upon giving 30 days' notice in writing, served in the manner provided by section 1223 of the act entitled 'An act to establish a code of laws for the District of Columbia,' approved May 3, 1901, as amended, which notice shall contain a full and correct statement of the facts and circumstances upon which the same is based; but in no case shall possession be demanded or obtained by such owner in contravention of the terms of any such lease or contract. If there is a dispute between the owner and the tenant as to the accuracy or sufficiency of the statement set forth in such notice, as to the good faith of such demand, or as to the service of notice, the matters in dispute shall be determined by the commission upon complaint as provided in section 106 of this title.

"SEC. 110. Pending the final decision on appeal from a determination of the commission, the commission's determination shall be in full force and effect and the appeal shall not operate as a supersedeas or in any manner stay or postpone the enforcement of the determination appealed from. Immediately upon the entry of a final decision on the appeal the commission shall, if necessary, modify its determination in order to make it conform to such decision. The difference, if any, between the amount of rent and charges paid for the period from the date of the filing by the commission of the determination appealed from and the amount that would have been payable for such period under the determination as modified in accordance with the final decision on appeal may be added to or allowed on account of, as the case demands, future rent payments or may be sued for and recovered in an action in the municipal court in the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 111. The determination of the commission in a proceeding begun by complaint or upon its own initiative fixing fair and reasonable rents, charges, service, and other terms and conditions of use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel, or apartment shall constitute the commission's determination of the fairness and reasonableness of such rents, charges, service, terms, or conditions for the rental property, hotel, or apartment affected, and shall remain in full force and effect notwithstanding any change in ownership or tenancy thereof, unless and until the commission modifies or sets aside such determination upon complaint either of the owner or of the tenant.

"SEC. 112. If the owner of any rental property, apartment, or hotel collects any rent or charge therefor in excess of the amount fixed in a determination of the commission made and in full force and effect in accordance with the provisions of this title, he shall be liable for, and the commission is hereby authorized and directed to commence an action in the municipal court in the District of Columbia to recover double, the amount of such excess, together with the costs of the proceeding which shall include an attorney's fee of $50, to be taxed as part of the costs. Out of any sums received on account of such recovery the commission shall pay over to the tenant the amount of the excess so paid by him and the balance shall be paid into the treasury of the District of Columbia: Provided, That if the commission finds that such excess was paid by the tenant voluntarily and with knowledge of the commission's determination, the whole amount of such recovery shall be paid into the treasury of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 113. If in any proceeding before the commission, begun by complaint or on the commission's own initiative, and involving any lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel, or apartment the commission finds that at any time after the passage of this act but during the tenacy the owner has, directly or indirectly, willfully withdrawn from the tenant any service agreed or required by a determination of the commission to be furnished, or has by act, neglect, or omission contrary to such lease or contract or to the law or any ordinance or regulation made in pursuance of law, or of a determination of the commission, exposed the tenant, directly or indirectly, to any unsafe or insanitary condition or imposed upon him any burden, loss, or unusual inconvenience in connection with his use or occupany of such rental property, hotel, or apartment, the commission shall determine the sum which in its judgment will fairly and reasonably compensate or reimburse the tenant therefor. In any such proceeding involving a lease or other contract, the term specified in which had not expired at the time the proceeding was begun, the commission shall likewise determine the amount or value of any bonus or other consideration in excess of the rental named in such lease or contract received at any time directly or indirectly by the owner in connection with such lease or contract. The tenant may recover any amount so determined by the commission in an action in the municipal court of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 114. Whenever under this title a tenant is entitled to bring suit to recover any sum due him under any determination of the commission, the commission shall, upon application by the tenant and without expense to him, commence and prosecute in the municipal court of the District of Columbia an action on behalf of the tenant for the recovery of the amount due, and in such case the court shall include in any judgment rendered in favor of the tenant the costs of the action, including a reasonable attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court. Such costs and attorney's fee when recovered shall be paid into the treasury of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 115. The commission shall, by general order, from time to time prescribe the procedure to be followed in all proceedings under its jurisdiction. Such procedure shall be as simple and summary as may be practicable, and the commission and parties appearing before it shall not be bound by technical rules of evidence or of pleading.

"SEC. 116. Any person who with intent to avoid the provisions of this title enters into any agreement or arrangement for the payment of any bonus or other consideration in connection with any lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel, or apartment, or who participates in any fictitious sale or other device or arrangement the purpose of which is to grant or obtain the use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel, or apartment without subjecting such use or occupancy to the provisions of this title or to the jurisdiction of the commission shall upon conviction be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment for not exceeding one year, or by both.

"SEC. 117. The commission shall prescribe standard forms of leases and other contracts for the use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel, or apartment and shall require their use by the owner thereof. Every such lease or contract entered into after the commission has prescribed and promulgated a form for the tenancy provided by such lease or contract shall be deemed to accord with such standard form; and any such lease or contract in any proceeding before the commission or in any court of the United States or of the District of Columbia shall be interpreted, applied, and enforced in the same manner as if it were in the form and contained the stipulations of such standard form.

"The owner of an hotel or apartment shall file with the commission plans and other data in such detail as the commission requires, descriptive of the rooms, accommodations, and service in connection with such hotel or apartment, and a schedule of rates and charges therefor. The commission shall, after consideration of such plans, schedules, data, or other information, determine and fix a schedule of fair and reasonable rates and charges for such hotels or apartments; and the rates and charges stated in such schedule shall thereafter constitute the fair and reasonable rates and charges for such hotel or apartment. The commission's determination in such case shall be made after such notice and hearing and shall have the same force and effect and be subject to appeal in the same manner as a determination of the commission under section 106 of this title.

"SEC. 118. No tenant shall assign his lease of or sublet any rental property or apartment at a rate in excess of the rate paid by him under his lease without the consent of the commission upon application in a particular case, and in such case the commission shall determine a fair and reasonable rate of rent for charge for such assignment or sublease.

"SEC. 119. The public resolution entitled 'Joint resolution to prevent profiteering in the District of Columbia,' approved May 31, 1918, as amended, is hereby repealed, to take effect 60 days after the date of the confirmation by the Senate of the commissioners first nominated by the President under the provisions of this title; but a determination by the commission made within such period of 60 days shall be enforced in accordance with the provisions of this title, notwithstanding the provisions of such public resolution. All laws or parts of laws in conflict with any provision of this title are hereby suspended so long as this title is in force to the extent that they are in such conflict.

"SEC. 120. The sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated and made immediately available to carry out the provisions of this title, one-half thereof to be paid out of money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated and the other one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 121. If any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this title shall be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operations to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

"SEC. 122. It is hereby declared that the provisions of this title are made necessary by emergencies growing out of the war with the Imperial German Government, resulting in rental conditions in the District of Columbia dangerous to the public health and burdensome to public officers and employees whose duties require them to reside within the District and other persons whose activities are essential to the maintenance and comfort of such officers and employees, and thereby embarrassing the Federal Government in the transaction of the public business. It is also declared that this title shall be considered temporary legislation, and that it shall terminate on the expiration of two years from the date of the passage of this act, unless sooner repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"To amend an act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel,' approved August 10, 1917, and to regulate rents in the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

G. N. HAUGEN,
J. C. MCLAUGHLIN,
THOS. L. RUBEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

A. J. GRONNA,
HOKE SMITH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8624) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel,' approved August 10, 1919," submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the amendments of the Senate, namely:

Amendment No. 1: To this amendment the House recedes with an amendment, which amendment changes "the first paragraph" to "section one" which involves only a matter of form or phraseology; and adds: "That this act may be cited as 'the food-control and the District of Columbia rents act,' TITLE I.—FOOD-CONTROL-ACT AMENDMENTS," the purpose of which is for convenience and separating the food-control-act amendments from the District of Columbia rents.

The House recedes from its disagreements to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 2 to 10, inclusive. The changes resulting therefrom involve only matters of form and phraseology.

Amendment No. 2: This amendment strikes out "be, and the same."

Amendment No. 3: This amendment strikes out a comma.

Amendment No. 4: This amendment strikes out "so as."

Amendment No. 5: This amendment changes "the" to "such."

Amendment No. 6: This amendment strikes out "entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel' approved" and adds "of."

Amendment No. 7: This amendment strikes out "be, and the same."

Amendment No. 8: This amendment strikes out a comma.

Amendment No. 9: This amendment strikes out "so as."

Amendment No. 10: This amendment changes "And provided" to "Provided further."

Amendment No. 11: This amendment is the Senate amendment pertaining to rents within the District of Columbia. The House recedes with an amendment which is a comprehensive substitute therefor.

Section 101: This section contains the definitions. The term "rental property" includes all buildings and the land appurtenant thereto, within the District of Columbia. This term also varies the Senate amendment by covering all service furnished in connection with any rental property. Such service thus becomes an element in determining the fair value of rental property for the purpose of fixing the rent therefor. The terms "hotel" and "apartment" are similarly defined. The conference amendment further varies the Senate amendment by covering business property, and by providing a definition of "service." The Senate amendment definitions of "true value," "controversy," and "jurisdiction" are omitted as unnecessary.

Section 102: This section creates a commission of three members not engaged in or connected with the real estate business in the District of Columbia. The members are to be appointed by the President, by any with the advice and consent of the Senate, for terms of two years. The Senate amendment qualifications of two years' residence within the District is omitted.

Section 103: This section provides an annual salary of $5,000, payable monthly, for each commissioner. Provision is further made for certain specified expenditures by the commission and the audit thereof. The Senate amendment provided an annual salary of $6,000 for each commissioner.

Section 104: This section provides that the assessor ex officio becomes an advisory assistant to the commission. The assessor receives an additional salary of $1,000 per annum for such additional duties, instead of $2,000, as provided in the Senate amendment. The section further varies the Senate amendment by providing that every officer or employee of the United States or the District of Columbia shall upon request from the commission supply it with any data or information which is contained in the records of his office and which pertain to the administration of the title.

Section 105: This section provides that duly authorized officers and employees of the commission shall at all reasonable times have access to any books, records, or papers relating to any matter before the commission. The commission is given the power to issue subpœna for the production of such books, records, and papers, and for requesting the attendance of witnesses. The district courts of the United States are to enforce such subpœnas. The section varies the Senate amendment by providing that no officer or employee of the commission shall, unless authorized by it or by a court, make public any information obtained by the commission.

Section 106: This section declares that rental property and hotels and apartments are affected with the public interest, and that all rents and charges therefor and all service in connection therewith shall be fair and reasonable. The provisions of the section vary the Senate amendment, which provides for the determination of the commission of fair and reasonable rents, charges, services, and other terms and conditions of a lease or contract upon complaint of the tenant or owner by permitting the commission to make such determinations upon its own initiative and by allowing the owner to complain when the tenant is in possession under a lease or contract which has been extended by operation of law or which has been modified by the commission. Such determinations shall be made upon notice and hearing to all parties interested. The provisions of the Senate amendment are further varied by a provision that any determination of the commission must be observed by all Federal courts and courts of the District of Columbia in any collateral action.

Section 107: This section provides that determinations of the commission fixing a fair and reasonable rent or charge upon complaint shall be effective from the date of such complaint. The tenant may collect any difference by deductions from future rent or by suit in the municipal court of the District of Columbia. This section in a measure is a substitute for a provision in the Senate amendment to the effect that the tenant could recover damages for any unreasonable rent collected under a lease or contract made subsequent to September 15, 1919, even though such collections were made previous to any determination by the commission that the rent or charge collected was unfair or unreasonable.

Section 108: This section provides that appeals from the commission's decisions are permitted to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia for error in law. The commission shall provide counsel in any such appeal to defend its determination.

Section 109: This section continues the Saulsbury resolution, save that the tenant holds possession, not under the terms of the expired lease or contract only but under such terms, subject to modification, upon complaint by the owner to the commission under section 106. This section varies the Senate amendment, which permits the owner to recover his property when required for the bona fide occupancy of himself or his wife or dependents by providing that any dispute as to the good faith of any such requirement shall be determined by the commission. It varies the Senate amendment further, in that it also permits the owner to recover his property for the purpose of immediate construction of new rental property (hotel or apartment) of a character approved by the commission.

Section 110: This section provides that the commission's determination shall remain in force, despite the taking of an appeal, until such appeal is decided. These provisions were not present in the Senate amendment.

Section 111: This section provides that any determination of the commission shall apply to the rental property, apartment, or hotel involved, despite any change in tenancy or ownership thereof, until the commission modifies such determination in a future proceeding. These provisions were not present in the Senate amendment.

Section 112: This section penalizes the collection of rent in excess of that fixed by determination of the commission by permitting the commission to sue the owner in the municipal court of the District of Columbia for double the amount so collected, together with costs and a $50 attorney's fee. The tenant shall receive that part of the excess which he paid the owner involuntarily. These provisions were not present in the Senate amendment, except in so far as the Senate amendment provided a criminal penalty for a violation of an order of the commission.

Section 113: This section provides that the commission may assess any loss suffered by a tenant due to a willful withdrawal of service by the owner or the exposing of the tenant to any unsafe or insanitary condition or the imposing upon the tenant of any additional burden or unusual inconvenience or the collection from the tenant of any bonus in connection with any existing lease. The tenant may recover such amount by suit in the municipal court of the District of Columbia. Those provisions were not present in the Senate amendment.

Section 114: The commission, upon application of the tenant, shall recover for such tenant any sum due him as the result of any determination by the commission. These provisions were not present in the Senate amendment.

Section 115: This section provides that the procedure of the commission shall be simple and summary and shall not follow technical rules of evidence or pleading.

Section 116: This section provides a criminal penalty of $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, for any person who enters into any agreement or arrangement for the payment of any bonus in connection with any lease or other contract, or who participates in any fictitious sale or other arrangement to avoid the provisions of the title. These provisions were not present in the Senate amendment.

Section 117: This section gives the commission the power to provide for and require the use of standard forms of lease. The section further requires that hotels and apartments file with the commission plans and schedules of rates and charges. The commission shall make collective determinations of the reasonableness and fairness of the rates and charges of all rooms or apartments in any hotel or apartment in a proceeding similar to that under section 106. These provisions were not present in the Senate amendment.

Section 118: This section prohibits subletting at an advanced rent or charge without the consent of the commission. This varies the Senate amendment which prohibited all subletting without consent of the owner or of the commission.

Section 119: This section repeals the Saulsbury resolution 60 days after the confirmation by the Senate of the commissioners first nominated by the President. All portions of the landlord and tenant law directly in conflict with the title are suspended so long as the title is in force. The Senate amendment provided for the repeal of the Saulsbury resolution 30 days after the act took effect.

Section 120: This section provides an appropriation of $50,000.

Section 121: This section provides the usual provision as to the effect of holding unconstitutional a portion of an act.

Section 122: This section declares the war power is one basis of Congress's authority for enacting the title and that the title is temporary legislation. The section further bases the title upon the power of Congress to prevent any embarrassment to the Federal Government in the transaction of public business resulting from rental conditions dangerous to the health of and burdensome to Federal officers and employees and persons whose activities are essential to the maintenance and comfort of such officers and employees.

Amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill: To this amendment the House recedes with an amendment which adds: "and to regulate rents in the District of Columbia."

G. N. HAUGEN,
J. C. MCLAUGHLIN,
THOS. L. RUBEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I will point out the changes between this conference report and the one presented a week ago.

In section 101 the words "lands or," were stricken out and the words "or land appurtenant thereto" were inserted. As the section was originally drawn it included vacant lands; now it will include only land appurtenant to the buildings referred to.

In section 102 the word "three" was stricken out and the word "two" inserted, so as to limit the term of the commissioners from three to two years.

In section 109 the following language was added:

Or for the purpose of tearing down or razing the same in order immediately to construct new rental property, hotel, or apartment if approved by the commission.

That is, the tenant may be dispossessed if the building which he occupies is to be torn down or razed for the purpose of constructing a new building, if approved by the commission.

Then, in section 117, we strike out the words "upon the request of the commission," so as to make it mandatory for the hotel owner to file the information called for. It is also mandatory upon the commission to fix fair and reasonable rates. The last change fixes the term of the act, limiting it from three to two years. As now drawn it will expire in two instead of three years.

I believe that these are the only changes that have been made from the first conference report.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I desire to speak in opposition to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman. The rule provides that there shall be one hour's debate, to be equally divided between those favoring and those opposed to the report.

Mr. BEGG. May I inquire for what time the Speaker recognizes me?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to inquire what gentlemen desire to be heard against the report.

Mr. BEGG. If the Chair will pardon me, I suggest that if he will give me control of the time in opposition, I care for only about 10 minutes for myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think he is authorized to do that.

Mr. WALSH. Then the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] can not control the time in favor of the report.

The SPEAKER. No; the gentleman from Iowa does not control the time. The Chair will be glad to have unanimous consent that it shall be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] may control 30 minutes in favor of the report and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] 30 minutes against it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] control 30 minutes in favor of the report and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] control 30 minutes against it. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I wish to be notified when I have consumed 10 minutes.

I think I have possibly been misunderstood in my attitude in opposing what I believe to be vicious legislation. So far as the conferees have gone, with one exception, I am perfectly willing to go with them. Under the guise of the emergency that seems to exist, I honestly fear that instead of alleviating the conditions that confront us in the District of Columbia to-day they have only created the machinery that will either cause this law to be declared unconstitutional by the courts of the District of Columbia—which I am very frank to say, not as a lawyer but as a layman, I think will happen—or else I can see nothing other than the creation of the machinery to prolong in power the subletter, who is the very individual that is the curse of the District of Columbia to-day. In spite of all that has been claimed for this act, you have not given the subletter the death blow which he so richly deserves. You have created the machinery whereby you have robbed the legitimate, honest, bona fide investor in real estate in this town; and if you can do it in the city of Washington, you have certainly set a precedent that is going to confront you in other cities in the United States. You have robbed the legitimate owner of property, whether he be the owner of a thousand-dollar cottage or a million-dollar apartment house, of the control of his own property. You have taken it away from him and given it to the subletter.

What is a lease? The word "lease" is used repeatedly in this bill. Now, if it is anything, it is a contract. I will submit to the lawyers of this House if that is not a fair statement that will stand in any court. A lease is a contract. Any contract, in order to get recognition in any court, must be founded on the fundamental and basic principle of a coming together of two minds on some subject for a consideration, for a limited time. That is a contract; and if this bill does not destroy the contract and give the lessee unlimited time, in violation of the will of one party to the contract and the mutual agreement with the lessor, then I can not read the English language. Why, the wildest-eyed Bolshevist that ever spoke from a soap box in the city of New York never advocated any wilder doctrine than this; and I want to say to you men that you will be confronted with this same proposition when you go to your homes, with having set up a precedent for taking away from a property owner the right to determine who shall live in his house. I am not averse to saying by law what he shall charge, because I myself am paying $136 a month for two little old rooms in this town that are worth about $16 a month.

I am in favor of a rent commission to regulate the price; but in the name of God, men, does the property right founded in the Constitution and the bill of rights of the Constitution mean anything, or can you legislate it away? The only excuse that the proponents of this bill have is that they say the property owners of the District of Columbia are a bunch of thieves and robbers, and that they do not deserve any consideration or any rights. I challenge you men who are in favor of this bill in this form to go back home and pass such a bill for your State. If you do, you will never get another vote from any man who owns property valued at as much as $500. If there is a thing that America is going to be confronted with—and it is going to be the dead line inside of five years' time—it is a showdown between the man who through industry and perseverance and economy has saved out of a mere pittance enough to acquire something, and the profligate and the waster who has spent his all, to-day has nothing. I know what it means to be poor. I have always been poor, and I have rented nearly every year of my life. I expect to rent every day that I live in Washington, and I have not a dollar to-day other than that which I have earned by hard work and the economy of my wife and my children and myself. But do you think I will stand on the floor in the Hall of the United States Congress, or any other spot, and vote away the sacredness of the interest of the man who owns his house as to who shall occupy it? I want to emphasize again that I do not care how much you regulate the price a man shall pay, but let the owner say who shall live there.

I submit to every fair-minded man if that is asking anything more than is guaranteed by our Constitution. I stand here to prophesy that the courts will call this law unconstitutional; but if they do not, I have lost my confidence in the old teaching of the sacred protection that is thrown around every man by that old mantle, the Constitution of the United States. I want to say to you that the fear of being punished does not deter me from defending the sacred principles that I believe made this country what it is to-day.

I want to submit this final question and then I am willing to turn over some time to some other gentleman. Who made this country to-day what it is, from the time of the adoption of the Constitution until now? Was it the man who was industrious, the man who saved, the man who acquired, or was it the other element of society? Think it over. Now, will you take away from him one of the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, and make that first step in the Capital? The reason, and I do not have any hesitancy in saying it, why some of you are so ready to take it away from the people of the District of Columbia is because you think they can not get after you. They do not have a vote. You will not go back to your homes and talk that kind of stuff that you are now talking on the floor of the House.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I will.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. In line with what the gentleman has just said, permit me to call his attention to the fact that the Committee of the Whole House in considering this bill originally voted by a vote of seventy-odd to about sixty to incorporate an amendment to apply this same principle against which the gentleman complains to the whole United States. That is to say, we adopted an amendment which included rentals and made it a crime for the tenant or owner to charge more than a reasonable rate for the premises, and it was applicable to the whole United States.

Mr. BEGG. I have no quarrel with the man who wants to fix a price where the law of supply and demand can not function properly. But when it comes to saying to the owner you shall let John Jones occupy your premises instead of Sam Smith, you are transgressing the sacredness of property rights.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But the gentleman said we would not dare to go home and make that kind of talk. I want to call his attention to the fact that the majority of the Committee of the Whole did do it.

Mr. BEGG. But it is not on the statute books.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No; it did not pass in the House, but at least 79 Members of the House were willing to "talk that kind of stuff" with reference to the people at home.

Mr. BEGG. I would suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that he go home and work for that in his legislature and see what happens after the public understands what he is doing. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] 15 minutes.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be notified when I have used 10 minutes. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] has stated, we are presenting to you this afternoon a bill which is not so good a bill as the one we presented to you about a week ago. When that bill came before the House, a point of order was made against it by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], and the point of order was sustained. It then went back to the conferees, and it now comes to you somewhat weaker, in my opinion, than it was when it was here before. We were compelled to strike out that part of the bill which refers to land, and in doing that we have prevented the United States Government from saving a great many thousand dollars which it has been paying in excessive rents. If that provision could have remained in the bill, it would have meant the saving of thousands of dollars to the Government. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] has succeeded at least in saving that much money to the property owners who are renting land to the Government in the District of Columbia. The second provision is that we cut down the length of time to two years. In doing that, we have weakened this measure. We passed the Saulsbury resolution a little over a year ago to meet a peculiar situation in the District of Columbia. We had passed a bill through this House advocated by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], an excellent bill in my opinion. It went to the Senate and then there came a disagreement between the two bodies and we could not get legislation. The result was that in order to protect the tenants in the District of Columbia, thousands of whom were Government employees, we passed the Saulsbury resolution. That went into effect and that has enabled the tenants, the employees of the Government, to retain their respective places of abode up to the present time.

My friend from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] talked to you about the owner of the property. Let me say to him and to you that there are thousands of Government employees in Washington to-day who are holding their rooms and their apartments by virtue of the Saulsbury resolution, and they have been notified by the owners that just as soon as the terms of the Saulsbury resolution expire they will be put out in the street. Does the gentleman from Ohio want the employees of this Government, the young men and the young women who have come here from every State in this Union, who are working at moderate salaries of from twelve hundred and two thousand dollars a year, and who took advantage of a law passed by Congress for their benefit, to be put out at the behest of the owners of the property? I say no.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In the remarks made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], a few moments ago, he said, and correctly said, that perhaps the worst profiteer in the District of Columbia is the subletter. Does not this bill provide in specific terms that the subletter shall not sublet at a price greater than that which he himself pays?

Mr. RUBEY. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that there is in this bill, in section 118, the following provision, and I want to read it for the benefit of the House:

> No tenant shall assign his lease or sublet any rental property or apartment at a rate in excess of the rate paid by him under his lease without the consent of the commission, upon application in a particular case, and in such case the commission shall determine a fair and reasonable rate of rent or charge.

And so forth.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. There is no provision there providing against the man who rents an apartment unfurnished and then furnishes it and sublets it. That is one of the great profiteering schemes. I happen to know of apartments to-day rented for $65 a month where the subtenant puts in about $700 worth of furniture and then rents the whole thing for $175, and I have paid some of that rent myself.

Mr. RUBEY. The evil that the gentleman has stated is one of the greatest evils we have in the city of Washington to-day, and I have no doubt whatever that it is taken care of absolutely in this bill and that the commission will fix a fair and reasonable rate of rent that that tenant shall charge to the subtenant.

Mr. STEVENSON. Do you give them the jurisdiction to establish the rental of the furniture.

Mr. RUBEY. There is no question about that.

Mr. HERSEY. But you have denied the House the privilege of amending that section, have you not?

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary situation denies that. The parliamentary situation is such that we come here with a conference report, and the House must accept it or reject it. I regret very much that this House can not take up and consider this bill from beginning to end, go through it and amend it in any way it sees fit, but we have a situation confronting us in the city of Washington that must be met; we can only meet it by passing some kind of legislation, and that proposed legislation is now before us in the shape of this conference report.

As I said a moment ago, the worst feature is the cutting down of the time to two years. We passed the Saulsbury resolution. It is in effect now; it is a makeshift. When we pass this bill and cut the time down to two years it becomes somewhat of a makeshift. The commission can not get organized and into active operation within six months, and they can not plan out the work and do it as efficiently as they could if they had four years before them. Besides you are not going to be able to get competent men to come to the city of Washington and take a responsible position of that sort at a salary of $5,000 a year when they know that the term of office is only two years.

The result is going to be that when this commission is appointed they are going to be men selected from the District of Columbia, because competent men can not be found from other localities who will accept that sort of a position for so short a time. I wish it were possible for the President, as he has the right to do under this bill, to go out into other communities and get good, efficient, experienced men who are not in any way mixed up or connected with the affairs of the District of Columbia, to come here, as disinterested judges and jurors, to pass upon those questions that will come up between landlords and tenants. I think that two of the commissioners should come from outside the District of Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, they tell us that this is temporary legislation; that it is going to last just for a little while. I want to say to you that, in my opinion, the legislation that we are about to enact is going to stay on the statute book. They say we should let the law of supply and demand regulate. I say to you that the law of supply and demand, so far as rents are concerned, has been long since repealed by the rent hogs and profiteers in the District of Columbia, and they are not going to let the law of supply and demand come back, and you can rest assured of that. Let me tell you another thing. Your people and mine are coming here every day from every part of the country, and they are being held up by the high rates at the hotels. I have been here at two inauguration ceremonies and I have known of the large hotels in this city charging $25, $50, and $100, and even more per day to the people who come here from your State and mine to witness the inauguration ceremonies. It has been absolutely outrageous, and upon these occasions I have heard Members of Congress condemn that sort of thing and say that we must pass a law to prevent it. Yet, time goes on, and after a few weeks you forget all about it and do not enact any legislation to prevent the hotels from making these exorbitant charges. This bill that we are going to pass this afternoon will, in some form or other, remain on the statute books. You can rest assured of that.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY].

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, very few Members are present this late Saturday afternoon. I noticed that many of you did not listen very particularly to the reading of the conference report, and I fear that few have even studied the Ball rent bill that has to-day been brought into the House as a legislative rider on a report of a committee of conference.

This new and novel method of legislation ought to be something startling to the Congress of the United States. For the first time in our history a conference committee has attempted to deprive the House of the benefit of a committee hearing and right of amendment or the proper consideration of new legislation and to force through a most vicious rider against the best judgment of a majority of this House.

This deplorable condition in legislation has been brought about by very peculiar parliamentary tactics on the part of those who could not succeed by the use of the usual and customary methods of procedure. The food-control bill recently passed the House and went to the Senate; on its return from the committee of conference it was found that the committee had taken a long, complicated Senate bill, called the "Ball rent bill," that had never been considered in the Senate, and had agreed with the Senate conferees to adopt and make this rent bill a part of the food-control bill.

The House committee of conference, knowing that the House would reject such a conference report, secured in advance of making their report a rule from the Committee on Rules making in order this Ball rent bill, thereby limiting the debate to 30 minutes on a side and depriving the House of the right to even amend this long rent bill in any particular, and also by the rule forcing the House to accept and vote for this vicious legislation or defeat the food-control bill, a measure that all the Members favored.

I do not understand how it was possible for the conference committee to secure from the Rules Committee the necessary power to deprive the House of the right to give proper consideration to new and important legislation. It will not happen again, we are informed, for the able chairman of the Rules Committee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] in presenting the rule apologized for the rule and said he would never do it again. This is his statement from the RECORD:

> Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and with others that this is not the most desirable procedure on a conference report, and I want to serve notice now upon conferees that they must not bring conference reports to the Committee on Rules with a request that their provisions be made in order contrary to the ordinary rules of the House.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], one of the most useful and efficient members of the minority, and who has a high regard for the rules and always insists that the House shall have proper opportunity to discuss and amend all bills presented, felt keenly the embarrassment and humiliation of his committee in bringing in such a rule, and he, too, promised it should never occur again. I quote him from the RECORD, as follows:

> Mr. GARRETT. I am pleading for the opportunity of this House to pass upon this legislation in a way that it would have the opportunity to amend it if in its wisdom it thought it was desirable to amend it. That opportunity does not exist here now, because this conference report must be voted up or down as a whole, and there is no chance to place upon this legislation any amendment, however germane it may be or however desirable it may be. Against this sort of policy I protest. I realize that it is futile now, probably, so far as this particular rule is concerned; but I desire to give my support to the notice which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] served upon the House yesterday, which he has reiterated again to-day, and I desire to assure him that he will have my support in the future against rules of this character.

The able gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], on Saturday last, made a logical and unanswerable argument against this "Ball rent bill." His speech was short, and I shall insert it as a part of my remarks. It is as follows:

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I am not concerned in the ad hominem arguments that have been made to-day. But I believe this bill to be thoroughly unconstitutional in every way, and therefore I would not support it under any circumstances. It is an invasion of the rights of property that the Constitution does not authorize. To say that Government employees must be housed does not carry with it the right to say to the citizen that he shall furnish the housing at such figures as a commission may fix. You may take private property for public uses and public purposes, but I deny the right under the Constitution of this Congress to take private property of a citizen and turn it over at figures fixed by a commission in the interest of another citizen.

When you have said that the man who owns a piece of property has no longer the right to control it, no longer the right to say who shall occupy it, no longer the right to say what the price shall be, it is such an invasion of the private rights and interests of a citizen as comes directly in conflict with the provision of the Constitution that guarantees the protection of property in this country.

It is a beginning of that system of legislation, the fixing of rates and prices about everything that you will find the most dangerous and pernicious that has ever been undertaken. There should be general laws controlling all things, but when the Congress goes down to the private citizen and says you shall handle your property this way, that you shall fix this price and no other, Congress has assumed an undertaking that it can not very well carry out.

I insist, Mr. Speaker, that the best interests of this country require that life, liberty, and property under the Constitution shall be protected by the Congress, and you shall not pass any of these Bolshevik laws affecting the property rights of the people of this country. If I own a house, have I not the right to say who shall go into it; if I want to rent it, shall I not have the right to say what the price shall be; if I want to leave it vacant, have I not the right? What right have you under the Constitution to destroy the rights of property which the law gives the citizen? It is an infamous suggestion. [Applause.]

In the three minutes I have I can not discuss this bill nor the constitutional limitations on the powers of Congress in time of war or peace on the questions involved. The mere statement that no power can be found in the Constitution to force the citizens of the District of Columbia to make unwilling contracts as to the use of their property ought to be sufficient for all just men to oppose this measure. Congress can not impair, by express terms of the Constitution, the obligations of contracts in the State, and under the spirit of the Constitution it can not make contracts for the private citizen to accommodate another private citizen in the District of Columbia, however desirable it might be to reduce rents. If it can be done as to rents, it can be done as to all things; and you become the masters and not the servants of the people, and you rule the District as only masters can rule slaves.

Mr. Speaker, in the few moments I have remaining I want to bring before you some of the features of this vicious and unconstitutional rent bill. What does this "Ball rent bill" propose?

It provides a court composed of three commissioners, to be known and called "the rent commissioners of the District of Columbia," to be appointed by the President, to hold office for three years, and receive each a salary of $5,000 a year. The commission shall appoint a secretary, who shall receive a salary of $3,000 a year, payable in like manner; it may appoint and remove such officers, employees, and agents and make such expenditures for rent, printing, telegrams, telephone, law books, books of reference, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, and other supplies and expenses as may be necessary to the administration of this Ball rent bill.

The assessor of the District of Columbia shall serve ex officio as an advisory assistant to the commission, but he shall have none of the power or duties of a commissioner. The assessor shall receive a salary of $1,000 per annum, payable monthly, in addition to such other salary as may be prescribed for his office by law.

The only qualifications required of these commissioners is that none of them "shall be directly or indirectly engaged in, or in any manner interested in or connected with, the real estate or renting business in the District of Columbia." In other words, this court shall be made up of renters; owners of real estate are disqualified. I would like to have a photograph of this bunch of irresponsibles that exercise arbitrary power and control over all private property in the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSEY. I can not yield at present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield later?

Mr. HERSEY. I may if I get through with what I want to say.

Now, what is the jurisdiction and power of this rent commission? I have only time to call your attention to a few of the many arbitrary and unconstitutional powers granted to this court over the 470,000 persons that live in the District of Columbia.

These rent commissioners have by this Ball rent bill full control and authority over all the rental property, land or building or part thereof, in the District of Columbia rented or hired and the service agreed or required by law or by determination of the commission to be furnished in connection therewith, hotels or apartments. Also over the tenant, subtenant, lessee, sublessee, or other person, not the owner, entitled to the use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel, or apartment. Also over any hotel or apartment, or part thereof, in the District of Columbia, rented or hired, and the land and outbuildings appurtenant thereto, and the service agreed or required by law or by determination of the commission to be furnished in connection therewith. Also over the owner, lessor, or sublessor, or other person entitled to receive rent or charges for the use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel, or apartment, or any interest therein, or his agent. Also over the service, furnishing of light, heat, water, telephone or elevator service, furniture, furnishings, window shades, screens, awnings, storage, kitchen, bath and laundry facilities and privileges, maid service, janitor service, removal of refuse, making all repairs suited to the type of building or necessitated by ordinary wear and tear, and any other privilege or service connected with the use or occupancy of any rental property, apartment, or hotel.

Further, the commission or any officer, employee, or agent duly authorized in writing by it, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy, any books, accounts, records, papers, or correspondence relating to any matter which the commission is authorized to consider or investigate; and the commission shall have power to require by subpœna the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all such books, accounts, records, papers, and correspondence relating to any such matter. Any member of the commission may sign subpœnas, administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence.

This new court for the District of Columbia provides and furnishes an attorney free of charge for the benefit of the tenant and pays all his costs in the lawsuits in all matters of rents and real estate and contracts with real estate owners; but the owners or landlords get no free services or benefits, but pay the costs of the proceedings before a court organized to look after the interests of the tenants only.

This prejudiced court has the power and authority to make its own rules of procedure, and at the hearing or trial they are not even bound by the usual and ordinary rules of evidence. Trial by jury, provided and guaranteed by the Constitution, is denied to the owners of real estate. They are to be robbed of their property without a jury trial and in total disregard of the rules of evidence.

From the decision of these autocratic commissioners on a question of fact there is no appeal. They shall fix and determine the amount of rent charges and services and all the terms and conditions of a lease or other contract for the use or occupancy of any rental property, hotel, or apartment, and from their decision there is no appeal. They can change all contracts and leases of real estate in the District, permit the tenant to sublet in violation of his contract, and when the lease has expired and the tenant, under his contract, has no further right to occupy the premises, this commission is authorized and empowered, against the wish of the landlord, to extend the lease for two years more, and from this decision there is no appeal.

And this is not all. This unconstitutional commission shall make all contracts between landlord and tenant in the District of Columbia; they draw the forms, agreements, covenants, and terms between the parties, and provide that no other forms shall be used and no other contracts or agreements made by the owners of real estate under a penalty of a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment for not exceeding one year, or by both.

Under this "Ball rent bill" these commissioners have power and authority, within the District, to demand that the owner of every hotel or apartment shall file with the commission plans and other data in such detail as the commission requires, descriptive of the rooms, accommodations, and service in connection with such hotel or apartment, and the commission shall determine and fix the rates and charges for such rooms, hotel or apartment, for two years, and from this decision the owners of the real estate shall have no appeal.

Such a despotic use of unbridled power is clearly unconstitutional, and the authors of this so-called "Ball rent bill" know it; but they seek to escape by invoking the war powers of the Constitution after the war is ended. They say:

SEC. 122. It is hereby declared that the provisions of this title are made necessary by emergencies growing out of the war with the Imperial German Government, resulting in rental conditions in the District of Columbia dangerous to the public health and burdensome to public officers and employees whose duties require them to reside within the District and other persons whose activities are essential to the maintenance and comfort of such officers and employees, and thereby embarrassing the Federal Government in the transaction of the public business. It is also declared that this title shall be considered temporary legislation, and that it shall terminate on the expiration of two years from the date of the passage of this act, unless sooner repealed.

The late war brought an influx of 150,000 new renters into the District of Columbia, and they will remain here, even after the war has ended. The real estate owners of Washington have used their capital and all their resources to enlarge tenements, build houses, hotels, and apartments to meet this great demand, and if given a reasonable time they will solve the problem, and the law of supply and demand will take care of rents and charges. The Washington Times of yesterday says:

BUILDING IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA SHOWS BIG GAIN—HEALY'S REPORT SHOWS TEN MILLION EXPENDED IN LAST YEAR.

Building operations in the District during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919, showed a very marked increase over the preceding 12 months, and $10,520,866 was spent on new buildings and improvements in the Capital, which is an increase over last year of $356,409, the report of John P. Healy, inspector of buildings, shows. New homes erected numbered 749.

During the same period 4,948 permits were issued to build and make improvements. This is an increase of 1,042 over the past year. There were 1,267 brick buildings and 331 frame buildings erected during the year.

This "Ball rent bill," if held constitutional by the courts, will stop at once all further building and progress in the District of Columbia. The tenant you propose to help will find himself unable to obtain rent, and the tenements will be vacant because the landlord can not under any law be forced to rent his property. Harry Wardman will build no more beautiful apartment houses to grace this great city, for under this law he will have no more to say about his property than an idiot under guardianship. Under this bill Jack and Jill, who work on the street cars or in the sewer department, and who possess nothing but their daily wage, can live at the New Willard Hotel, for those beautiful rooms will be rented by the commission at a low rate, and the city hotels will be nothing but cheap rooming houses. The great dining rooms will be closed while the roomers eat at lunch counters.

In the meantime the courts will declare this vicious "Ball rent bill" unconstitutional. These three wise commissioners will lose their jobs and salaries and be forced to seek some honest employment and pay a reasonable rent and be bound to keep their contracts. Property rights will still be held sacred at the Capital of the Nation. Congress will recover from its hysterical condition and legislate in a sane and lawful manner, and the good people of the District of Columbia, although they have no vote, will still be entitled to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I regret that it becomes necessary to correct misinformation that has been conveyed to the House by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY], who has just spoken. The gentleman from Maine, it appears, has made a careful study of the bill. He spoke from elaborate notes, which, at least, indicates that he has made a careful study of it. After his careful study of the bill, he enunciates two propositions. The first is, that it is unconstitutional, and the next is that a man who owns any property can not be a member of the rent commission. The constitutional question is a large one, but lawyers as good as the gentleman from Maine in the past have been mistaken upon propositions like this, and I greatly trust that in this instance the wish is not father of the opinion.

We remember quite well that only a few years ago Mr. Taft, then President of the United States, a most careful lawyer, vetoed a bill of great national moment because it was unconstitutional. In a few months thereafter the Supreme Court of the United States held it to be constitutional.

As to the other proposition, that a man can not own any property and be a member of this commission, I believe I have only to read this section of the bill, section 102:

A commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the rent commission of the District of Columbia, which shall be composed of three commissioners, none of whom shall be directly or indirectly engaged in, or in any manner interested in or connected with, the real estate or renting business in the District of Columbia.

Can anything be plainer than that the gentleman has made a mistake in his interpretation of the bill? A man can own all the property he wants to own here in the District of Columbia or elsewhere and be eligible to membership upon this commission provided he is not interested in the real estate or renting business.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I should just like to call the attention of the House to this condition: If I own my property and desire to be gone for the summer, say over the vacation, and I can not afford to leave that property setting idle, if I sublease it to a man when this bill becomes a law, under section 109, I defy any legitimate property owner to get the tenant out without the trouble of going before the commission and establishing the fact that you want the property again for the bona fide residence of your own family.

Let us suppose just a little variation of that. Suppose that I have a property and a family; suppose I have a son who is going to be married in two years, and I do not need this property which I have until two years. A legitimate tenant comes to me and makes a legitimate contract with me to vacate that property in two years' time, so that my son may live in it. If this law passes, if this bill becomes a law, there is no power that can get that tenant out of that property against his will, because section 109 says "any contract or lease made hereafter"—even after this law becomes effective—"any lease or any contract for such use or occupancy or under any extension thereof by the operation of the law shall, notwithstanding the expiration of the term, continue." In other words, it shall not expire, even in the face of the fact that there was a contract or agreement between the two parties of sound mind, recognized as having power to make a contract. This law says it shall not expire if the lessee decides that he does not want to move out.

Read it, gentlemen. I simply make a closing appeal to you, gentlemen, not to defeat the provision of the law but to compel these conferees to take cognizance of the fact that the owner of the property has some rights. I hate to oppose this bill, because it has many good features. It will strike somewhat at the high rates of rent. But in a choice between two evils I would rather be robbed of something in paying house rent than jeopardize property rights.

If the conferees had been willing they could have amended this bill without any trouble. One of the conferees stated on the floor that the bill was not a good bill, and in the next breath he said, "You could not get good men as commissioners to serve for $5,000 for two years," but he said it would stay on the statute books; it would stay on, and——

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. The gentleman is misquoting me. I did not say it was not a good bill. I said it was not as good a bill as was brought in the other day.

Mr. BEGG. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I stand corrected. But the gentleman said in his judgment it would stay on the statute books permanently. I submit to you, gentlemen, if you are framing a basic law that is likely to become permanent, should you not be a little bit jealous of the direction that this is going?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House does not wish to listen to a constitutional argument, and if it does wish to hear such an argument, I am not able to make it. But we took counsel of gentlemen who are supposed to be learned on these questions, and without exception they expressed themselves to the effect that this bill is constitutional. The Congress of the United States, under the Constitution, has exclusive jurisdiction over the District of Columbia; a state of war exists; disturbed conditions following and due to the war will exist for a long time; and the war power of Congress continues while these conditions continue. And, besides, the Government of the United States has the right to protect itself. If not, a condition somewhat aggravated over the condition now existing might exist, making it difficult for the Government to function. Unquestionably the Government has the right to protect itself.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] says that Congress has no power to pass a law impairing the obligation of a contract. There is nothing in the Constitution to that effect. The only provision of that kind in the Constitution is that no State shall pass a law which impairs the obligation of a contract, and that is the only limitation of that kind I know of. There is no express limitation of that kind as to the power of the Congress of the United States that I know of.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes; briefly.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand the gentleman to say that a few of the landlords here in the District of Columbia could prevent the Government of the United States from functioning?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. A few of them?

Mr. WALSH. Or all of them.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes; and other owners of rental property. They might embarrass the Federal Government seriously, and it is to forbid and to prevent that that this act is passed.

Mr. WALSH. That is a very interesting statement.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] is insisting that there shall be an amendment. For what purpose? I will tell you why. So that a tenant can be thrown into the street without notice, without any opportunity to appeal to a board, to a commission, or to a court. Why do I say that? A week ago the gentleman was discussing this bill and was insisting that the right of the landlord is being taken away from him. His remarks appear on page 6373 of the RECORD of October 4. He said:

Put in mine—

That is, speaking of his amendment—and you will get rid of them—

The tenants—

the day you pass it.

Mr. BEGG. That is the sublettor.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. He said:

How soon can a bona fide owner of property get rid of a sublettor under this? Under this law all I am asking is some kind of an arrangement whereby it can be done at once.

This law is intended to prevent that very thing; it is intended to take away from anyone who controls property—the owner, the lessee, or the sublessee—the arbitrary right to fix rents or renting conditions, to make them exorbitant or unreasonable, if he wishes to do so, or to forbid possession altogether of rental property, and to put the tenant into the street at his will and pleasure.

It is to prevent extortion and unwarranted abuse of tenants and at the same time to protect property owners in a proper use of their property that this law is to be passed. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY] speaks about no opportunity having been given on the floor for those who wish to plead the cause of the owners and the landlords. Well, I did not know that any gentleman here wished to appear and pose as the representative of the owner and the landlord. The conferees, to the limit of their ability, took into consideration the rights and obligations of owner and lessee alike. We tried and did the very best we could to protect both, and in my judgment that has been done in the bill. No one of the conferees took the position which the gentleman from Maine takes, that somebody must be on hand on committees and on the floor of the House to represent the owner and the profiteer. We tried to give proper consideration to the rights of all, and I believe we have protected all. We think we have brought a fair bill before this House.

Mr. WELLING. Is it the judgment of the conferees that this bill will decrease the building that is now going on in the District of Columbia?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In our judgment it is as fair a bill as can possibly be made under the circumstances and will not, at least unduly, embarrass any interest.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, how much time is remaining?

The SPEAKER. Six minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying to note the fact that only two men have risen to oppose this proposition. One raises the contention that this amendment will discourage building. Why, gentlemen, if it does anything, it will encourage building and increase housing facilities in the District of Columbia.

Under the Saulsbury resolution leases were continued without increased rent. We now provide that the landlord may appeal to a commission and have a fair and reasonable rent determined by the commission. That surely is an improvement over the present state of affairs.

The conferees undertook to protect the landlord as well as the tenant. I will never be a party to the repudiation of a contract or the confiscation of property. Why, even the pirates of old had a sense of honor that led them to redeem rather than to repudiate their obligations.

Mr. HERSEY. Does the gentleman think he did a fair thing to the landlord, when the contract of rent had expired, to continue that contract for two years more?

Mr. HAUGEN. We have improved upon the rights which he now has. We have now guaranteed him a just and reasonable return for the rental of his property. He does not have that guaranty under the Saulsbury resolution. We give him a right that he does not have at present. The law has been improved upon to that extent. True, it does not allow the landlord to turn the tenant out into the street without just cause, but it does guarantee a just and reasonable rent to him.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman made the statement, if I understood him, that he would never sanction the repudiation of a contract.

Mr. HAUGEN. I did.

Mr. BEGG. Section 109 says that at the expiration of the contract if the tenant decides that he wants to stick on, he may do so.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is in the Saulsbury law.

Mr. BEGG. The Saulsbury law is already here.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is in effect now. Here we give protection to the landlord affected by the Saulsbury resolution.

Mr. BEGG. Yes; but after this goes into effect——

Mr. HAUGEN. We repeal the Saulsbury resolution after 60 days. As the gentleman knows, the term of the Ball bill originally was for four years, but we have cut it down to two years. That will give ample time to test the law, and for the Committee on the District of Columbia to pass another bill, if it sees fit to do so.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Has anyone called attention to the fact that the legislation now before us is the important amendment to the food-control bill which the President asked for in his most recent message, which puts teeth in section 4 of the food-control act? That important matter, so far as I have heard, has not been referred to in this discussion. One would get the impression in listening to this debate that we were simply passing a rent bill for the District of Columbia rather than a very important piece of legislation affecting the whole country, which the President and the Attorney General recommended as important in carrying out the effort to reduce the high cost of living.

Mr. HERSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not the floor.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield.

Mr. HERSEY. Did the President recommend the passage of this Ball rent bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Not that I now recall, and that is why I am calling attention to the fact that the legislation now before us is not primarily the Ball rent bill for the District of Columbia, but the very important and far-reaching amendment to the food-control bill recommended by the President of the United States, urged by the Attorney General, and believed by them to be of importance in the control of the high cost of living.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield? Does not the gentleman know that the food-control conditions of this bill have become balled up with the rent proposition in the Ball bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. There seems to have been some balling up, and hence my remarks calling attention to the fact that this is an amendment to the food-control bill which we are discussing, and not, except in an incidental way, a rent bill.

The SPEAKER. The time for debate has expired, the previous question is ordered, the question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky) there were 57 ayes and 15 noes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. It is clear that no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 210, nays 8, answered "present" 4, not voting 207, as follows:

YEAS—210.

Alexander	Blanton	Candler	Drane
Almon	Boies	Cannon	Dunbar
Anderson	Booher	Carter	Eagan
Andrews, Nebr.	Box	Clark, Mo.	Echols
Ashbrook	Briggs	Coady	Elliott
Ayres	Brinson	Cole	Elston
Baer	Brooks, Ill.	Connally	Esch
Bankhead	Browne	Cramton	Evans, Mont.
Barbour	Brumbaugh	Crisp	Evans, Nebr.
Barkley	Buchanan	Dale	Fairfield
Bee	Burdick	Davis, Tenn.	Ferris
Benham	Burroughs	Denison	Fess
Black	Byrnes, S. C.	Dickinson, Mo.	Fisher
Bland, Ind.	Byrns, Tenn.	Dickinson, Iowa	Fordney
Bland, Mo.	Campbell, Kans.	Dominick	Frear
Bland, Va.	Campbell, Pa.	Dowell	French

Gard	Kinkaid	Oldfield	Steagall
Glynn	Kraus	Oliver	Stedman
Goodwin, Ark.	Lampert	Overstreet	Stevenson
Graham, Ill.	Lanham	Padgett	Stiness
Green, Iowa	Lankford	Parrish	Strong, Kans.
Greene, Mass.	Lazaro	Phelan	Summers, Wash.
Greene, Vt.	Lea, Calif.	Quin	Sumners, Tex.
Hadley	Lehlbach	Rainey, J. W.	Sweet
Hamilton	Lonergan	Raker	Temple
Hardy, Colo.	Lufkin	Ramsey	Thomas
Hardy, Tex.	McDuffie	Ramseyer	Thompson
Haskell	McGlennon	Randall, Calif.	Tillman
Hastings	McKeown	Reed, W. Va.	Tilson
Haugen	McKinley	Ricketts	Timberlake
Hawley	McLaughlin, Mich	Riddick	Tincher
Hayden	MacCrate	Robinson, N. C.	Treadway
Hays	MacGregor	Rodenberg	Venable
Hernandez	Madden	Rogers	Vestal
Hickey	Mapes	Romjue	Vinson
Hill	Martin	Rose	Volstead
Hoch	Mays	Rouse	Wason
Huddleston	Mead	Rubey	Watkins
Hudspeth	Michener	Sabath	Watson, Va.
Hull, Tenn.	Miller	Sanders, Ind.	Weaver
Igoe	Minahan, N. J.	Sanders, La.	Webster
Jacoway	Monahan, Wis.	Schall	Welling
James	Mondell	Sears	Welty
Johnson, Ky.	Moore, Va.	Sherwood	Whaley
Johnson, Miss.	Morgan	Shreve	White, Kans.
Johnson, S. Dak.	Mott	Sims	White, Me.
Jones, Tex.	Nelson, Mo.	Sinclair	Wingo
Kahn	Newton, Minn.	Sinnott	Winslow
Kearns	Newton, Mo.	Small	Woods, Va.
Keller	Nicholls, S. C.	Smith, Idaho	Young, N. Dak.
Kelly, Pa.	Nichols, Mich.	Smith, Mich.	Young, Tex.
Kincheloe	Nolan	Smithwick
King	O'Connor	Snell

NAYS—8.

Begg	Evans, Nev.	Hersey	McFadden
Dent	Gould	Humphreys	Walsh

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—4.

Butler	Flood	Garner	Garrett

NOT VOTING—207.

Ackerman	Fields	Lee, Ga.	Reber
Andrews, Md.	Fitzgerald	Lesher	Reed, N. Y.
Anthony	Focht	Linthicum	Rhodes
Aswell	Foster	Little	Riordan
Babka	Freeman	Longworth	Robsion, Ky.
Bacharach	Fuller, Ill.	Luce	Rowan
Bell	Fuller, Mass.	Luhring	Rowe
Benson	Gallagher	McAndrews	Rucker
Blackmon	Gallivan	McArthur	Sanders, N. Y.
Bowers	Gandy	McClintic	Sanford
Brand	Ganly	McCulloch	Saunders, Va.
Britten	Garland	McKenzie	Scott
Brooks, Pa.	Godwin, N. C.	McKinley	Scully
Browning	Goldfogle	McLane	Sells
Burke	Good	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Siegel
Caldwell	Goodall	McPherson	Sisson
Cantrill	Goodykoontz	Magee	Slemp
Caraway	Graham, Pa.	Maher	Smith, Ill.
Carew	Griest	Major	Smith, N. Y.
Carss	Griffin	Mann	Snyder
Casey	Hamill	Mansfield	Steele
Chindblom	Harrison	Mason	Steenerson
Christopherson	Heflin	Merritt	Stephens, Miss.
Clark, Fla.	Hersman	Montague	Stephens, Ohio.
Classon	Hicks	Moon	Strong, Pa.
Cleary	Holland	Mooney	Sullivan
Collier	Houghton	Moore, Ohio	Swope
Cooper	Howard	Moore, Pa.	Taylor, Ark.
Copley	Hulings	Moores, Ind.	Taylor, Colo.
Costello	Hull, Iowa	Morin	Taylor, Tenn.
Crago	Husted	Mudd	Tinkham
Crowther	Hutchinson	Murphy	Towner
Cullen	Ireland	Neely	Upshaw
Currie, Mich.	Jefferis	Nelson, Wis.	Vaile
Curry, Calif.	Johnson, Wash.	O'Connell	Vare
Dallinger	Johnston, N. Y.	Ogden	Voigt
Darrow	Jones, Pa.	Olney	Walters
Davey	Juul	Osborne	Ward
Davis, Minn.	Kelley, Mich.	Paige	Watson, Pa.
Dempsey	Kendall	Park	Webb
Dewalt	Kennedy, Iowa	Parker	Wheeler
Donovan	Kennedy, R. I.	Pell	Williams
Dooling	Kettner	Peters	Wilson, Ill.
Doremus	Kiess	Platt	Wilson, La.
Doughton	Kitchin	Porter	Wilson, Pa.
Dunn	Kleczka	Pou	Wise
Dupré	Knutson	Purnell	Wood, Ind.
Dyer	Kreider	Radcliffe	Woodyard
Eagle	LaGuardia	Rainey, H. T.	Wright
Edmonds	Langley	Randall, Wis.	Yates
Ellsworth	Larsen	Rayburn	Zihlman
Emerson	Layton	Reavis

So the conference report was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. KNUTSON with Mr. BELL.

Mr. LANGLEY with Mr. FIELDS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio with Mr. BRAND.

Mr. MCPHERSON with Mr. MAJOR.

Mr. MCARTHUR with Mr. SISSON.

Mr. BOWERS with Mr. NEELY.

Mr. LONGWORTH with Mr. GARNER.

Mr. BUTLER with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. KLECZKA with Mr. MCANDREWS.

Mr. REAVIS with Mr. BABKA.

Mr. REBER with Mr. ASWELL.

Mr. FOSTER with Mr. POU.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois with Mr. PELL.

Mr. GRIEST with Mr. LEE of Georgia.

Mr. PETERS with Mr. CANTRILL.

Mr. FOCHT with Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY.

Mr. TINKHAM with Mr. MONTAGUE.

Mr. TOWNER with Mr. MANSFIELD.

Mr. VARE with Mr. MCLANE.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ with Mr. LINTHICUM.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia.

Mr. HULL of Iowa with Mr. KETTNER.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania with Mr. GALLIVAN.

Mr. VOIGT with Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina.

Mr. HUSTED with Mr. JOHNSTON of New York.

Mr. CROWTHER with Mr. SULLIVAN.

Mr. HUTCHINSON with Mr. HOWARD.

Mr. KENDALL with Mr. HERSMAN.

Mr. ACKERMAN with Mr. WRIGHT.

Mr. RADCLIFFE with Mr. BENSON.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio with Mr. CULLEN.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania with Mr. COLLIER.

Mr. MORIN with Mr. CLEARY.

Mr. MUDD with Mr. CLARK of Florida.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin with Mr. CASEY.

Mr. KREIDER with Mr. HAMILL.

Mr. DUNN with Mr. ROWAN.

Mr. DYER with Mr. RIORDAN.

Mr. CURRY of California with Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi.

Mr. DALLINGER with Mr. SMITH of New York.

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island with Mr. HEFLIN.

Mr. KIESS with Mr. HARRISON.

Mr. OGDEN with Mr. CARSS.

Mr. OSBORNE with Mr. CAREW.

Mr. PAIGE with Mr. CARAWAY.

Mr. WHEELER with Mr. GALLAGHER.

Mr. WILLIAMS with Mr. FITZGERALD.

Mr. ZIHLMAN with Mr. DOREMUS.

Mr. ANTHONY with Mr. WISE.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania with Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. LAYTON with Mr. GRIFFIN.

Mr. LUHRING with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. RHODES with Mr. DONOVAN.

Mr. DARROW with Mr. SCULLY.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Nebraska with Mr. DEWALT.

Mr. PORTER with Mr. CALDWELL.

Mr. WALTERS with Mr. GANLY.

Mr. WARD with Mr. GANDY.

Mr. MAGEE with Mr. DAVEY.

Mr. PURNELL with Mr. BLACKMON.

Mr. ROWE with Mr. OLNEY.

Mr. SCOTT with Mr. O'CONNELL.

Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania with Mr. MOON.

Mr. BROWNING with Mr. WILSON of Louisiana.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois with Mr. EAGLE.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana with Mr. DUPRÉ.

Mr. BURKE with Mr. WEBB.

Mr. CHINDBLOM with Mr. UPSHAW.

Mr. WOODYARD with Mr. DOUGHTON.

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts with Mr. PARK.

Mr. COSTELLO with Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado.

Mr. GOODALL with Mr. MCCLINTIC.

Mr. CRAGO with Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas.

Mr. EDMONDS with Mr. RAYBURN.

Mr. HOUGHTON with Mr. LARSEN.

Mr. HULINGS with Mr. KITCHIN.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania with Mr. LESHER.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, October 13, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the secretary of Hawaii, transmitting copy of the journal of the senate of Hawaii (H. Doc. No. 263); to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. GOOD, from the Special Committee on Budget, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 324) to provide changes in the rules of the House in connection with the establishment of a national budget, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 373), which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. GREENE of Vermont, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2867) authorizing the President, when Maj. Gen. Crowder retires, to place him on the retired list of the Army as a lieutenant general, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 374), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KINCHELOE: A bill (H. R. 9878) granting additional pay to the enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MOTT: A bill (H. R. 9879) to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, as amended; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 9880) granting recognition to certain female employees of the War Department who served abroad; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: A bill (H. R. 9881) changing the time of day in March and October of each year; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: A bill (H. R. 9882) to further provide for the presidential succession; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 228) authorizing the establishment of a free port at Wilmington, N. C.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 229) requesting the President of the United States to proclaim demobilization of the Army; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 230) authorizing and directing the Secretary of Agriculture to prepare and issue a supplemental report on the condition of the cotton crop; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. TIMBERLAKE: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 231) providing for the loan of Army tents, tarpaulins, and other means of protection to certain States of the Union; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills, and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BRUMBAUGH: A bill (H. R. 9883) granting a pension to James Phelps; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9884) granting a pension to Henry Blankenship; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9885) granting a pension to Albert N. Oakleaf; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. EMERSON: A bill (H. R. 9886) granting a pension to John B. Lang; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: A bill (H. R. 9887) granting a pension to George J. Molloy; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GANLY: A bill (H. R. 9888) for the relief of Mary Ginsberg and Abram Ginsberg; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GLYNN: A bill (H. R. 9889) granting an increase of pension to Julia A. Birge; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUMPHREYS: A bill (H. R. 9890) to reimburse Hugh J. McKane for property destroyed by fire in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 9891) granting an increase of pension to Tillie Wester; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KEARNS: A bill (H. R. 9892) granting an increase of pension to Minnie Nordyke; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 9893) granting an increase of pension to Hester A. Phillips; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEA of California: A bill (H. R. 9894) granting an increase of pension to Walter J. Shelley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LONERGAN: A bill (H. R. 9895) to correct the military record of Patrick Kennedy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOON: A bill (H. R. 9896) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of A. K. Ball; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STRONG of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 9897) granting a pension to Mirtie Hudson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WALSH: A bill (H. R. 9898) granting a pension to Hodges W. Drayton, alias Lawrence G. Sommers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAND of Missouri: Petition of the American Legion of Kansas City, relating to the unnecessary wrongs inflicted against officers and soldiers of the American Expeditionary Forces; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ELLIOTT: Petition of the American War Mothers, in national convention assembled in Washington, D. C., favoring the return to this country of all the American dead; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McGLENNON: Petition of Patrick J. Long and others, of New Jersey, protesting against the ratification of the proposed league of nations; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. MOON: Papers to accompany bill to remove desertion charge from record of A. K. Ball; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAKER: Letter from the Engineer and Architects' Association of Los Angeles, Calif., inclosing copies of two resolutions relative to the General Staff bill for reorganization of the Army and an all-American canal in Imperial County, Calif.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of John R. Lyle & Co., of Susanville, Calif., protesting against the passage of the Siegel bill (H. R. 8115); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, letter from the California Metal Producers' Association of California, San Francisco, Calif., protesting against Senate bill 2896, known as the revenue explosive act of 1919; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. REED of West Virginia: Petition of Messrs. S. M. Levinstein, J. H. Fisher, J. H. Asper, and 30 other merchants of Buckhannon, W. Va., protesting against the provisions of the Siegel bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: Petition of John R. White and 91 other voters and taxpayers of Waitsburg, Walla Walla County, Wash., favoring the enactment into law of Senate bill 1017, known as the Smith educational bill; to the Committee on Education.

SENATE.

MONDAY, October 13, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thy gracious favor. Thou dost hold the nations in the hollow of Thy hand. Thou art our king. Thou art our father. We look to Thee for Thy command. We look to Thee for Thy gracious voice calling us to the larger fields of life and service. Fit us to-day for the responsibilities that are upon us. Grant us Thy gracious favor. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal may be dispensed with.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I rather think the Journal should be read.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection if any Senator wants to have it read.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask a question with reference to the Journal. I tried to observe the reading closely, but was interrupted. I want to know whether the Journal shows that a motion was entered to discharge the Committee on Commerce from the further consideration of what is known as the free-port bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not.

The Journal was approved.

ESTIMATE OF APPROPRIATION (S. DOC. NO. 129).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $2,000 required for additional employees for the courthouse for the fiscal year 1920, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY CO. (S. DOC. NO. 130).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting a copy of the report of the commission in valuation docket No. 4, the Kansas City Southern Railway Co. et al. The communication will be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

SHORTAGE OF SUGAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The last paragraph of clause 5 of Rule VII reads:

No petition or memorial or other paper signed by citizens or subjects of a foreign power shall be received unless the same be transmitted to the Senate by the President.

This devolves upon the part of the Presiding Officer the sending of every paper from a citizen or subject of a foreign power to the President of the United States for the purpose of a determination as to whether it shall be handed down by the Senate.

The Chair has a communication which has nothing whatever to do with the foreign relations of the United States of America, which the Chair believes conveys certain information that the Senate is not advised of, and the Chair asks unanimous consent that the rule may be suspended in order that he may lay it before the Senate. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the communication.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

SANTIAGO, CUBA, October 11, 1919.

HON. PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE
OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington.

In the name of the Association de Hacendados y Colonos de Cuba—that is to say, the manufacturers and sugar planters' association—I beg to inform you respectfully that no person is authorized to legally negotiate the sale of the coming Cuban sugar crop.

ALEJO E. CARRENO,
President of the Association.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, in connection with the sugar shortage, I have a newspaper article published in the Washington Star of yesterday on the subject, which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Star, Oct. 12, 1919.]

"DEMAND FOR SUGAR IN UNITED STATES IN EXCESS OF PRODUCTION—PRESENT SHORTAGE BELIEVED DUE TO ECONOMIC MISTAKE—CALL FOR BRINGING THE CONSUMPTION BACK TO NORMAL.

(By Sidney Ballou.)

"The facts in regard to the sugar shortage are fortunately undisputed, whatever may be the difference of opinion with regard to what should or should not have been done. These facts, as established before the Senate Committee on Agriculture, are as follows:

"1. There has been no shortage of actual supplies of sugar available in this country for this year. On the contrary, more sugar is being furnished and consumed in the United States this year than ever before.

"2. The shortage is caused by an excessive demand and the effort to supply sugar enough to meet that demand. Our prewar consumption averaged about 83 pounds per capita and our war-time consumption 75 pounds. This year the consumption is running at the rate of 92 pounds per capita.

"3. For the first nine months of the year there has been furnished and passed into consumption—that is, sold by producers and refiners to the trade—3,263,000 long tons, as against last year's figure to the same date of 2,661,000 long tons. Our total consumption for the whole of last year was 3,500,000 tons.

"4. The world production of sugar is about 2,000,000 tons short of the prewar average, and this year's production is nearly a million tons short of last year's.

"5. In the midst of this world shortage the American consumer has been furnished sugar at a price substantially lower than that prevailing in any other country, and very low in comparison with the increase in price in other basic food commodities.

"VARIANCE IN VIEW.

"As to the deductions to be drawn from these facts, there is a difference of opinion. The Sugar Equalization Board takes great pride in having thus furnished this sugar to the American consumer at this price in the midst of a world's shortage. It is open to question, however, whether they have not made an economic mistake in so doing, for which we are about to pay in the shape of a shortage and of extraordinarily high prices.

"It would be an ideal arrangement if the price of sugar could be fixed at a point which would yield a fair profit to the producers, the refiners, and the distributors, and could be supplied to the consumers indefinitely at the resulting price. Such an arrangement, however, omits one important factor, and that is the law of supply and demand.

"In ordinary times the price of sugar fluctuates and is constantly maintained at a point at which the country is just consuming the available supply as it comes to the market. If the demand increases or the supply is diminished, the price rises until the consumption is checked accordingly. If the contrary happens, a decrease in price stimulates the consumption.

"When a price is fixed based solely upon cost of production and distribution plus a fair profit, it may happen that the resulting price is such that the consumer will proceed to do as he has done this year—that is, eat up a normal year's supply in nine months. When this happens, one of two things must be done—either the price must be increased or the sugar must be rationed. Failure to do either will inevitably result in a shortage. During the war Hoover administered sugar upon the basis of cost plus a fair profit for all concerned. The costs of the producers and refiners were carefully and impartially determined, the figures in most cases being checked up by the Tariff Commission. The Food Administration never fixed the price of a commodity without first calling the producers together, examining their costs, and finally agreeing on a price. This avoided the most dangerous pitfall of price fixing, which is the discouragement of production.

"HOOVER'S DRASTIC RATIONING SYSTEM.

"At the other end of the line, in order to overcome the natural working of the law of supply and demand, Hoover adopted a drastic system of rationing. Manufacturers who used sugar were put on a particularly strict allowance, so that a fair proportion of sugar was reserved for table consumption. Individual consumers were appealed to to restrict their consumption and responded to an extraordinary degree. Offenders against the regulations of the Food Administration were haled before perfectly illegal tribunals and fined for the benefit of the Red Cross, all of which was approved and sustained by public sentiment.

"The present Sugar Equalization Board is a corporation which was formed by the Food Administration for the purpose of assisting in the control of the sugar situation. It purchased the entire Cuban crop for this year—two-thirds on our own account and one-third on account of our allies. Added to our domestic sugars, this seemed an adequate provision of supplies for the present year.

"With the cessation of hostilities, however, the consumption of sugar began to increase enormously. Physical workers, who particularly need sugar, were being paid high wages and could indulge in the luxury of sweets. Prohibition added to the demand. By July 1 it was established that the country was consuming sugar at an unparalleled rate of 92 pounds per capita, and at the same time the revised estimates of the world's production were published, showing a shortage of a million tons even, as against last year's war-time production.

"It was evident that the law of supply and demand was making itself felt and should be reckoned with. Nevertheless neither alternative for checking consumption was adopted. An increase in the price would have been unpopular, and even at present the Equalization Board insists that it will maintain the present price on all sugar still within its control until the close of the year. Rationing would have been still more unpopular, even if it were still practicable after the relaxation of war tension.

"RENDERS SHORTAGE INEVITABLE.

"Failure to adopt either expedient rendered a shortage inevitable. The Sugar Equalization Board apparently proceeded on the theory that this shortage could be postponed until after the end of the year, when it expected to go out of business. It began to borrow against the future. First it instructed the refiners to fill no more export orders, thereby practically placing an embargo on exports. All our so-called exports, however, were merely our allies' one-third of the Cuban crop, which was being refined in this country, so that this amounted to a temporary stoppage of their supplies, doubtless on the expectation that it could be repaid without inconvenience in the future. Like so many borrowers' expectations, this has been disappointed. For the balance of the year the Equalization Board is depending upon the domestic beet-sugar crop to relieve the situation. This again would involve a marketing of an unusually large percentage before January 1, and even if the limits of railroad equipment permitted this to be done it would be more borrowing against the future.

"In August there arose the question of the desirability of purchasing the Cuban crop for next year. The Cuban committee opened the subject by professing its readiness to negotiate, though no price was mentioned. The Equalization Board requested authority from the President, who is nominally its only stockholder, to begin negotiations, but received no reply to its communications other than formal acknowledgments. On September 23 the Cuban offer to negotiate was withdrawn, and President Menocal stated that it would no longer be possible to control the Cuban producers sufficiently to effectuate the sale at a fixed price. Nevertheless this question is still being agitated, and a bill has been introduced in the Senate to give the Equalization Board the necessary authority.

"ONLY ONE STEP IN PROBLEM.

"In considering the advisability of this purchase, even if it was still possible, it must be remembered that this is only one step in the problem. It must not be assumed that even if the whole crop were available it could be passed on to the American consumer in unrestricted amounts at a price below that dictated by a world shortage. This can not be done. Either the price must be fixed at a level which will check consumption or some central body must be given authority to say who shall have sugar and who shall not. Otherwise the big manufacturers will get their quota, and the entire shortage will be turned upon the portion destined for table consumption, while in this field the big man will have the advantage in the scramble over the small one, with endless inequalities and charges of favoritism.

"Another feature which is apparently to be introduced is the Department of Justice. Attempts to regulate prices by penal statutes have failed at all times, in all places, and in all countries. Mr. Hoover testified that such attempts in England frequently resulted in the entire commodity disappearing from the visible market. If left to the initiative of individual district attorneys the first effect will be that sellers of the commodity will avoid the chances of indictment, and the more vigorous the prosecution on the ground of excessive prices the less sugar will be found in that particular district.

"RESULT IS HIGHER PRICES.

"It looks as though we had already overstayed our limit in the contest with the law of supply and demand. It is already evident that there will be a shortage during the remaining months of this year, and that the price, whether it escapes from control now or after January 1, will reach a point which it would not have reached had it been allowed to conform more nearly to economic law. The longer that regulation is continued upon the present policy, with no adequate provision for bringing consumption back to normal, the more acute will be the shortage."

VOTING POWER OF GREAT BRITAIN IN LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have a short article here from a prominent attorney of Minneapolis, Mr. Bright, one of the ablest attorneys, upon the question of the voting power of England and her colonies, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"THE ENGLISH DOMINIONS AND THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

"To the Editor of The Tribune:

"Some misapprehension is manifest in the discussion of this subject. In the first place, the notion has been fostered that Great Britain secured membership in the league for the Dominion so that her power would be enlarged, whereas membership was conceded to the dominions as a recognition of their independent dignity and worth as free, self-governed peoples. No one, upon cool judgment, would say that Cuba, Haiti, and Panama should be members and Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa should be excluded on their merits. India with her 300,000,000 is not, to be sure, as self-governed as the others, but she is looking that way and will be more and more self-governed as time goes on.

"The question has been raised as to whether these dominions may be represented on the council, and Mr. Wilson has been sharply criticized because he said they could not, although in Paris he agreed with Lloyd-George and Clemenceau that they were eligible. Now the object of this criticism was not so much to show Mr. Wilson's inconsistency as to create the impression that there was danger of Great Britain and the dominions all being represented on the council and thus have control or an overpowering influence. Mr. Wilson was right when he said the dominions were eligible because four of them could be chosen to take the place of Belgium, Brazil, Greece, and Spain, and the fifth might be represented if the number of league members having the right to representation on the council were enlarged as provided in article 4 of the covenant. If, then, everything was done as provided by the covenant to the end that Great Britain and the dominions should all be represented on the council they would be. On the other hand, Mr. Wilson was also right when he said that it was impossible for that to occur, because in the first case it would require a unanimous consent of the whole assembly to choose the four, and, in the second, the unanimous consent of the council with a majority approval of the assembly to enlarge the council.

"Now, when a thing is practically impossible, it is impossible in a very real sense. There would be no reason in objecting to the result apprehended if all were agreed that it was desirable and should give their consent, but it would then cease to be apprehended or considered a menace. In such case the United States would have consented and could not complain. But it is nothing short of an absurdity to suppose that such overwhelming representation of the English-speaking peoples on the council would find that unanimous support which would be necessary to accomplish it. You could not get a majority of the assembly to support such a proposition, and you must have unanimous consent to admit one dominion in place of Belgium or Brazil or Greece or Spain. And think of the quadruple absurdity of putting a dominion in the place of each of them. Before there would be any place for the fifth you must secure the unanimous consent of the council and a majority of the assembly to an enlargement of the council as provided in article 4, and the unanimous consent to elect India instead of some other State to a seat on the council. It may be stated with great certainty that such result is a practical impossibility.

"UNEQUAL REPRESENTATION.

"It must be conceded that many people sincerely believe that the United States will suffer a serious disadvantage in comparison with Great Britain and her dominions because of the basis of representation in the assembly of the league. But if this disadvantage is sentimental and not practical, then it is not serious and we can well afford to bear it rather than hinder for an hour the ratification of the treaty. Our consolation should be ample in the reflection that if the English-speaking peoples are all members of the league on an equal footing, and, without jealousy or rivalry, looking not to control of the league, but rather cooperating in the interest of peace, the league will be worth while. If, however, at the very threshold that harmony is broken by childish protests of a sensational nature, and which carry a suggestion of distrust and antagonism between the United States and the other English-speaking State, a cloud passes over the league. There can be no successful league of nations without the harmony of the English-speaking nations, and the demagogic cry that this covenant is a pro-British covenant because of the representation on the assembly of these self-governing peoples on an equal footing with all others is made by those who would defeat the treaty, and is repeated by many honest men who accept what Senators or editors say instead of reflecting upon what the covenant provides and making their own conclusion.

"It is perfectly clear that the United States has greater protection in a dispute between it and Great Britain in the assembly than would be enjoyed if the dispute were in the council, concerning which no alarm has been sounded, because a decision or conclusion could only be reached by the unanimous vote of the seven nations represented on the council outside the disputants, and by a majority of all the other members of the league excluding the disputants. We would be better protected notwithstanding the votes of the dominions because it would be no easy thing for Great Britain, simply as matter of influence, to get a majority of the assembly. It would have to appear pretty clearly that she was in the right. Whatever disadvantage there might be in the votes of the dominions in such a dispute, or any other, the United States may well accept it in order that the dominions shall have representation in the assembly as fully self-governing States, with the same standards, the same language, and the same great purposes in entering the league that we have. It has been said that it is not demanded that they be excluded, but that the United States have six votes; but it is plain enough that where the United States is a party to a dispute six votes would be no better than one, as they would all be silent or excluded. In all other cases we can well afford to take our chances on an equal and friendly footing with the dominions.

"ALFRED H. BRIGHT."

Mr. McCORMICK. I have here a copy of the official record of the debates in the Canadian Senate of September 30. I ask to have printed in the RECORD so much of it as deals with the representation of the British Empire and colonies in the league of nations.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"Hon. HEWITT BOSTOCK. Honorable gentlemen, we are now asked to deal with a bill which is for the purpose of supplementing the treaty which we approved of by resolution the other day. It is not my intention to go into a discussion of the treaty itself, because I think it was fully discussed before, and I should be only repeating what was said at that time. But, with the permission of the house, I desire to bring to your attention some papers that have been brought down to Parliament since the adjournment and which I think have considerable bearing on the way in which this matter has been dealt with and show the reason why we have been asked to deal with this question in what, on a previous occasion, I termed a rather hurried and unsatisfactory way, inasmuch as the honorable members of this house had the official copy of the treaty placed in their hands on the 2d of September and were asked to approve of it, and did approve of it, on the 4th of September. Considering that the treaty contained some 440 articles, it was rather a large order to ask honorable gentlemen to deal with the various questions and express an opinion upon them in that short time.

"I think I drew attention to the fact that on this side of the house we did not consider that the approval of the treaty by Parliament was absolutely necessary; that Parliament approved of a treaty by passing, as we are asked to pass now, a bill that provides that the Government shall do certain things in order to carry out the terms of the treaty; that the practice that we were asked to follow was entirely new for Parliament; and that we were establishing a precedent.

"I am afraid that I shall have to take up a little of the time of the house in reading the correspondence; I think it is of interest, and I hope honorable gentlemen will not object. It reads as follows:

"[Telegram from the prime minister of the United Kingdom to the prime minister of Canada.]

"LONDON, October 27, 1918.

"Sir ROBERT BORDEN, Ottawa:

"October 27, 1918. I think that you ought to be prepared to start without delay for Europe, if the Germans accept the terms of the armistice, which we shall propose after our meeting at Versailles this week, as the peace conference will in that event probably open within a few weeks, and this will have to be preceded by interallied conferences of at least equal importance. It is, I think, very important that you should be here in order to participate in the deliberations which will determine the line to be taken at these conferences by the British delegates.

"LLOYD-GEORGE.

"[Telegram from the prime minister of Canada to the prime minister of the United Kingdom.]

"OTTAWA, October 29, 1918.

"Right Hon. DAVID LLOYD-GEORGE,
"10 Downing Street, London:

"October 29. There is need of serious consideration as to representation of the dominions in the peace negotiations. The press and people of this country take it for granted that Canada will be represented at the peace conference. I appreciate possible difficulties as to representation of the dominions, but I hope you will keep in mind that certainly a very unfortunate impression would be created and possibly a dangerous feeling might be aroused if these difficulties are not overcome by some solution which will meet the national spirit of the Canadian people. We discussed the subject to-day in council, and I found among my colleagues a striking insistence which doubtless is indicative of the general opinion entertained in this country. In a word, they feel that new conditions must be met by new precedents. I should be glad to have your views.

"BORDEN.

"[Telegram from the prime minister of the United Kingdom to the prime minister of Canada.]

"LONDON, November 3, 1919.

"Sir ROBERT BORDEN, Ottawa:

"November 3. Your telegram reached me while in Paris. I fully understand the importance of the question that you raise. It makes me impressed all the more with the importance of your coming immediately to Europe, for practically it is impossible to solve by correspondence the many difficult problems which it raises and which you fully appreciate. Also, on many questions now coming under consideration I should value your advice greatly. It will, I earnestly hope, be possible for you to sail at once.

"D. LLOYD-GEORGE.

"I think that date should be November 3, 1918.

"[Telegram from the secretary of state for the colonies to the governor general.]

"LONDON, July 4, 1919.

"It is hoped German treaty may be ratified by three of the principal allied and associated powers and by Germany before end of July.

"[Telegram from the Governor General to the Secretary of State for the Colonies.]

"OTTAWA, July 9, 1919.

"Following from prime minister: 'Your message July 4 respecting ratification of peace treaty with Germany. I am under pledge to submit the treaty to Parliament before ratification on behalf of Canada. No copy of treaty has yet arrived and Parliament has been prorogued. Kindly advise how you expect to accomplish ratification on behalf of whole Empire before end of July.'

"[Telegram from the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Governor General.]

"LONDON, July 23, 1919.

"Following for your prime minister. Begins:

"'I have now consulted with prime minister and the cabinet with reference to your most secret telegram of July 9. Our view is that early ratification, especially now that Germany has ratified, is of the highest importance. In the British constitution there is nothing which makes it necessary for the King to obtain the consent of Parliament before ratifying treaty. With perfect constitutional propriety the King can ratify on the advice of his ministers. For a treaty of this far-reaching importance, and one embracing the whole Empire, the King certainly ought not to act at the instance of all his constitutional advisers, the Dominion ministers as well as that of the United Kingdom—

"I think the word 'not' is a mistake—

"'But inasmuch as Dominion ministers participated in peace negotiations, and side by side with ministers of the United Kingdom sign preliminaries of treaty, we hold that His Majesty, if he now ratify the treaty for the whole Empire, would have the same constitutional justification in doing so in respect of dominions as he has in respect of the United Kingdom. The King by a single act would bind the whole Empire, as it is right he should so, but that act would represent the considered judgment of his constitutional advisers in all self-governing States of the Empire, because it would be merely giving effect to an international pact which they had all agreed to. We realize at the same time the difficulty in which you are placed by your pledge to Parliament. We are willing, in order to meet this difficulty, to delay ratification (which if we alone were concerned we would desire to effect immediately) as long as we possibly can in order to give you time to lay treaty before your Parliament. The question is how long will this take. At an early date could you not have a special meeting of Parliament solely for the submission of the treaty; and if so, how soon might its approval be expected? It would be impossible, in our opinion, without the gravest consequences to delay ratification until the late autumn.

"'I am communicating with the Governments of South Africa, New Zealand, and Australia, explaining urgency and begging them to submit treaty to their Parliaments without delay, if they feel bound to do so before assenting to its ratification. Ends.'

"(Sgd.) MILNER.

"[Telegram from the Governor General to the Secretary of the Colonies.]

"OTTAWA, July 29, 1919.

"Following from my prime minister. Begins:

"'Your secret telegram of July 23 has been carefully considered by cabinet, and it seems to us that there is considerable doubt whether under modern constitutional practice the King should ratify without first obtaining the approval of Parliament. We think that in accordance with recent practice and authorities such approval should be obtained in the case of treaties imposing any burden on the people or involving any change in the law of the land, or requiring legislative action to make them effective, or affecting the free exercise of the legislative power, or affecting territorial rights.

"'On the other point, we fully agree that the King in ratifying the treaty ought only to act at the instance of all his constitutional advisers throughout the Empire, but we do not entirely understand the suggestion that in the case of the Dominions the signature of the Dominion plenipotentiaries is equivalent to the tendering of advice to ratify. Do you regard this as holding good in the case of the signature of United Kingdom plenipotentiaries?

"'We propose to call special session on September 4 for purpose of presenting treaty to Parliament, and I am confident we can ratify within a week thereafter. Please cable whether this meets your views.'

"[Telegram from the Governor General to the Secretary of State for the Colonies.]

"OTTAWA, August 1, 1919.

"Following from my prime minister. Begins:

"'As we have to give 30 days' notice of summoning Parliament, I hope we have immediate reply to my telegram of July 29 respecting ratification of peace treaty.'

"[Telegram from the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Governor General.]

"Summoning of Parliament. I strongly advise your giving notice to summon immediately in view of severe pressure being put upon us from Paris to ratify at earliest possible moment. It is impossible to promise that we shall be able to keep back ratification till the 11th of September. But I will certainly do my best, and I feel pretty confident that the argument for that amount of delay would be irresistible if we could count on Canadian approval by that date.

"(Sgd.) MILNER.

"[Telegram from the Governor General to the Secretary of State for the Colonies.]

"Following message from prime minister for you:

"'Your message reached me yesterday afternoon and this morning Parliament has been summoned for Monday 1st September. I can not emphasize too strongly the unfortunate results which would certainly ensue from ratification before Canadian Parliament has had an opportunity of considering treaty.'

"[Telegram from the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Governor General.]

"Urgent.

"Re your cipher telegram of August 4. The Government of Union of South Africa has convened special session of Parliament to consider peace treaty with Germany. They are of opinion that it will be very desirable to secure uniformity in dealing with this question, and have asked me to submit suggestions as to form in which peace treaty should receive in Dominions parliamentary approval; that is, whether motion should be submitted to Parliament for that purpose or whether approval should take form of bill on lines of that submitted to Parliament here. I have answered to the effect that matter is, of course, one for decision of local government, but that best course, in my opinion, would be to obtain approval of treaty by resolution of both houses; and that if, as is probable, legislation on lines of British bill is required in order to give effect to treaty, this could follow later.

"British bill, it is important to bear in mind, is not a bill to ratify treaty, but to empower the Government to take necessary steps to carry out those provisions of treaty which require legislative authority.

"Paris is putting severe pressure upon us to ratify at the earliest possible date, and ratification by the French expected September 2 or 3.

"I should be grateful if you will inform me that procedure will be adopted by your Government. My reason for suggesting resolution of both houses is that this procedure might enable ratification to take place without delay that might be involved in obtaining parliamentary powers for carrying out treaty.

"If, as I hope, procedure by resolution will be adopted, I will assume that on receiving cable to the effect that such resolution has been passed there will be no objection to His Majesty immediately ratifying.

"Other dominions I have telegraphed in the same sense.

"(Sgd.) MILNER.

"[Telegram from the Governor General to the Secretary of State for the Colonies.]

"OTTAWA, August 23, 1919.

"Your telegram of August 12 respecting parliamentary approval of treaty of peace with Germany. Canadian Government propose to proceed by way of resolution of both houses, in order to expedite the matter. Legislation giving effect to the treaty will be introduced later.

"[Telegram from the Governor General to the Secretary of State for the Colonies.]

"OTTAWA, September 12, 1919.

"Most urgent.

"Following order in council approved to-day. Begins:

"'AT THE GOVERNMENT HOUSE AT OTTAWA,

"'12 September, 1919.

"'Present: The Governor General in council:

"'Whereas at Versailles, on the 28th day of June, 1919, a treaty of peace (including protocol annexed thereto) between the allied and associated powers and Germany was concluded and signed on behalf of His Majesty for and in respect of the Dominion of Canada by plenipotentiaries duly authorized for that purpose by His Majesty on the advice and recommendation of the Government of the Dominion of Canada;

"'And whereas the Senate and House of Commons of the Dominion of Canada have by resolution approved of the said treaty of peace;

"'And whereas it is expedient that the said treaty of peace be ratified by His Majesty for and in respect of the Dominion of Canada:

"'Now, therefore, the Governor General in council, on the recommendation of the secretary of state for external affairs, is pleased to order and doth hereby order that His Majesty the King be humbly moved to approve, accept, confirm, and ratify the said treaty of peace for and in respect of the Dominion of Canada Ends.'

"(Sgd.) DEVONSHIRE.

"[Telegram from the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Governor General.]

"LONDON, September 19, 1919.

"Most satisfactory to know that treaty of peace with Germany has been approved by Canadian Parliament. As matters have turned out, and owing to unforeseen delays on the part of other powers, British Empire will probably be in position to ratify as soon as any other two of the principal allied and associated powers. Parliaments of the Union of South Africa and New Zealand have also approved, and I hope soon to receive telegram announcing that Australian Parliament has approved.

"(Sgd.) MILNER.

"That is all the correspondence on this file. I thought it was of such interest that probably the house would not think I had taken up too much time in reading it. It shows that we were right in the contention which we made when we were asked to approve of the resolution in the first instance—the contention that it was not really necessary, inasmuch as Canada had plenipotentiaries in Paris at the time the treaty was signed; it was not really necessary, according to the custom followed in England heretofore, that the treaty should be formally approved by Parliament. But, apparently, from this correspondence, it has been arranged between the Government of the Dominion and the Government of Great Britain that this method of approving of the treaty be carried out, and in doing so we have established a new precedent in constitutional matters of this kind.

"With regard to the bill itself, honorable gentlemen who have read it will notice that we are asked by legislation to approve of the governor in council passing orders in council. We had a tremendous amount of legislation by order in council during the war, and we had hoped that when the war was over this class of legislation would be to a large extent done away with; but under this bill we are asked to give the Government power to deal by order in council with different matters arising under the treaty. If I understand the bill aright, it will give the Government the power to appoint their representatives in the assembly of the league of nations by order in council.

"Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED. That is not intended.

"Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK. I think the minister of justice stated in another place that it could be done.

"Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED. I think his statement was that it was not the intention in framing the bill that power should be exercised in that direction at all.

"Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK. The point I was wanting to make was that it can be done.

"Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED. Oh, yes; I suppose it might be done even without that.

"Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK. It may not be the intention of the Government so to do; but, if I read this clause aright, the Government would have the power to do so if they wished.

"It would also, I think, allow the Government to appoint the representatives that are provided for in the clauses of the treaty that deal with the labor situation. Under article 388 it is declared:

"The permanent organizations shall consist of:

"(1) A general conference of representatives of the members, and

"(2) An international labor office controlled by the governing body described in article 393.

"Then, in article 389 it is declared:

"The meetings of the general conference of representatives of the members shall be held from time to time, as occasion may require, and at least once in every year. It shall be composed of four representatives of each of the members, of whom two shall be Government delegates and the two others shall be delegates representing respectively the employers and the workpeople of each of the members.

"I think that honorable gentlemen looking at that will see that those members can also be appointed by order in council under this bill as it is at present drafted.

"Then I would draw attention to this, that in the first subsection of clause 1 there is no provision that those orders in council shall be laid before Parliament. The second subsection reads:

"Any order in council made under this act may provide for the imposition by summary protest or otherwise of penalties in respect of breaches of the provisions thereof, and shall be laid before Parliament as soon as may be after it is made and shall have effect as if enacted in this act, but may be varied or revoked by a subsequent order in council.

"These orders in council, apparently, it is intended shall be laid before Parliament as soon as they are made; but the orders in council that are provided for in the first subsection of that clause would apparently not necessarily be laid before Parliament under the act. I think it would be very desirable that it should at any rate be understood that in both cases the orders in council would be laid before Parliament as soon as possible after they are passed, so that Parliament may at least be seized of what has been done by the Government in regard to these matters.

"We can quite understand that, in order to carry out the terms of the treaty, it may be necessary to provide in this way for the Government making appointments and doing other things by order in council, but I would express the hope that this power of enacting legislation by order in council may be limited as much as possible.

"I do not intend taking up the time of the House any longer in dealing with this matter. The other points that arise could probably be better discussed when the bill is in the committee stage. But I think it is only fair to point out that in dealing with this matter we have been more expeditious than almost any of the other nations that have been concerned in the making of the treaty. Our neighbors to the south are still discussing the treaty, and, as far as we on the outside know, they have not come to any conclusion as to what they will do about it. In France itself, where the people are very much more concerned with the immediate results of the treaty than we are ourselves, they have taken considerable time in discussing it, and, according to accounts that one sees in the papers, they are likely to take considerably longer time before they are in a position to ratify the treaty. Therefore I think that we have been expeditious, and that in this matter it might have been possible for the honorable leader of the Government in this House to have given us a little more time before asking us, in the first instance, to approve of the treaty by resolution.

"Hon. Mr. DAVID. Will the honorable leader of the House be kind enough to say what interpretation he places upon this subsection 2:

"Any order in council made under this act may provide for the imposition by summary protest or otherwise of penalties in respect of breaches of the provisions thereof, and shall be laid before Parliament as soon as may be after it is made and shall have effect as if enacted in this act, but may be varied or revoked by a subsequent order in council.

"Does the latter part of that subsection mean that any order in council may be varied or revoked without Parliament being consulted?

"Hon. Sir JAMES LOUGHEED. I would think so.

"Hon. WILLIAM ROCHE. Honorable gentlemen, I have read the bill which has been presented. It is in very simple language, conveys a vast amount of liability, and is far-reaching, under apparently explicit and plain limitations, and I have heard the exposition of it given this evening by the honorable leader of the Government. He very wisely, I think, referred to the speech which he made on presenting the resolution, and made that his preamble.

"I want to know where we are. By the correspondence which has been read it is plain that the Dominion of Canada is, like Mahomet's coffin, between heaven and earth. A gentleman very high in the councils of Canada announced that we were a nation, and that we had the attributes of nationality. Now, we know that we have been a Dominion of the British Crown, that our status was secured under the British North America act, that we have the governor general here representing His Majesty, and that all our laws are subject to the surveillance of the British Government. Therefore we were a dependency, and I would like to know by what act, by what public declaration or sanction, we have been made a nation. It is vain to have declamations about the achievements of our boys at the front as entitling us to nationality and many other considerations which have been advanced. But what is the plain fact? What are we here? Are we here as an independent nation of Canada, or are we here as a dependency of the British Crown? If, on the one hand, we are still, as it is said, attached by leading strings to Downing Street and rejoice to be subjects of His Majesty King George, or if, on the other hand, we are a dependent nation, we ought to know it, and we want to know it.

"For my part, I am not prepared to argue—I have never thought of it—which would be the better condition—whether we should be a dependency of the Crown, or whether we should be an independent nation. I have not thought of that myself; neither have I heard it argued out. I know this, that if this war had not occurred, and if Canada had had 20 years of peaceful progress she would have been a nation, alongside the British nation, the best ally of the British nation, with all hearts in one—a buttress and defense for the great British nation to which we belong. I do not know what has been the reason for desiring this change. I never heard it expressed in any official quarter. I never knew that our people were disloyal or were dissatisfied with their relations with the British Crown or were inveighing against Downing Street or against the leading strings, or anything of that kind. It is quite a novelty, and it appears to me that those who were so anxious on previous occasions to unfurl the British flag and wave it are the people who now are looking for independence and desire to throw aside the British flag. So it appears to me.

"This council of the league of nations is erected for the purpose of suggesting to the various powers—and we are to be one of them apparently—what armaments we shall provide, how much soldiery, how much fleet, and how much money. It seems always to come back to that question—how much money we will provide for the general fund. This bill provides for an elaborate panorama of officials and negotiations and banking institutions and clearing houses and ambassadors, I dare say, and all the paraphernalia of nationhood; and, on the other hand, all this is to be done through the governor general and through the British Government. On which side are we? This council of the league of nations ought to have authority to summon certain powers to carry out the mandates of the council, but it appears not to have that; it has only a recommendatory power. I take it for granted that the council is the central power and should have the authority to constrain the various governments and nations that are parties to this league to summon these forces to execute the mandate of the council, which is the voice of the powers in general and in combination. But apparently it is a rope of sand. The council has power to recommend and suggest, and that is all. Unless there is a unanimous vote in the assembly, wherein the council makes its recommendations, nothing can pass and nothing will come of it.

"The various great nations have not totally disarmed. At its own option each one can retain so much military and naval force as that power thinks necessary. Certain large divisions of the armies have been disbanded, but large forces have been retained by all the great nations. On the other hand, several of the nations are still at war. Peace has not actually been obtained. Apparently the whole of Europe is convulsed still, and only the dependencies of the British Government have signed. Apparently other nations have held aloof. It occurs to me that the view is held by a great many thinking people that the league of nations will never mature, because the objects of the nations are dissimilar, and each one of the great powers wishes to carry out its own objects. I think that is the reason why great powers like France, the United States, and Italy—leaving Germany and Russia out of the question—have not signed and obligated themselves to this treaty. Each one wishes to carry out its own designs of aggrandizement. It is true that a great force is to be provided and that the nations shall contribute soldiers and navies and whatever is necessary, and shall endeavor to coerce inferior powers by refraining from trade arrangements with them and by bringing to bear all those forces and compulsions outside of actual war; but sign the treaty and obligate themselves to it—they have not done it.

"That is one side of the question. If the rulings of this council have no binding force, look at the responsibility we incur under this treaty. We shall be bound to take part in all wars in Europe, in wars the world over, and will be compelled to contribute to the expense of those wars; while the treaty lasts we shall be forced to contribute beyond our resources to the maintenance of the views of aggrandizement of some of the powers. It is true that Great Britain has signed, and we on this side of the House contended that that was all that was necessary. It has been proved now that that was correct, and I hope that Canada in her relations with the British nation will remain in the same position that she occupies to-day, and that we will have a governor general and will have King George on the throne and will be good, loyal British subjects."

ADDRESS BY JAMES M. BECK.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an address by Hon. James M. Beck, delivered on Constitution Day in Philadelphia, on the Constitution and its framers.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A RISING OR A SETTING SUN.

(An address delivered at the invitation of the Allied Patriotic Societies of Philadelphia, in Independence Hall, Constitution Day, Sept. 17, 1919, by James M. Beck, formerly Assistant Attorney General of the United States; officier de la Légion d'Honneur.)

"My fellow citizens, 132 years ago to-day there was finished within these walls the greatest written work of statecraft in the annals of man.

"Such was the oft-quoted estimate of the most scholarly statesman of the nineteenth century. The world, by word and act, has confirmed Gladstone's judgment that this Constitution is 'the most perfect work of statecraft ever struck off by the brain and purpose of man at a given time.' Another prime minister of England, and a greater than Gladstone, said, when he first read this wonderful charter of government, 'It will be the wonder and admiration of all future generations and the model of all future constitutions.'

"Time has verified this remarkable prophecy of William Pitt, for not only have the nations paid to it the sincere tribute of imitation, but, tried by the arduous test of permanence, it remains to-day the oldest written form of government in the world. The stream of time, which ceaselessly erodes the sandy substance of other governments, has left untouched the adamant of the Constitution.

"It is, therefore, no mean event that we are met to commemorate to-day. But how impotent are words to voice the significance of the occasion! This place speaks to us with an eloquence unattainable by mortal man. In the silent presence of the epic past, of which these walls are eloquent, it were better that the living be mute, if gratitude to the dead and a duty to the unborn did not require us at this crisis in the world's history to voice again the spirit of this sacred place.

"This is the floor the fathers trod, thereafter to be forever sacred to the cause of freedom. These walls echoed their voices. Through that doorway they entered on the 25th day of May, 1787, to begin their sessions, and through that portal—their great work nobly done—they departed 132 years ago to-day. Where we now sit they sat during the long period of their momentous session. There sat James Madison, quill in hand, to record their deliberations, only to be revealed in detail 50 years later. Somewhere near the platform sat the sage and Nestor of the Revolution, Benjamin Franklin, the very genius of common sense and the most versatile intellect of the eighteenth, and possibly of any, century. Seated well to the front, by reason of his intellectual preeminence, was that divine boy, the 'Admirable Crichton' of his time, Alexander Hamilton. Among others were James Wilson, Gouverneur Morris, Thomas Mifflin, Robert Morris, Jared Ingersoll, and the two Pinckneys. Verily 'there were giants in those days,' when an assemblage of 55 men could number so many who had a title clear to immortality. Not less amazing is the youth of many delegates. Gouverneur Morris, to whom the unequaled lucidity of the text was so largely due, was barely 35; Madison was only 36; and Hamilton but 30.

"Above all, upon this platform, through the long sessions of the convention, sat 'the noblest man that ever lived in the tide of time,' of whom it can be said, quoting the incomparable orator of our centennial period, Henry Armitt Brown—alas! too soon forgotten, except by those who heard the music of his golden voice:

"Modest in the midst of pride, wise in the midst of folly, calm in the midst of passion, cheerful in the midst of gloom, steadfast among the wavering, bold among the timid, prudent among the rash, generous among the selfish, true among the faithless, greatest among good men, and best among the great—such was Washington.

"The task which these men had essayed to accomplish was a seemingly impossible one. Their high purpose was to unite a discordant congeries of jealous commonwealths, divided by many conflicting interests, against their will. Like all true master builders, they 'builded better than they knew'; for, when they left this hall, 132 years ago, it was not with elation in their hearts, but rather in the spirit of the deepest depression. For nearly four months they had labored in secret, but only to multiply and accentuate their differences. Again and again, it seemed that they had reached an impasse, and nothing further was possible, except the dissolution of the convention with resultant chaos in the infant Nation.

"On one occasion especially, a powerful minority, after many days of weary and at times acrimonious debate, had threatened to leave the convention unless their view prevailed, and to this challenge the majority had interposed an equally uncompromising negative. It was at that critical moment that Washington, the masterful spirit of the convention, looked significantly at Dr. Franklin, and the 'grand old man' arose and moved an adjournment for a few days, and suggested with his characteristic sagacity that in the interim the delegates should fraternize not with those with whom they agreed but with those with whom they disagreed. What happened in that interval of 48 hours history does not record; but it can readily be imagined that the great soldier, Washington, who had led the colonists to final victory, and the honored sage, Franklin, who had worked for the unification of the Colonies from his earliest days, influenced the dissenting delegates to meet again with the result that another of the great compromises of the Constitutional Convention was effected.

"Even on this last day of the convention it was Franklin's wonderful tact and inimitable wit which secured for the final action of signing the Constitution an appearance of unanimity. Of the 55 delegates who had originally met, 16 had left before the final day. Of those who remained, a number refused to sign as individuals, and at least 3 were outspoken in their criticism. Franklin then brought into play that which has always had its appeal to the American character, namely, humor. It is the great solvent of common sense. The two most typical Americans, Franklin and Lincoln, knew that in a wholesome laugh the bitterest acrimony would often dissolve. With the most ingratiating wit and in a manner that must have brought many smiles to the stern and set faces of the delegates, this wisest man of his generation reminded them of their fallibility in modestly suggesting his own.

"Thirty-nine delegates, representing 12 States, finally agreed to sign the document which was to confer immortality upon them all.

"The long suspense had ended, the crisis had passed, and it was then that Franklin, pointing to the half-disk of the sun painted on the chair of the president of the convention, made the prophetic remark that, while he had often in the weary and arduous months of the convention wondered whether that sun was a symbol of a rising or a setting sun for that America, to which he had already given more than half a century of his noble life, concluded:

"That now at length I have the happiness to know that it is a rising and not a setting sun.

"What better benediction than from him who, 33 years before, had first suggested a Union of the Colonies, and who on that day saw the fruition of his great labors.

"On this day, when the sun, whose rising Franklin so clearly saw, is seemingly in its noontide splendor, with its rays illumining the whole world, we can see the full realization of the sage's prophecy. That sun is still ascendant in the constellation of the nations, for who can ignore the momentous shifting of the world's center of gravity which recent events have evidenced? It does not require the gift of prophecy to realize that the future destinies of the world will be determined not alone along the Tiber, the Danube, the Rhine, the Seine, and the Thames, but also—and perhaps predominantly—from the Hudson and the Mississippi.

"The present organic unity of the United States serves, however, to blind us to the terrible conditions out of which the Constitution grew, and this notwithstanding the fact that there is a remarkable similarity between world conditions in 1787 and those of the present hour. Then, as now, a world war had just ended. Then, as now, there had been a swift and terrible reaction in the souls of men from the nobility of purpose and the divine spirit of self-sacrifice that had animated the nations in their fierce struggle for existence. As Washington said, 'The whole world was in an uproar,' and again he said the difficulty was 'to steer between Scylla and Charybdis.' Especially deplorable were the conditions in the Colonies in the years that had intervened between the treaty of peace and the meeting of the Constitutional Convention.

"The days that followed Yorktown were as truly the times 'that tried men's souls' as the period of bitter struggle, when the fortunes of Washington's little army found their lowest ebb at Valley Forge. In fact, the times were graver, for a nation can always resist external aggression better than internal dissension.

"The spirit of anarchy, or, as we would now say, Bolshevism, had swept a people who had already been gravely tried in the fiery furnace of war.

"Credit was gone, business paralyzed, and lawlessness rampant. Not only between class and class, but between State and State, there were acute controversies and an alarming disunity of spirit. The currency of the little Nation was valueless. It had shrunk to a nominal ratio of 1 cent on the dollar. Even its bonds were sold at one-fourth their value. The slang expression, 'not worth a continental,' is a surviving evidence of the contempt for the financial credit of the country. Tradesmen derisively plastered the walls of their shops with worthless bills.

"The armies were unpaid, and only their love for their great leader kept them from open revolt. The property class, who largely held the Nation's certificates of indebtedness, were not averse to an uprising of the Army to put an end to the social chaos which prevailed. Even the higher officers, led by Gen. Gates, then second in command, were conspiring in secret meetings to bring about a strong government through the Army. At one of these meetings Washington suddenly appeared unbidden. Although he, a shy and diffident man, rarely spoke, on this occasion he denounced the conspirators in fervid phrases and so shamed them that many left in tears. Due to their love of their heroic leader the soldiers went home, as Washington said, 'without a farthing of money in their pockets.' A few, however, resisted his great influence. Some marched to Philadelphia to threaten Congress, which appealed to the Pennsylvania Council of State, only to receive the reply that that body did not care to call out the militia lest they, too, should join the mutineers. Congress then fled to Princeton, in the fear of a military coup d'état. 'Chaos had come again.'

"It seemed to many—and to Washington himself—that the heroic struggle for independence would end in a general fiasco, which would confound the lovers of liberty in every land and again enthrone autocracy. To weld 13 jealous and dicordant States, inhabited by men of different races, creeds, and classes, into a unified and efficient nation was a seemingly impossible task. Its final accomplishment blinds us to the difficulty of the problem.

"In those trying times it was to Washington that a distracted people turned. Without him all was lost. He repaid that confidence as he had at Trenton, Valley Forge, Monmouth, and Yorktown. To quote the words of the great poet of American democracy, he—

"Stood serene, and down the future saw the golden beam incline
To the side of perfect justice, mastered by his faith divine,
By one man's plain truth to manhood, and to God's supreme design.

"Having surrendered his commission as Commander in Chief, he had retired to Mount Vernon, believing that 'the noon-tide of life was past' and that all that remained was 'to glide quietly down a stream which no human effort can ascend.' He felt that his life work was over, but viewed with acute apprehension the growing anarchy. At times even his brave spirit was discouraged. Writing in 1786 he said:

"I think often of our situation, and view it with concern. From the high ground we stood upon, from the plain path which invited our footsteps, to be so fallen, so lost, is mortifying; but everything of virtue has, in a degree, taken its departure from our land.

"When invited to attend the proposed Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia, he at first declined. Suddenly the news of Shay's rebellion in western Massachusetts came to his startled ears. It was esssntially, as we would now say, a Bolshevist movement, an uprising of debtors to prevent the collection of debts or of taxes. Courts of law were seized to subvert order and destroy property rights. The revolution spread from Massachusetts to adjoining States and threatened to strangle the infant Republic at its birth. Only an army of 5,000 men and an actual battle sufficed to end it. Civil war had come.

"Washington saw this in his retirement at Mount Vernon. With acute anguish of spirt, he wrote:

"What, gracious God, is man that there should be such inconsistency and perfidious in his conduct? It was but the other day that we were shedding our blood to obtain the constitutions under which we now live, and now we are unsheathing our swords to overturn them. The thing is so unaccountable that I hardly know how to realize it or to persuade myself that I am not under an illusion of a dream.

"Once again the father of his people came to their rescue. Turning his back upon the sweet retirement of Mount Vernon, which he had thought would be his solace for the nine years of absence during the great struggle, Washington again accepted the call of his country, and was hailed on his journey to Philadelphia to attend the Constitutional Convention as the savior of his people.

"So little was the interest in the project and so weak the faith in the possibility of any favorable result, that only a few delegates had arrived on the day set for the beginning of the convention, and for many days it was impossible to secure a quorum, but when it became known that Washington had come from Virginia, it had the same inspiring effect as when he galloped down the Freehold road and rallied his retreating army of the Battle of Monmouth.

"While waiting for enough delegates to form a bare quorum of the proposed convention, Washington gathered the faithful few about him and, as Gouverneur Morris narrated years afterwards, he said:

"It is too probable that no plan that we propose will be adopted. Perhaps another dreadful conflict is to be sustained. If, to please the people, we offer what we ourselves disapprove, how can we afterwards defend our work? Let us raise a standard to which the wise and just can repair. The event is in the hand of God.

"How splendidly his faith was vindicated! By appealing to the best in men, and not the worst, a work was wrought which has hitherto endured and which is the admiration of all men.

"In this noble declaration, which should be written in letters of gold over our legislative halls, we have not only a valued lesson, but a potent inspiration at this critical hour, when the very foundations of society are cracking.

"When the terrible conditions out of which the Constitution arose are remembered one can paraphrase the words of St. Paul:

"It was sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it was sown in disbonor, it is raised in glory; it was sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it was sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body.

"Yes; it is indeed a spiritual body, for the Constitution is something more than a written formula of government. It is a great spirit, the most quickening that now exists in the world. It is the highest assertion, and, indeed, vindication of the morality of government that the science of politics has yet given to the world. Underlying its formal provisions is a profound moral philosophy, and it is this fact which gives to its perpetuity a deep ethical significance. Should the Constitution now be undermined by the inundating waves of socialism and Bolshevism not only would the best hope of man in political institutions perish but the cause of righteousness would suffer in the destruction of some of its basic principles. The great purpose of the Constitution is to reconcile the authority of government with the rights of the individual as a responsible moral being. It not merely 'renders unto Cæsar (the political state) the things that are Cæsar's,' but in safeguarding the fundamental moral rights of the individual it 'renders unto God the things that are God's.'

"It must not be understood, however, that the Constitution was formulated in a spirit of political doctrinarianism. Nothing was further from its purpose. Its simplicity and brevity alike repel the suggestion. Read as a mere legal document, it is as dry and passionless as a manual of parliamentary law. Although it represented the concrete thought of more than 50 exceptionally able men, who had labored upon it for nearly four months, it contains little more than 4,000 words, 89 sentences, and about 140 distinct provisions. No document ever set forth more simply and briefly a comprehensive scheme of government.

"None of its provisions even remotely suggests a speculative political philosophy or theoretical abstractions. The men who framed it were very practical men, and they were never more practical than when they formulated this wonderful instrument of government. They saw no visions and heard no voices in the air. I say this in no invidious sense, for there is a time for abstractions and a time for the concrete, a time for the ideal and a time for the practical. Columbus had a vision, and he discovered America. Jeanne d'Arc heard voices in the air, and she saved France.

"Within this same hall there had been adopted, 11 years before the Constitution, a Declaration which, especially in its noble preamble, did see visions and did hear in the air the voices of a new day. The generous and noble abstractions with which Thomas Jefferson prefaced the immortal Declaration not only developed the sentiment of independence and nerved the infant Colonies to their terrible task, but gave a definition of liberty which, although it is not now and never has been fully realized, is to men a 'pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night.' Seventeen hundred and seventy-six was a time for visions and voices in the air, when the appeal had to be made to the profoundest emotions of men, which are always best stirred by generous, even if unattainable, ideals. In such crises it is well to 'hitch your wagon to a star.' Seventeen hundred and eighty-seven was a different time. Only stern realities then had any value. The same men who had framed the Declaration of Independence then attempted to give it concrete expression in a workable form of government.

"In 1776 the task was to make America safe for democracy; in 1787 it was to make democracy safe for America. The latter was the more difficult task.

"The fathers worked with a sad and terrible sincerity, begotten of the awful necessities of their situation. In 1787 they did not 'hitch their wagon to a star,' to be whirled through the ethereal spaces of the stellar universe. They preferred to walk on Mother Earth's hard ground of reality, over which they painfully struggled with bleeding feet until they had reached the eminence of a marvelous achievement.

"They were plain men, and their unequaled success owes much to their simplicity in thought and action, for the great things of life are always simple and sincere. Their manner of life differed but little from that which had prevailed for 2,000 years. They plowed the fields as their ancestors had for countless generations before them. The age of machinery, with its infinite complexity and diversity, had not arrived. They knew few things, but they knew them well, the more so because their minds and souls were concentrated upon a few things rather than dissipated, as the modern mind, between myriads of ideas.

"Washington could not talk a thousand miles, but what he said, notably in the Farewell Address, will outlive all the lengthy utterances of contemporary statesmen.

"Franklin had only a hand press, but the few hundred books that he could print more powerfully affected the mind of the America of his day than all the printed pages, thick as the leaves of Vallombrosa, cast off each day by uncounted millions from Hoe presses affect the mind of the American people to-day.

"It took Alexander Hamilton as many days to travel from New York to Philadelphia as it now takes hours, but who shall say that any living statesman travels with results comparable to those which he achieved?

"The age of machinery has infinitely complicated and diversified human life, but it has been at the cost of the simplicity and sincerity of which supremely great men are born and epoch-making deeds are accomplished. The stage of Shakespeare had the ground as a floor and the sky as a ceiling, and yet what dramatic literature is comparable with that of the 'specious days' of Queen Elizabeth?

"While the Constitution apparently only deals with the practical and essential details of government, yet behind these simply but wonderfully phrased delegations of power was a broad and accurate political philosophy, which constitutes the true doctrine of America and, indeed, the 'whole law and the prophets' of free government. Its principles are of eternal verity. They are founded upon the inalienable rights of man. They are not of the day or of temporary circumstances. If they are destroyed in principle, then the spirit of our Government is gone, even if the form survive.

"The essential principles of the Constitution, which form its political philosophy and which at least at one time constituted the American doctrine of free government, may be summarized as follows:

"The first is representative government. In the discussions before the Constitutional Convention all speakers made a distinction between that which they called 'democracy' and that which they called 'republicanism.' By the former they meant direct legislative action by the people, or, as we would say, a pure democracy. By 'republicanism' they meant representative government.

"However much the fathers disagreed upon other questions, they were substantially of one accord in the opinion that wise, direct legislative action was impossible without conference, and that, in a Commonwealth of many scattered communities, such a conference was impracticable, especially in cities where the size of the population made a town meeting impossible.

"Even in New England, the home of the town meeting, it was provided as early as 1635 that wherever a community had more than 5,000 inhabitants legislation should be committed to representatives, to whom they gave the title 'selectmen.' The fathers had in mind the weakness of former republics, such as those of Greece and Italy, where the peoples attempted themselves to enact laws in tumultuous assemblies with only one result—disunion, civil strife, and final anarchy.

"Our fathers did not accept the idea that every one was equally qualified to determine the destinies of their country by the ballot. Universal manhood suffrage was unknown to them and woman's suffrage would have been to them an unthinkable possibility. They little appreciated that their work would one day be subjected to the arduous test of an immense electorate of both sexes and of all races, classes, and conditions.

"The second principle of the Constitution was our dual form of government. The Thirteen Colonies were most reluctant to surrender even a portion of their sovereignty to the Federal Government. They were widely scattered communities and varied greatly in racial origin and local habits and customs. They were tenacious of the great principle of home rule, and even when our country did not extend beyond the Alleghenies there was, on the part of the local communities, a deep-rooted objection to being governed by a central power. Only the immense influence of Washington triumphed over this feeling of local independence, and success could only be secured by confining the Federal Constitution to those matters of general concern which required of necessity a common rule and which each State was incompetent to determine for itself. For this reason the tenth amendment, without which the Constitution would not have been ratified, was formulated, providing that all rights not expressly delegated to the Federal Government should be reserved forever to the States and the people thereof.

"The third principle was the guaranty of individual liberty through constitutional limitations. This marked the great contribution of America to the science of government. In all previous government building, the State was regarded as a sovereign, which would grant to individuals or classes, out of its plenary power, certain privileges or exemptions, which were called 'liberties.' Thus the liberties which the barons wrung from King John at Runnymede were virtually exemptions from the power of government. Our fathers did not believe in the sovereignty of the State in the sense of absolute power, nor did they believe in the sovereignty of the people in that sense. The word 'sovereignty' will not be found in the Constitution or the Declaration of Independence. They believed that each individual, as a responsible moral being, had certain 'inalienable rights' which neither State nor the people could rightfully take from him.

"This conception of individualism was wholly new and is the distinguishing characteristic of American constitutionalism. As to such reserved rights, guaranteed by constitutional limitations and largely by the first 10 amendments to the Constitution, a man, by virtue of his inherent and God-given dignity as a human soul, had rights, such as freedom of the press, liberty of speech, property rights, and religious freedom, which even 100,000,000 people could not rightfully take from him. The fathers did not believe that the oil of anointing that was supposed to sanctify the monarch and give him infallibility had fallen upon the multitudinous tongue of the people to give it either infallibility or omnipotence. They believed in individualism. They were animated by a sleepless jealousy of governmental power. They believed that the greater such power the greater the abuse. They believed that that people was best governed which was least governed. They felt that the individual could generally best work out his own salvation, and that his constant prayer to government was that of Diogenes: 'Keep out of my sunlight.'

"The worth and dignity of the human soul, the free competition of man and man, the nobility of labor, the right to work, free from the tyranny of state or class, this was their gospel. Socialism was to them abhorrent. To the abuses of power their reply was that of Ajax on the plains of Troy:

> "Dispel this cloud. The light of heaven restore.
> Give me to see, and Ajax asks no more.

"This theory of government gave a new dignity to manhood. It exalted the human soul as no previous governmental institution had ever done. It said to the State: 'There is a limit to your power. Thus far and no further, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed.'

"Closely allied to this doctrine of limited governmental powers, even by a majority, is the fourth principle of an independent judiciary. It is the balance wheel of the Constitution, and to function it must be beyond the possibility of attack and destruction. Our country was founded upon the rock of property rights and the sanctity of contracts. Both the Nation and the several States are forbidden to take away life, liberty, or property 'without due process of law.' This is the very palladium of our liberties. It is as old as Magna Charta, for 'due process of law' is but a paraphrase of 'the law of the land,' without which no freeman could be deprived of his liberties or possessions.

"'Due process of law' means that there are certain fundamental principles of liberty not defined or even enumerated in the Constitution but having their sanction in the free and enlightened conscience of just men, and that no man can be deprived of life, liberty, or property, or of his right to the pursuit of happiness, except in conformity with these fundamental decencies of liberty. It is the contradiction of Bolshevism, which means the unrestrained rule of a class. To protect these even against the will of a majority, however large, the judiciary was given unprecedented powers. It threw about the individual the solemn circle of the law.

"The fifth fundamental principle was a system of governmental checks and balances, whereby it was sought to divide official authority and responsibility in order that power should never be concentrated in one man, or even in one branch of the Government. The founders of the Republic were not enamored of power. They had just thrown off the tyranny of a king. They were as little disposed to accept the tyranny of a Parliament or Congress. As they viewed human history, the worst evils of government were due to excessive concentration of power, which, like Othello's jealousy, 'makes the meat it feeds on.'

"The sixth fundamental principle was a concurrent power of the Senate and the Executive over the foreign relations of the Government.

"Nothing, excepting the principle of home rule, was of deeper concern to the framers of the Constitution, and in nothing did they make a more radical departure from all existing forms of government. When the Constitution was framed, nearly every government of Europe was a monarchy, and it was the accepted principle that whatever control parliaments or other legislative bodies had over domestic concerns, the right to determine the foreign relations of the government, including the issues of peace and war, was the exclusive prerogative of the sovereign. In England, the freest of all Governments at that time, the only check on the power of the King to select the diplomatic representatives of the Government, to make treaties, and generally to determine the issue of peace and war was the power which the House of Commons had over the purse of the nation. If the King had the necessary means to make war without a parliamentary grant, he was free to do so. But, as he rarely had sufficient means, he was generally dependent upon Parliament for the necessary grants. Many of the greatest struggles for English liberty concerned the attempt of the King to exact money without parliamentary grant, in order to carry on wars in which his dynasty was engaged.

"When the Constitutional Convention met, it was at first resolved that the power to appoint ambassadors, ministers, and consuls, and to make treaties should be vested exclusively in the Senate, as the body that most directly and equally represented the constituent States. It was, however, recognized by these practical men that the Senate was not always in session, and that it was not easy for a body, consisting originally of 26 men, to negotiate treaties with advantage; and, therefore, it was finally resolved that the President should, 'with the advice and consent of the Senate,' appoint ambassadors, ministers, and consuls, and make treaties; but that, if a declaration of war was contemplated, only the concurrence of both Houses of Congress could authorize such a declaration.

"The language of the Constitution was drawn with the greatest precision. It is a model of literary style. In it there is no tautology, not even a wasted word; and when, therefore, the Constitution made necessary the 'advice and consent of the Senate,' something more than a mere ratification of an appointment or of a treaty was in contemplation. The word 'advice' clearly meant cooperation with the Executive in an advisory capacity before a conclusion was reached and the Nation, to some extent, morally committed.

"It was the undoubted intention of the fathers to make the Senate the final and principal treaty-making power, and as such to enable it at any stage of the negotiations either to propose a treaty, to express disapproval of treaties in contemplation, to determine the suitability of those who were appointed to negotiate a treaty, to advise with the President at any stage of the negotiations, and finally to consent to or reject, or to amend, any tentative draft.

"The President was thus the agent of the Senate in negotiating a treaty; but, through usage, which may have some justification, he has been freely given in practice the initiative to such an extent that precedent no longer requires him to discuss preliminarily with the Senate the terms of a treaty before he tentatively offers it to another nation. The fact is that by innovating precedents the dominating power over foreign relations has been slowly shifted to the Executive. This may be wise—the slow changes of an orderly development of the Constitution generally are—but it is clearly not what the fathers intended. As we become more and more involved in the maelstrom of world politics we may find that they were right.

"As America is now the first power of the world, and is destined to play the most potential part in shaping its destinies, it is vitally important that any decision which affects the future relations of this Government with the rest of the world should have the consideration and approval not merely of the Chief Magistrate but of that body of Congress which in a peculiar way represents the sovereign Commonwealths of the Federal Union.

"In this connection the present crisis suggests an interesting question. In all countries there has always been a ceaseless war between the executive and legislative departments for dominating power. Our fathers sought to avert this by their system of checks and balances. On the one hand, they did not desire to make a king of the President, and, on the other, they were equally averse to parliamentary tyranny. Their own experience with both the Crown and Parliament had not made them partisans of either branch of government. Unfortunately, the tides of popular action do not always run in the channels of constitutional theories. It is as difficult for two planets to continue in one orbit without collision as it is for two branches of government who are theoretically equal. Each is jealous of its power and ambitious for more.

"Until recent years the predominance of the legislature was regarded as the great ideal of democracy.

"In this country the opposite tendency has been observable for over 50 years. The Executive, in the person of the President, appeals more to the imagination of men than a many-headed body like the Congress. Thus the attitude of the popular mind has been marked by an ever-increasing appreciation of the presidential office, and an ever-decreasing respect for the legislative branch of the Government.

"In the last 50 years the President has largely determined the policy of the Nation, and when any difference arises between the Executive and the Congress, generally the sympathy of the people is with the President. He is regarded, rightly or wrongly, as more representative of the popular will.

"Now, if the experience of the past teaches us anything, it is that nations gradually lose their freedom by the undue exaltation of the Executive. When the President's prestige becomes so great that the popular mind will not brook any opposition to his wishes by the legislative branch, then America will be a Republic only in name.

"Moreover, nothing adds so much to the prestige of the Executive as the foreign relations of the Government. When they become the dominating subject of popular solicitude, then differences as to internal policies yield to the exigencies of foreign relations, and thus the office of President becomes of overshadowing importance.

"The stupendous part which America is invited to play on the stage of the world by the league of nations may compensate for this possible change in the structure of our Government. Upon that I express no opinion, as I would not willingly offend the susceptibilities of any; but on this Constitution Day, I trust I may without impropriety call attention to a fact, which has been proved by the experience of history, that if America is to become a dominating element in the proposed superstate of the world, it will so enhance the dignity and power of the presidential office that the equilibrium of power between the Executive and the legislative branches of the Government may be seriously disturbed. This may be for the best. Time will tell. The genius of our people will best determine that question, and with their instinct of freedom the decision can be best left to them.

"These are the six fundamental principles of the Constitution and constitute the great contribution of its framers to the ordered progress of mankind. In essence they are unchangeable, for they are fundamental verities. Destroy these one by one, and the Constitution will one day become a noble and splendid ruin like the Parthenon—useless for practical purposes and only an object of melancholy interest.

"Let me not be misunderstood as suggesting that the Constitution is too rigid to permit of adaptation to changed conditions. It is not static. It changes from generation to generation, sometimes by formal amendment, more frequently by judicial interpretation, and sometimes by mere usage. It contains many administrative details which need expansion to meet the changed needs of the most progressive Nation in the world. Without such changes the Constitution would soon be as an ocean bulkhead, which stands for a time, but, sooner or later, is destroyed by the invincible waves of the ocean. The Constitution is neither, on the one hand, a sandy beach, which is slowly destroyed by the erosion of the waves, nor, on the other hand, is it a Gibraltar rock, which wholly resists the ceaseless washing of time and circumstance.

"Its strength lies in its elasticity and adaptability to slow and progressive change.

"While this is true, yet, in the fundamental principles above suggested, it asserted certain basic verities which 'time can not wither nor custom stale.' These are eternal truths, and if these are subverted the spirit of our Government is gone, even if the form survive.

"Were Franklin again to revisit the glimpses of the moon and enter this hall to-day, would he, with his unequaled prescience, still regard the sun as a rising one? Would he, if he knew the developments of the last quarter of a century, regard this great luminary of the nations as in the noontide of its splendor, or would he regard it as slowly disappearing behind a dark cloud of socialism—only to set some day in the flaming West, which would write its irrevocable sentence upon this as it has upon so many strong governments that have preceded?

"The pitiless judgment of history discloses an unending cycle of industry, wealth, corruption, decay, and death.

"What would Washington say if, clad in brown velvet and with sword by his side, he entered that doorway and again took his place upon this platform? We can know his thoughts from those which he expressed in the Farewell Address—the noblest political testament that any founder of a State ever gave to a people whom he had led to high achievement. Let me quote the significant words which he, as 'an old and affectionate friend,' addressed, not only to his own generation, but to all that were to follow, and therefore to this generation:

> "It is of infinite moment that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness. * * * Toward the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite not only that you steadily discountenance irregular oppositions to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretexts. One method of assault may be to effect in the forms of the Constitution alterations which will impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what can not be directly overthrown.

"Washington well saw that the Constitution could be more easily undermined from beneath than overthrown from without. If this were true in the day of our weakness, it is more true in this the day of our overshadowing strength. We need not fear external aggression. This great, self-sustaining Nation is probably invincible to any attack that could be made upon it. Another civil war between the sections seems equally improbable, for the 48 States of the Union are seemingly indissolubly bound together by the potent agencies of steam and electricity.

"But we can not speak with equal optimism of the processes which, as Washington so sagaciously pointed out, might 'undermine what can not be directly overthrown.'

"Thirty-two years ago it was my privilege as a citizen of Philadelphia to participate in the centennial celebration of the adoption of the Constitution. Who that participated in that festal celebration will ever forget that memorable week of September, 1887, when the representatives of the Nation met in Philadelphia to acclaim the great work of the fathers?

"The guns of the new Navy of the United States awoke joyous echoes from the banks of the Delaware from their bronze throats. Down our chief highway marched the veterans of the Civil War headed by Phil Sheridan, the 'boys in blue,' who with immortal valor had saved the Union in the dark days of the Civil War.

"Within the shadow of the belfry which crowns this building and from which the old bell, 143 years ago, proclaimed 'Liberty throughout the land and unto all the inhabitants thereof,' there met this day 32 years ago the President of the United States, the leading officials of the Government, the representatives of many nations, and a great body of American citizens, to thank God that a full century had attested the splendor of the fathers' achievement. Through the cathedral arches of the trees of Independence Square there sounded in noble song the faith of a people that 'ages upon ages' would be the happy lot of America.

"This joyous io triomphe of a proud and exultant people had then no minor chord of doubt as to the future. In all the public utterances that marked that noted celebration there was undoubted faith that the ship of state had weathered its hardest storms, had escaped the rocks and shoals which had wrecked other governments, and that in the unlimited future there were before it only smooth seas and cloudless skies.

"If any of us who took part in that celebration had then anticipated the portentous changes of the next 25 years, I think the note of exultation would, like Macbeth's 'Amen,' have stuck in our throats. Little we then realized that before another quarter of a century had passed every fundamental principle of the Constitution would be challenged by great political parties and responsible leaders of thought, and that within that time there would be Americans who would openly proclaim their belief that the Constitution was an antiquated and reactionary document and an obstacle to the progress of the American people.

"If anyone questions my statement, I beg to refer them, in order to avoid any reference to contemporary events, to the political platforms of the three great parties in the year 1912, when each of them contained statements of party principles which were a direct negation of one or more of the fundamental principles of the Constitution.

"Possibly party platforms may be dismissed as causes of apprehension on the ground that they are merely 'springes to catch woodcock'; but if you will consider the events of the last 25 years you can hardly fail to see an alarming departure from the principles upon which this Government was founded.

"In measuring the force of constitutional changes it is necessary to note the changes in the constitutions of the States, as well as in that of the Federal Government. Together they form the real constitutional system of the American Commonwealth.

"The representative principle has been challenged in 22 States of the Union by the initiative and the referendum.

"The principle of home rule has been subverted by a steady submergence of the States, which has now made of them little more than glorified police provinces. The latest illustration is the prohibition amendment, whereby Congress is given power to prescribe the habits of the people. At such an abuse of power over personal liberty Washington, Franklin, Jefferson, and Hamilton would have stood aghast.

"The guaranty of individual liberty has been violated by many socialistic measures, while property rights are destroyed from time to time by confiscatory legislation.

"The independence of the judiciary is menaced by many provisions for the recall both of judges and of judicial decisions.

"The system of governmental checks and balances has been disturbed by the persistent subordination in the practical workings of the Government of the legislative to the Executive, while the concurrent power of the Senate over the foreign relations of the Government has been so weakened that more than one responsible leader of thought has boldly asserted that this power is more nominal than real. Contemporaneous events show that the power of the Senate has not yet been wholly destroyed.

"The taxing system has been perverted to redistribute property.

"The commercial power of the Union has been utilized to attain unconstitutional results which were clearly outside of the sphere of the Federal Government.

"The fifth and fourteenth amendments have largely broken down as bulwarks against confiscatory legislation.

"Under more than one administration the control of the Senate in the election of diplomatic representatives of the Government has been nullified by the appointment of extra-constitutional diplomats.

"Even the concurrence of the Senate in the treaty obligations of the country has been impaired under many administrations by protocols, informal treaties, and latterly by methods of treaty making which make the free decision of the Senate difficult, if not impossible.

"I am not now referring solely to contemporary events or to any one party or President, for in the last 25 years, under both parties, there has been a steady encroachment of the Executive upon the sphere of the legislature, until it has sometimes seemed that the only function of the former was to register the edicts of the latter.

"Alarming as are these tendencies, infinitely more portentous is the shifting of power from the Government to organized classes—and this tendency of our time is so grave that it threatens the very existence of organized society. When any class becomes so numerous or powerful that it can force its will upon the Government, not through the ballot box but through its control over the necessities of life, then the Government exists in form and not in name, and such a nation has been Bolshevised. Bolshevism means the rule of the majority, but in its practical operation, as seen in Petrograd, Budapest, Vienna, Munich, and Berlin, it is the rule of a class. Of all oligarchies, that of a class is the most hateful.

"Even in England, once preeminently the land of authority and law, there is manifest danger at this hour of a Soviet government—in fact if not in form. There the miners, railroad employees, and the dock laborers have united in a trinity of power, not to impose their views upon their employers but to compel the Government to take political action, under the threat that otherwise the people of England will freeze and starve. This they have called 'direct action,' meaning thereby that they are not content to assert the legitimate demands of their class through the ballot box, which is thus impliedly stigmatized as indirect. It is a time for plain words. 'Direct action' is civil war, and unless it be checked there is an end of free government.

"A week ago the trade unionist congress of England, with an unprecedented approach to unanimity, demanded the nationalization of the mines as a preliminary to the nationalization of all industries and added a scarcely veiled threat of 'direct action' by starving and freezing the English people if their Parliament did not submit. This is revolution. If successful, it is the end of free government in the land of its birth. The 'mother of democracies' will be led in chains by a new soviet and the cause of free government everywhere will be in peril.

"Verily there are again the 'times that try men's souls.' None more portentous since Luther nailed his thesis on the door of Wittenberg Cathedral. That mighty impulse of the sixteenth century was for the emancipation of the individual, but this movement is for his enslavement.

"Our own land has not been exempted from similar exhibitions of class tyranny. No one questions the right of labor to organize and to strike to compel the employer to recognize the demands of the employee. This is inherent in the liberty of man to work or to refuse to work, as he thinks proper. But when labor organizations, the nature of whose work enables them to strangle the industries of a country, use this power to coerce the Government to compel the employer to surrender his equal liberty, then the nation which tolerates such a spirit of anarchy exists only in name and the freedom of its people has been effectually destroyed.

"On the eve of the last presidential election the organization which represents the labor engaged in transportation—as essential to the life of a nation as the circulation of the blood is to the life of an individual—arrogantly served notice upon the President and Congress that their wages must be raised by statute. With a stop watch in their hands they demanded immediate compliance with their imperious demands; and not only did the President and the Congress yield, but even the Supreme Court bent to the storm in sustaining as constitutional an unprecedented exercise of the legislative power. 'Can such things be and overcome us as a summer cloud without our special wonder?'

"It is gratifying to add that when a second attempt was very recently made to turn this free Republic into a Soviet form government and the same labor leaders demanded the passage of an act which would largely take from the owners of railway securities their own property, both the President and the Congress, without division of party and with a gratifying unanimity, refused to surrender to the arrogant demand. In America, thank God, the spirit of constitutional government is not yet dead.

"Who, however, can underestimate the peril? If the labor leaders who control mining and transportation can deny to the people coal and food unless their demands for legislation are met, there is an end of free government.

"Such attempted subversions of constituted authority recall the solemn warning of George Washington in the Farewell Address, and, as I quote them, perceive the extraordinary aptness of his language to present conditions:

"All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle and of fatal tendency * * *.

"However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely in the course of time and things to become potent engines by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people and to usurp for themselves the reins of government, destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

"Who can deny that in recent years our country has witnessed such 'obstructions to the execution of the laws,' such 'combinations and associations' designed 'to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities'?

"Let us recall the extraordinary prediction made more than a half century ago by one of the most sagacious students of history of his or any time. In a letter written to the biographer of Thomas Jefferson, Lord Macaulay ventured the prediction that the Constitution of the United States would prove workable as long as there were large areas of undeveloped land. He added, however, that when our country became one of great cities—when we, too, had our Birminghams, Manchesters, and Liverpools—that then the real test of our institutions would come. He added:

"I believe America's fate is only deferred by physical causes. Institutions purely democratic will sooner or later destroy liberty or civilization, or both. In Europe, where the population is dense, the effect would be instantaneous. The poor would plunder the rich, and civilization would perish, or prosperity would be saved by a strong military government and liberty would vanish. The American Constitution is all sail and no anchor.

"I can not share Macaulay's view that our Constitution 'is all sail and no anchor,' for hitherto it has proved a very effective anchor; but it may be true that the anchor is dragging and the ship of state is slowly swinging away from its ancient moorings. Certainly the danger was never greater than in this hour, when in every country there is a revolt against accepted principles of government. Indeed, the future historian may say that the first quarter of the twentieth century was marked by a revolt against the past in all departments of human life. One can see this tendency in literature, art, music, sociology, and political government. Everywhere there is a craze for innovation, everywhere hostility to that which has the sanction of the past.

"This question is of vital importance, for there is no greater error than to suppose that the Constitution has some inherent vitality to insure its perpetuity. The breath of its life is public opinion, and, when that public opinion ceases to support any or all of its fundamental principles, they will perish. Its continued vitality must depend upon the continued and intelligent acceptance of its political philosophy by the people.

"Human institutions gather no strength from pieces of parchment or red seals. In a democracy the living soul of any human institution must be the belief of the people in its wisdom and justice.

"It is true of all human institutions, ecclesiastical or political, that the form may often survive the substance of the faith, and while the Government, which the Constitution brought into being, might for a time survive the destruction of its vital spirit, even as a dead oak stands for a while after the sap has failed, yet if the fundamental principles of the Constitution cease to receive popular support, the whole edifice will slowly crumble.

"This Nation has spent its treasure like water and, what is infinitely more, the blood of its gallant youth to make 'the world safe for democracy.' The task is accomplished; but, in the mighty reaction from the supreme exertions of the war, it is now apparent to thoughtful men that a new problem confronts mankind, and that is to make democracy safe for the world.

"Kaiserism has been haled to the bar of civilization and has been convicted and sentence of execution pronounced. And now the world is slowly perceiving that democracy is also on trial, charged by its foes with unduly restraining the will of the majority to inflict their will upon the inalienable rights of the individual and by its friends with inefficiency.

"In this period of popular fermentation, the end of which no man can predict, the Constitution of the United States, with its fine equilibrium between efficient power and individual liberty, still remains the best hope of the world. If it should perish, the cause of true democracy would receive a fatal wound and the best hopes of mankind would be irreparably disappointed.

"These are 'the times that try men's souls.'

"The situation is strikingly similar to that April morning of 1787, when Washington entered the city of Philadelphia to gather about him a few faithful adherents to restore law and order.

"Can we do better than to imitate his spirit?

"Shall we not raise the standard that he then raised?

"Ought not men of all parties who love this country and believe in its past as well as its future unite in the same spirit to which Washington gave utterance at the beginning of the great convention, when he so nobly said:

"It is too probable that no plan that we propose will be adopted. Perhaps another dreadful conflict is to be sustained. If, to please the people, we offer what we ourselves disapprove, how can we afterwards defend our work? Let us raise a standard to which the wise and just can repair. The event is in the hand of God."

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the Nevada Woman's Christian Temperance Union in favor of the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEVADA WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION,
Reno, Nev., October 6, 1919.

Hon. CHARLES B. HENDERSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Woman's Christian Temperance Union passed the inclosed resolution to-day and instructed the same to be sent to you.

"Whereas we believe the league of nations aims to promote international cooperation and to achieve international peace and security; and

"Whereas we recognize that the covenant of the league of nations can not be separated from the peace treaty, since the latter was founded upon the assumption that the league of nations would be formed; and

"Whereas we believe that delay on the part of the United States Senate to ratify the peace treaty will seriously jeopardize the peace of the world: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, We, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Nevada, do most earnestly urge the United States Senate to ratify the treaty of peace, including the covenant, without reservation or amendment, as soon as possible."

(Signed) WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION,
By BESSIE R. EICHELBERGER, Secretary.

OWNERSHIP OF WATER CARRIERS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD a document which comes to me from the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, being the action of that body upon the recommendation of one of its committees favoring the repeal of the legislation which was passed in the Panama Canal act prohibiting the ownership of water carriers by railroads. The pamphlet, which is very brief, embracing only three or four pages, contains the rulings of the Interstate Commerce Commission upon the applications of all the railroads which have made application under that legislation for continuance of ownership by them of their steamboats, and the decisions of the commission upon that point. The pamphlet is very interesting, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York.]

"At the regular monthly meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, held October 9, 1919, the following report and resolution, submitted by the executive committee, were unanimously adopted:

"'Ownership of water carriers by railroads recommended.

"'To the Chamber of Commerce:

"'Your executive committee respectfully submits the following report:

"'PANAMA CANAL ACT.

"'The act of Congress known as the Panama Canal act, approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stat., 566, ch. 390), included, as a rider, an amendment to the interstate-commerce law which effectively deprives railway companies of the right to own or operate or have any interest, however slight or indirect, except with the permission of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in any water carrier with which the railway does or might compete. The commission's conclusions as to the existence or possibility of competition are, in terms, made final. The prohibition was made to take effect on July 1, 1914.

"'A copy of this portion of the Panama Canal act is attached hereto marked "Exhibit A."

"'Thirty-three decisions under this provision were rendered by the commission between the effective date of the prohibition and the middle of May, 1918, the earliest being rendered on February 1, 1915 (32 I. C. C., 690), and the latest on May 13, 1918 (49 I. C. C., 737). The applications respectively affected were wholly granted by 26 of these decisions; wholly denied by 3; granted in part and denied in part by 4. One of these decisions, rendered on March 3, 1917 (43 I. C. C., 286) was on rehearing and granted an application that had been denied on May 7, 1915 (33 I. C. C., 699). Of the first 4 decisions 2 were incomplete and 1 was in part denial of the applications affected; since May 7, 1915, no application has been wholly denied. Yet some of the decisions adverse to the joint relation are important and far-reaching.

"'1. The Southern Pacific Co. was required to dispose of its interest in the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. (32 I. C. C., 690).

"'2. The Spokane, Portland & Seattle Railway was required to dispose of its interest in Dalles, Portland & Astoria Navigation Co. (33 I. C. C., 462).

"'3. The Associated Oil Co. (controlled by the Southern Pacific Co.) was forbidden to operate its boats between ports in California and those in Washington and Oregon (34 I. C. C., 77).

"'4. All trunk-line railways were required to dispose of their interests in boats operating upon the Great Lakes (33 I. C. C., 699), although this requirement was later withdrawn as to the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada (43 I. C. C., 286).

"'5. The Pennsylvania Railroad and affiliated corporations were required to dispose of certain of their interests in boats operating on Chesapeake and tributary rivers (35 I. C. C., 692); and

"'6. The Norfolk & Western Railway was required to dispose of its interest in Old Dominion Steamship Co. and Virginia Navigation Co. (41 I. C. C., 285).

"'A synopsis of the decisions under this amendment is attached hereto marked "Exhibit B."

"'Your committee finds:

"'A. That the relatively few decisions adverse to the joint relations affected by the act have produced no benefit, but, on the other hand, and particularly those operating upon the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. and the boat lines on the Great Lakes, have resulted in reduction and deterioration of service and in general public protest.

"'B. That the later decisions of the commission, probably in recognition of these results, seem to indicate a desire to strain the terms of the statute as far as possible in order to save relationships that are plainly essential to the perpetuation of necessary and efficient services.

"'C. That the prohibitions of this portion of the Panama Canal act are based upon an erroneous conception of the economic principles involved and tend to restrict the investment of capital in facilties for water transportation and to impair the efficiency in the public service of such capital.

"'D. That railway carriers ought not to be interfered with or prevented when, in the sound discretion of their owners and managers, they see fit to extend their services to water routes.

"'E. That in any degree in which such relations between railway and water carriers tend to control competition between the rail routes and the water routes, any otherwise possible injury to the public interest can be prevented by the exercise of the power already existing to regulate the rates and practices of the railway and water routes.

"'F. That the prohibitions added to section 5 of the interstate commerce law by the Panama Canal act ought, in the public interest, to be forthwith repealed.

"'Your committee therefore offers the following resolution:

"'Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York approves the above report and the findings of its executive committee and directs that copies of the report and appendices be sent to the President and to the Members of Congress.

"'Respectfully submitted.

"'Welding Ring, chairman; Alfred C. Bedford, Delos W. Cooke, Irving T. Bush, Leonor F. Loree, Charles L. Bernheimer, Howard C. Smith, Alfred E. Marling, William H. Porter, A. Barton Hepburn, John Claflin, E. H. Outerbridge, of the executive committee; Alfred E. Marling, president.

"'Attest:

"'CHARLES T. GWYNNE, Secretary.

"'NEW YORK, October 10, 1919.'

—

"Exhibit A.

"SEC. 11. That section 5 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, is hereby amended by adding thereto a new paragraph at the end thereof, as follows:

"'From and after the 1st day of July, 1914, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company or other common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce, to own, lease, operate, control, or have any interest whatsoever—by stock ownership or otherwise, either directly, indirectly, through any holding company, or by stockholders or directors in common, or in any other manner—in any common carrier by water operated through the Panama Canal or elsewhere with which such railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic or any vessel carrying freight or passengers upon said water route or elsewhere with which said railroad or other carrier aforesaid does or may compete for traffic; and in case of the violation of this provision, each day in which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense.

"'Jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine questions of fact as to the competition or possibility of competition, after full hearing, on the application of any railroad company or other carrier. Such application may be filed for the purpose of determining whether any existing service is in violation of this section and pray for an order permitting the continuance of any vessel or vessels already in operation, or for the purpose of asking an order to install new service not in conflict with the provisions of this paragraph. The commission may, on its own motion or the application of any shipper, institute proceedings to inquire into the operation of any vessel in use by any railroad or other carrier which has not applied to the commission and had the question of competition or the possibility of competition determined as herein provided. In all such cases the order of said commission shall be final.

"'If the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be of the opinion that any such existing specified service by water other than through the Panama Canal is being operated in the interest of the public and is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and that such extension will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition on the route by water under consideration, the Interstate Commerce Commission may, by order, extend the time during which such service by water may continue to be operated beyond July 1, 1914. In every case of such extension the rates, schedules, and practices of such water carrier shall be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and shall be subject to the act to regulate commerce and all amendments thereto in the same manner and to the same extent as is the railroad or other common carrier controlling such water carrier or interested in any manner in its operation: Provided, Any application for extension under the terms of this provision filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission prior to July 1, 1914, but for any reason not heard and disposed of before said date, may be considered and granted thereafter.' (37 Stat., 566, ch. 390.)

"Note.—The above is part only of the section. The next paragraph prohibited passage through the Panama Canal of boats owned, operated, chartered, or controlled by any company doing business in violation of the antitrust acts. The balance of the section is the amendments to section 6 of the interstate commerce law.

—

"Exhibit B.

"2–1–1915. Upon application of Southern Pacific Co. for extension of time during which applicant may retain ownership of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. Application denied, unless the applicant would limit it to service not beyond Balboa. (32 I. C. C., 690.)

"3–22–1915. Upon application of Lake Tahoe Railway & Transportation Co., to retain ownership of a boat line on Lake Tahoe. Application granted. (33 I. C. C., 426.)

"3–22–1915. Upon application of Spokane, Portland & Seattle Railway Co. to retain ownership of Dalles, Portland & Astoria Navigation Co., operating on the Columbia and Willamette Rivers between Portland and The Dalles, and all the capital stock of which was owned by the applicant. Application denied. (33 I. C. C., 462.)

"3–30–1915. Upon application of the Southern Pacific Co. to continue its interest in and operation of steamer schooner Pasadena, principally operated between Albion and San Francisco, and owned by the Albion Lumber Co., all the capital stock of which is owned by the applicant. Application granted as to interest in and as to operation between Albion and San Francisco, but denied as to operation between San Francisco and San Pedro and Redondo. (33 I. C. C., 476.)

"4–27–1915. Upon application of Georgia, Florida & Alabama Railway Co. to continue to own and operate a steamboat between Carrabelle and Apalachicola. Application granted. (33 I. C. C., 632.)

"4–27–1915. Upon application of the Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation Co. to continue operation of boats which it owns and operates on the Columbia, Willamette, and Snake Rivers and on Lake Coeur d'Alene. Application granted. (33 I. C. C., 658.)

"4–29–1915. Upon applications of Pennsylvania Co. and Canadian Pacific Railway Co. to continue their interest in and joint operation of the Pennsylvania-Ontario Transportation Co., owning and operating a car ferry between Ashtabula and Port Burwell, one-third of the capital stock of the ferry company being held, respectively, by each of the applicants and by James W. Ellsworth & Co. Application granted. (34 I. C. C., 47.)

"4–29–1915. Upon application of the Grand Trunk Railway Co. of Canada to continue its interest in and joint operation of the Ontario Car Ferry Co. (Ltd.), of Canada (see statement as to next previous case). Application granted. (34 I. C. C., 49.)

"4–29–1915. Upon application of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh Railway Co. to continue its interest in and joint operation of the Ontario Car Ferry Co. (Ltd.), of Canada, applicant owning 2,497 shares of its 5,000 shares of capital stock, and the Grand Trunk Railway Co. owning an equal number (the balance being directors' shares), and the Ontario Car Ferry Co., operating a car ferry between Charlotte and Coborg. Application granted. (34 I. C. C., 52.)

"4–29–1915. Upon application of Grand Trunk Western Railway Co. to continue its interest in the Grand Trunk Milwaukee Car Ferry Co., operating car ferries between Grand Haven and Milwaukee, and, like the applicant, an integral part of the system of the Grand Trunk Railway Co. Application granted. (34 I. C. C., 54.)

"5–7–1915. Upon application of Southern Pacific Co. and Associated Oil Co. for authority to retain ownership in oil steamers operated between California ports and those of Oregon, Washington, Alaska, and the Hawaiian Islands, these boats being owned by the latter applicant which is controlled by stock ownership by the applicant first named. Application granted as to boats operating to and from Alaska and Hawaiian Islands and denied as to the others. (34 I. C. C., 77.)

"5–7–1915. Upon applications of (1) Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and Northern Central Co. to continue interest in and operation of Erie & Western Transportation Co., operating steamboats on the Great Lakes serving the ports of Buffalo, Erie, Cleveland, Detroit, Mackinac Island, Milwaukee, Chicago, Sault Ste. Marie, Marquette, Hancock, Houghton, Superior, and

Duluth; and (2) Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.; (3) New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co.; (4) Rutland Railroad Co.; (5) Erie Railroad Co.; and (6) Grand Trunk Railway Co. of Canada, to continue interest in boat lines also on the Great Lakes and, respectively, performing services of a kind similar to or identical with those of Erie & Western Transportation Co. Application denied, but on rehearing that of Grand Trunk Railway Co. of Canada was subsequently granted. (33 I. C. C., 699; 43 I. C. C., 286.)

"5-11-1915. Upon application of the Ann Arbor Railroad Co. to continue its ownership and operation of car ferries between Frankfort and Manistique, Menominee, Kewaunee, and Manitowoc. Application granted. (34 I. C. C., 83.)

"5-11-1915. Upon application of Pere Marquette Railroad Co. to continue its interest in and operation of its car ferries on the Detroit River between Detroit and Windsor, on the St. Clair River between Port Huron and Sarnia, and on Lake Michigan between Ludington and Milwaukee, Manitowoc, and Kewaunee, and upon the joint application of the Pere Marquette Railroad Co. and the Bessemer & Lake Erie Railroad Co. to continue their interest in and joint operation of the Marquette & Bessemer Dock & Navigation Co., one-half of the capital stock of which is owned by each of the applicants, owning and operating a car ferry between Conneaut and Port Stanley. Application granted. (34 I. C. C., 86.)

"5-25-1915. Upon application of the Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation Co. for authority to continue to operate the San Francisco & Portland Steamship Co., operating on the Columbia and Willamette Rivers and between Portland and San Francisco and San Pedro, on the Pacific Ocean, the capital stock of the steamship company being owned by the applicant. Application granted. (34 I. C. C., 165.)

"5-25-1915. Upon application of the Southern Pacific Co. and the Central Pacific Railway Co. to continue to operate boats on the Sacramento River, these boats being owned by the latter and leased to the former applicant. Application granted. (34 I. C. C., 174.)

"5-29-1915. Upon application of the Erie Railroad Co. to continue its interest in and operation of the Lake Keuka Navigation Co., operating boats on Lake Keuka. Application granted. (34 I. C. C., 212.)

"5-29-1915. Upon application of the Erie Railroad Co. and the Chicago and Erie Railroad Co. to continue their interest in and operation of certain tugboats, barges, and other equipment used on the Chicago River. Application granted. (34 I. C. C., 218.)

"5-29-1915. Upon joint application of the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic Railway Co., Grand Rapids & Indiana Railway Co., and the Michigan Central Railroad Co. to continue their joint interest in and operation of the Mackinac Transportation Co., owning ferryboats plying between St. Ignace and Mackinaw City. Application granted. (34 I. C. C., 229.)

"7-2-1915. Upon application of Southern Pacific Co. and Central Pacific Railway Co. to permit continued operation by the Sacramento Transportation Co., which owns and operates steamboats on the Sacramento River and in which petitioners own stock. Application granted. (34 I. C. C., 648.)

"7-30-1915. Upon application of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and certain of its subsidiary companies for authority to continue the operation of steamers on Chesapeake Bay and tributary waters; the Maryland, Delaware & Virginia Railway Co., which directly owns some of said steamers being controlled through stock ownership by the Baltimore, Chesapeake & Atlantic Railway Co., which directly owns and operates the rest of said steamers and the Baltimore, Chesapeake & Atlantic Railway Co., being controlled through stock ownership by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. Application granted as to the boat lines between (1) Baltimore and Claiborne and (2) Baltimore and Love Point and denied as to the other lines. (35 I. C. C., 692.)

"4-11-1916. Upon application of Florida East Coast Railway Co. and the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co. to continue joint ownership of the Peninsular & Occidental Steamship Co., a corporation owning and operating three steamboats between Miami and Nassau, Key West, and Habana, and Port Tampa and Habana, and sometimes chartering additional boats for freight service. Application granted. (37 I. C. C., 432; 38 I. C. C., 662.)

"6-21-1916. Upon application of Michigan Central Railroad Co. to institute a service by boats on Lake Erie between Ashtabula, Ohio, and Port Maitland, Province of Ontario, such boat line to be owned and operated by an Ohio corporation in which applicant will have an interest. Application granted. (40 I. C. C., 143.)

"6-22-1916. Upon application of the Maine Central Railroad to continue to operate the Bath Ferry and its boat lines on Frenchmans Bay and Penobscot Bay. Application granted. (40 I. C. C., 272.)

"6-22-1916. Upon application of the Delaware & Hudson Co. to continue to operate and have an interest in the Lake Champlain Transportation Co. and the Lake George Steamboat Co., operating on Lake Champlain and Lake George. Application granted. (40 I. C. C., 297.)

"6-29-1916. Upon applications of the Southern Railway Co., the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co., the Norfolk & Western Railway Co., the Seaboard Air Line Railway, and the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co. for an extension of time during which they may operate the Old Dominion Steamship Co., the Virginia Navigation Co., the Chesapeake Steamship Co., and the Baltimore Steam Packet Co. Application granted, except that of Norfolk & Western Railway Co., which was denied. (41 I. C. C., 285.)

"7-3-1916. Upon application of Boston & Maine Railroad to continue service by its steamers on Lake Winnepesaukee and Lake Memphremagog. Application granted. (40 I. C. C., 565.)

"7-5-1916. Upon application of Central Vermont Railway Co. to continue existing service by boats between New York City and New London and to install similar service between New York City and Providence. Application granted. (40 I. C. C., 589.)

"3-3-1917. Upon rehearing of application of Grand Trunk Railway Co., of Canada, for permission to continue operation of Canada Atlantic Transit Co., a boat line which owns and operates on the Great Lakes, such permission having been originally denied. (33 I. C. C., 699.) Application granted. (43 I. C. C., 286.)

"5-12-1917. Upon application of the Southern Pacific Co. for an extension of time during which applicant may operate and have an interest in its Atlantic Steamship lines, operated between New York and Galveston and between New Orleans and Habana. Application granted. (43 I. C. C., 168; 45 I. C. C., 505.)

"7-13-1917. Upon joint application of Southern Pacific Co. and Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Co. for extension of time during which they may operate or have an interest in the Direct Navigation Co., a Texas corporation owning three tugs, six barges, wharves at Houston, and other property, and operating on Buffalo Bayou between Houston and Galveston: Held that (1) the Southern Pacific Co., through its subsidiary, the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railway Co., does and may compete with the Direct Navigation Co., but (2) under present conditions the service of the Direct Navigation Co. is in the interest of the public and of advantage to the commerce and convenience of the people, (3) and such continued ownership by applicants will neither exclude, prevent, nor reduce competition on the water route. Application granted. (46 I. C. C., 378.)

"5-1-1918. Upon commission's own motion: Held that Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway neither does nor may compete with the boats and barges which it operates on the Tennessee River between Hobbs Island and Guntersville. (49 I. C. C., 737.)"

STATE EX REL. MULLEN V. HOWELL.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and also as a public document the majority opinion of the Supreme Court of Washington in the case of State ex rel. Mullen v. Howell. The opinion will be found in the advance sheets of the Pacific Reporter, dated Monday, July 28, 1919, and was handed down May 24 last. It relates to the ratification of amendments to the Federal Constitution, and is particularly interesting at this time with reference to the pending amendment for Federal suffrage. It is not generally available, and I take this means of making it so. I would like to have bracket 7, which appears in the second column, on page 924 of the Pacific Reporter, printed in blackface type. This announces the controlling principles.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATE EX REL. MULLEN V. HOWELL, SECRETARY OF STATE.
(No. 15313. Supreme Court of Washington. May 24, 1919.)

"1. Statutes—Referendum—Construction of constitutional amendment: Constitutional amendment 7, article 2, section 1, providing for a referendum in all cases 'except such laws as may be necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety, support of the State government and its existing public institutions,' by specifying the things not reserved, is an expression of a reservation to pass upon all things not so specified.

"2. States—Police powers of States—Federal interference: The Federal Government has no power to control the police power of the States, except as such power may have been expressly granted or as it may be necessary to maintain the acknowledged powers of the Federal Government.

"3. Constitutional law—Validity of statutes: A law will not be held unconstitutional if it is within the spirit of the policy enunciated by the constitutional provision under consideration.

"4. Constitutional law—Amendment to United States Constitution — Resolution of legislature — Referendum — 'Law': Under constitutional amendment 7, article 2, section 1, providing for referendum of 'acts, bills, or laws,' joint resolution of State legislature ratifying constitutional amendment for national prohibition proposed by Res. Dec. 19, 1917, 40 Statutes, 1050, is subject to referendum, the amendment to the United States Constitution being a law within the seventh amendment of the State constitution.

"[Editor's note: For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, first and second series, Law.]

"5. Constitutional law—United States Constitution—Amendment—Method of ratification: The authority to act in the matter of a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States does not arise in or out of the constitution of the State, but arises out of the Federal Constitution; and any act, whether by resolution or bill, on the part of the State legislature, is a sufficient expression of the legislative will, unless Congress itself challenges the method or manner of its adoption.

"6. Constitutional law—United States Constitution—Amendment—Legislative and judicial powers: In mandamus to compel submission of joint resolution ratifying amendment to United States Constitution, the contention that the legislature has no power to act by resolution is nonjusticiable, the power to question the manner of adoption being in Congress, and not the courts.

"7. Constitutional law—United States Constitution—Amendment—Ratification: Congress has no concern of the manner in which the people of the several States pass upon proposed amendments to the United States Constitution.

"8. Constitutional law—Amendment to United States Constitution—Referendum—'Legislature': Constitution of United States, Article V, providing that proposed amendment shall be valid 'when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof,' does not preclude submission of joint resolution of State legislature ratifying proposed amendment to a referendum, the words 'legislatures' and 'conventions' not having present-day meanings, the former referring to legislative authority, including all its branches, and not merely the legislative assembly.

"[Editor's note: For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, first and second series, Legislature.]

"9. States—Federal Constitution—Reservation of powers—To States: Constitution of United States, amendment 10, providing that 'the powers not delegated to the United States * * * are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people,' is a declaration that the people of the several States may function their legislative power in their own way, especially in view of the ninth amendment.

"Parker, Mitchell, Tolman, and Fullerton, JJ., dissenting.

"En Banc.

"Mandamus by the State of Washington, on the relation of Frank P. Mullen, against I. M. Howell, secretary of state of the State of Washington. Writ ordered to issue.

"P. C. Sullivan, of Tacoma; John F. Murphy, of Seattle; and Turner, Nuzum & Nuzum, of Spokane, for appellant.

"L. L. Thompson and Glenn J. Fairbrook, both of Olympia, for respondent.

"CHADWICK, C. J. At the general election held in 1912 the people of the State of Washington adopted as a principle of government the power to initiate laws, and to review at the bar of popular opinion all acts, bills, or laws passed by the Legislature of the State of Washington.

"[1] The right so to do is emphasized as a power reserved, and the terms of the amendment imply in the strongest possible way that the intention of the people was to reserve a right to review every act of the legislature which might affect the people in their civil rights, or limit or extend their political liberties; for they wrote an exception, saying that a referendum may be ordered in all cases 'except such laws as may be necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety, support of the State government and its existing public institutions.' (Amendment 7, art. 2, sec. 1.) The writing of an exception specifying the things not reserved is an expression, within sound rules of construction, of a reservation to pass upon all things not so specified.

"The court in passing directly upon the amendment, and in other cases arising under city charters, has held firmly to the principle of the referendum, and has consistently refused to limit it by construction.

"In December, 1917, Congress proposed an amendment (Res. Dec. 19, 1917, 40 Stat., 1050) to the Federal Constitution, providing that:

"SECTION 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

"[2] It will be noted that the amendment does not pertain to matters within the original concept of the Constitution, to the definition, or distribution of powers of public officers, but by its terms assumes to cover matters that are purely legislative, and which have hitherto been a subject of legislation by the several States under the police power. We understand that the Federal Government has no power to control the police power of the States except as such power may have been expressly granted, or as it may be necessary to maintain the acknowledged powers of the Federal Government.

"This amendment was submitted to and ratified by the Legislature of the State of Washington by joint resolution passed January 13, 1919. On March 20, 1919, relator tendered a petition for a referendum to the respondent secretary of state; he asked that it be filed and a ballot title be supplied. Respondent refused to receive it upon the grounds (a) that the amendment having been adopted by a joint resolution, and not by an act, bill, or law, it was not within the terms of the seventh amendment; and (b) that it was not a subject for referendum under Article V of the Constitution of the United States.

"Addressing ourselves to the first contention of the respondent, Is the resolution an act, bill, or law within the meaning of those terms as employed in our constitution—whether the people intended an act, bill, or law to be statutes enacted by the legislature, or whether they meant action by the legislature which affected them as law?

"[3] No cases have been cited, and we may confidently say that there are none, holding to a rule of strict construction where the power of the whole people is in question. It is a rule, become axiomatic by long-continued reiteration, that no court will hold a law to be unconstitutional unless such holding is compelled; that a law will not be held to be unconstitutional by construction; that is to say, the power of the legislative body, or the people if exercising that function, will not be abridged by the courts, or suffered to be abridged by others, if the thing sought to be done is within the spirit of the policy enunciated in the provision under consideration. To this end the courts of the country have so addressed themselves that, without resort to the tedium of limitless authority, we may well adopt the language of Judge Cooley, who was an acknowledged master in the field of constitutional law, that constitutional provisions must be interpreted with reference to—

"the times and circumstances under which the state constitution was formed—the general spirit of the times and the prevailing sentiments among the people. Every constitution has a history of its own which is likely to be more or less peculiar, and unless interpreted in the light of this history, is liable to be made to express purposes which were never within the minds of the people in agreeing to it. (People v. Harding, 53 Mich., 48; 19 N. W., 155; 51 Am. Rep., 95.)

"The safe way is to read its [the Constitution's] language in connection with the known condition of affairs out of which the occasion for its adoption may have arisen, and then to construe it, if there be therein any doubtful expressions, in a way, so far as is reasonably possible, to forward the known purpose or object for which the amendment was adopted. (Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S., 581, 602; 20 Sup. Ct., 448, 456 (44 L. Ed., 597).)

"The courts are not bound by mere forms, nor are they to be misled by mere pretenses. They are at liberty—indeed, are under a solemn duty—to look to the substance of things, whenever they enter upon the inquiry whether the legislature has transcended the limits of its authority. (Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S., 623, 661; 8 Sup. Ct., 273, 297 (31 L. Ed., 205).)

"The people, too, have directly charged us with a duty to be mindful of their sovereign rights.

"A frequent recurrence to fundamental principles is essential to the security of individual rights and the perpetuity of free government. (Constitution of State of Washington, art. 1, sec. 32.)

"Wherefore the purpose of the people in adopting the seventh amendment is a proper subject to be considered. Did they intend to grant any exceptions other than those enumerated in the seventh amendment? If this were an ordinary case of statutory construction, we have no doubt that we could all agree that we would look first to the old law, the mischief, and the remedy. It is more important in considering a question involving, the first of all, the sovereign rights of the citizen—the right to speak ultimately and finally in matters of political concern—that we should measure the power reserved by the former condition.

"It is well known that the power of the referendum was asserted not because the people had a willful or perverse desire to exercise the legislative function directly, but because they had become impressed with a profound conviction that the legislature had ceased to be responsible to the popular will. They endeavored to, and did—unless we attach ourselves to words, and words alone, reject the idea upon which the referendum is founded, and blind ourselves to the great political movement that culminated in the seventh amendment—make reservation of the power to refer every act of the legislature, with only certain enumerated exceptions.

"Guided by these considerations, we are satisfied that the people used the words 'act, bill, or law' in no restricted sense, but in a sense commensurate with the political evil they sought to cure.

"[4] And why should not the amendment be a law within the meaning of the seventh amendment? No reason is assigned other than that 'law' as there used is synonymous with 'bill' or 'act.' We may well argue, and be within sound rules, that if the people had so intended they would not have used the word 'law' at all, as was done in the State of Oregon. We can conceive of no more sweeping law than the proposed amendment. Certainly no amendment has ever been proposed that goes deeper into the vitals of the American idea of government. It surrenders pro tanto the sovereignty of the State, gives to the Federal Government a right to enact laws and to enforce them through the Federal courts, and it will deny the citizen the protection of some of those guaranties that we have written out of the travail of time into our own Bill of Rights. Upon construction we hold that the amendment to the Constitution of the United States is a law, within the meaning of the seventh amendment, and is subject to referendum.

"But it is contended that, whereas the legislature ratified the amendment by joint resolution instead of by act of bill, as it might have done, the resolution, being not eo nomine an act, bill, or law, is not subject to a referendum. This argument defeats itself, for if we are to be literal and exact in terminology, and so insistent upon 'scholastic interpretation' as to admit this premise, we must hold that the legislature had no power to ratify the amendment except by act or bill; for we find no power granted in the constitution to that body to act in matters legislative other than by act or bill.

"This reasoning would lead to two consequences, equally absurd: Either the amendment being ratified by resolution, the act of ratification is void as a thing done in a manner not provided; or, if sustained, would permit the legislature to defeat the power of referendum by acting, in matters purely legislative, by resolution instead of by bill. The latter is the consequence in the instant case if the argument of the learned attorney general is to be sustained. But we are not put to the extremity of holding that the legislature may not in matters of ratification act by resolution, for there is a high road of reason leading down to a true result.

"The contention that a resolution, although it may have the force and consequence of a formal legislative enactment, and affect the people in their civil and political rights, can not be referred, arises from a misconception of the term. This case sounds in fundamentals, not in definitions. It is not the resolution, but the act of the legislature in adopting it, that is to be referred. A resolution, like all acts of the legislature, is to be measured by the end accomplished. It is true that we have no provision in our constitution providing for the passage of resolutions even in the formal matters in which the legislature has throughout the entire history of our territory and State been wont to act, but it is just as evident that there is no limitation upon the power of the legislature to act by resolution.

"The constitutions of some of the States and the Constitution of the United States (sec. 7, Art. I) permit or recognize the practice of acting by resolution, and some of them limit its uses. It has been held if the Constitution is silent, as ours is, that legislation can not be effected by that method. Boyers v. Crane (1 W. Va., 176), State ex rel. Attorney General v. Kinney (56 Ohio St., 721, 47 N. E., 569), Barry v. Viall (12 R. I., 18).

"[5] And were we considering a matter involving private right, arising in or out of the laws of this State, we could not question the authorities just cited; but they are not applicable for the reason that the authority to act in the matter of a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States does not arise in or out of the constitution of the State, but arises out of the Federal Constitution, and any act, whether it be by resolution or by bill, on the part of the State legislature must be held to be a sufficient expression of the legislative will, unless Congress itself challenges the method or manner of its adoption. It is upon this principle that the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the question whether the referendum does violence to the Constitution of the United States is nonjusticiable, holding that the question whether it deprives the government of a State of its representative character, thus violating the guaranty of a republican form of government, is a question for Congress and not for the courts.

"[6] The power to question the manner of adoption being in Congress, and not in the courts, the contention that the legislature has no power to act by resolution is nonjusticiable, but this holding does not foreclose an inquiry as to the legislative character of the thing done.

"It may be that my argument is not entirely clear. If so, we may profitably resort to an illustration. The people of the State of Washington have, by expression of their reserved right to legislate upon all proper subjects of legislation, declared the policy of this State to be against the barter and sale of intoxicating liquor within the State, and by subsequent laws that we, as citizens of a sovereign State, are opposed to the use of intoxicating liquor by any of our citizens. The original law, by its accretions, has become what is popularly called, in the nomenclature of the Anti-Saloon League, 'bone dry.' This the people did of their own free will and accord and by the assertion of a hitherto unused power. Let the question occur, Can their act be undone by any plan, power, or authority less or other than the power that established the present state of the law? Keeping in mind our present 'bone-dry' condition, or plight, if that term be preferred, suppose the Congress of the United States should propose an amendment to the Federal Constitution providing that it shall hereafter be lawful to ship and sell in all of the States of the Union wines and beers containing not to exceed a certain minimum of alcohol—that it has the power so to do will not be denied; then suppose that the State legislature did by resolution, as in the present instance, ratify the amendment, and that it was ratified by a sufficient number of States only, including our own, to meet the demands of the Federal Constitution. We would then have a law that was not a law before; that would wipe out pro tanto the present law; that would work such an exception to it that, so far as the policy of our citizens had been expressed by their direct vote, would defeat its purposes. In such event—and it is a reasonable postulate—would it be urged for one moment that the people of this State could be denied a right of referendum to determine for themselves, under their reserved powers, whether they desired their own law to be thus overcome? Would they have to stand by helplessly, while the fruits of their victory were swept away and their sovereignty surrendered in degree by resolution of the legislature?

"I opine that we would find some way to declare that the right to refer the matter to the people, who had theretofore exercised their reserved power upon the very subject of the proposed legislation, could not be thus defeated. It is no argument to say that a referendum in that event would operate to promote a good cause, while this demand comes from those who would defeat all liquor legislation. We are here to declare the law, not to maintain or defend policies; and it is enough to say that the relator is within the law as declared by the whole people, and as such his right should not in conscience be denied. We can not fit a rule to meet a particular case; it must apply to all alike, whatever the cause and whatever the character of those who invoke it.

"The final, and, as we believe, the principal, ground of opposition is that the amendment, being submitted under Article V of the Constitution of the United States, is a Federal question in the sense that State laws and State constitutions have no bearing upon or relation to the issues.

"It is argued that inasmuch as Article V of the Constitution of the United States provides that a proposed amendment 'shall be valid, to all intends and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States or by conventions in three-fourths thereof,' and so forth, the people have hitherto fixed the manner and form of ratification, against which the reserved power of the people of a sovereign State may not prevail. If we are to stand upon the word 'legislatures'; if that word, and that alone, is the Alpha and Omega of our inquiry, it follows that the controversy is at an end; but we are cited to no instances where a great question involving the political rights of a people has been met by such technical recourse; where any court has so exalted the letter or so debased the spirit of the law.

"In Noble State Bank v. Haskell (219 U. S., 104, 31 Sup. Ct. 186, 55 L. Ed., 112, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.), 1062, Ann. Cas., 1912A, 487) Justice Holmes frowned upon a like invitation, saying:

"We must be cautious about pressing the broad words of the fourteenth amendment to a dryly logical extreme. Many laws which it would be vain to ask the court to overthrow could be shown, easily enough, to transgress a scholastic interpretation of one or another of the great guaranties in the Bill of Rights. * * * Judges should be slow to read into the latter [the Constitution of the United States] a nolumus mutare as against the lawmaking power.

"[7] It may be set down as a truism that the Congress of the United States has no concern of the manner in which the people of the several States pass upon the proposed amendments. It is the act of ratification or rejection by the legislative power in a State, and not the manner of doing, that makes for the result to be accomplished.

"It may be true that it might have been provided that amendments could be made directly by Congress, and the submission of amendments for ratification or rejection by the legislatures of the several States at all was a matter of grace upon the part of the whole people when the Constitution was adopted; but we would incline to the opinion that the right to pass upon proposed amendments should be treated as a reservation in the several States of the right to express their legislative will in the manner in which they had then provided, or might thereafter provide, and, when so regarded, as a compact between the States and the Federal Government.

"It is provided in the Federal Constitution that proposed amendments shall be ratified by the legislatures of the States or by conventions assembled for the purpose of considering them. It can not be urged successfully that the framers of the Constitution used the words 'legislatures' and 'conventions' as terms describing then present institutions, for it is well known that at the time the Constitution was adopted some of the States did not have legislative assemblies.

"Article 5 can mean no more than this: That no amendment shall be adopted unless it is sanctioned by the supreme legislative power of a sufficient number of the Commonwealths, whether such ratification be by legislative assembly, convention, or such other method as might thereafter be adopted by the people in the several States.

"[8] If we hold that the words 'legislatures' and 'conventions' do not control the plain purpose and spirit of Article V—that is, that the people shall pass upon a proposed amendment by their representatives, if that be the plan provided by them at the time of its submission, or, if not, under such other plan of expressing their will as may not be offensive to the Federal Constitution—we are on solid ground. For the framers of the Constitution had well in mind—for they had lived in that time when our political system was being fashioned into concrete form—they understood, as we sometimes forget, that 'the theory of our political system is that the ultimate sovereignty is in the people, from whom springs all legitimate authority.' Cooley, Constitutional Limitations (6th Ed.), page 39. Wherefore it may be said that it is the meaning and intent of Article V that an amendment to the Constitution of the United States shall not become effective until it has been ratified by the legislative authority of a sufficient number of the States, and it should not be held that a ratification or rejection by a popular vote, under the referendum clause of a State constitution, would be contrary to the provisions of Article V unless it can be said, under sound rules of construction, that the referendum is offensive to the Constitution of the United States.

"The people of several of the States, having the sovereign right of self-government, excepting only as they may have yielded that right under the Constitution of the United States and its amendments, have adopted the referendum as a rule of government, and the only objection that has ever been urged, or that could have been urged, against it, is that it violates section 4, Article IV, of the Constitution, guaranteeing to every State a republican form of government. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that it does not so offend. (Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Oregon, 223 U. S., 118; 32 Sup. Ct., 224; 56 L. Ed. 377.)

"The fault of disassociating a word or correlative words from the text of a written law, and promising a judgment without the warmth of the spirit of that law, may be illustrated. If we are wrong, it may well be that a State might, and withal unwittingly, put it beyond its power to pass upon a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution. If the people of this State had, when they adopted the referendum, provided for the abolition of our legislative assembly—as they might have done—and had provided that all laws should thereafter be initiated by, and voted upon by, direct vote of the people, or that the legislative functions of the State should be exercised by a council of three, and that all their acts should be subject to a referendum at the next succeeding general election, it would follow, under the theory advanced to defeat a referendum in this case, that a proposed amendment could not be either ratified or rejected in the State of Washington, for there would be no 'legislature' or 'convention' in the sense in which those terms are employed in the Federal Constitution.

"Significance is placed on the word 'conventions,' it being contended that if the word 'legislatures' had been used alone our argument might seem plausible, but the added word 'conventions' necessarily implies that Congres had in mind a representative body and not legislative authority, but we are inclined to take a broader view.

"It was doubtless intended that 'legislatures' should mean one thing—that is, the legislative authority of the State—and 'conventions' another thing—an extraordinary representative body, convened by and in the State, for the sole purpose of passing upon the proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution. If it had no other intention in adopting the term 'legislatures' in specifying one of the instrumentalities for passing upon the proposed amendment than to express the idea of legislative power, of whatever that power consists, then it must be deemed to mean all the branches or component parts of that power, which have included the qualified voters also, if they so desire. Inasmuch as the Constitution was formulated not for a day or a year, but for all time except as amended, we may consider that it contemplated the same kinds of State legislative bodies then in existence and known to the framers, or any other kinds of legislative bodies that should come into existence in the future.

"One of the important ideas governing the framers of the National Constitution was that amendments to that instrument should be ratified by the States as units, recognizing and preserving the integrity and sovereignty of the States as parties to the compact creating and continuing that Constitution. Doubtless there was no other idea prevailing in providing for adoption of amendments by the 'legislatures' or 'conventions' of three-fourths of the States than that. Certainly it was and is of no concern to the others what sort of legislature any particular State has, so long as it conforms to the scheme of a republican form of government.

"We have preferred to meet the question upon the plane of broad reason, having in mind the spirit and policy of the referendum; but we are not without competent authority to prove that the manner or the name attached to the legislative power of the State, whether it be a representative body or the people themselves, is of no concern to the Federal Government.

"In State ex rel. Schrader v. Polley (26 S. D. 5, 127 N. W., 848) it was contended, inasmuch as it was provided in the Federal Constitution (sec. 4, Art. I) that 'the times, place, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof, * * *' that the relator was entitled to have his name go upon the ballot at a general election under an act of the legislature, but against which a referendum petition had been filed. And it would seem, if the argument of the respondent is sound, that the prayer of the relator in that case should have been granted, for there the Constitution of the United States provided that the legislature should prescribe the times, places, and manner of holding elections, while in the instant case the provision is that the amendment shall be ratified by the legislatures.

"[9] After noting the tenth amendment to the Constitution, that 'the powers not delegated to the United States * * * are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people,' which, by the way, is a declaration that the people of the several States may function their legislative power in their own way, especially so when the ninth amendment, 'The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people,' is regarded—for the right to legislate directly or by representative bodies is a right asuredly retained, and, being retained, may be exercised in the form and manner provided by the people of a State—the court says:

"We are also of the opinion that the word 'legislature,' as used in section 4, Article 1, of the Federal Constitution, does not mean simply the members who compose the legislature, acting in some ministerial capacity, but refers to and means the lawmaking body or power of the State, as established by the State constitution, and which includes the whole constitutional lawmaking machinery of the State. State governments are divided into executive, legislative, and judicial departments, and the Federal Constitution refers to the 'legislature' in the sense of its being the legislative department of the State, whether it is denominated a legislature, general assembly, or by some other name. Under section 1, article 3, of the State constitution, it will be observed, the people of this State have reserved to themselves, as a part of the lawmaking power, the right to vote by referendum upon any law passed by the legislature, with certain specified exceptions, prior to the going into effect of such law. That the exceptions mentioned are 'such laws as may be necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety, support of the State government or its existing State institution.' It is clear that said chapter 223 is not within any of these exceptions. Under the constitution of this State the people, by means of the initiative and referendum, are a part and parcel of the lawmaking power of this State, and the legislature is only empowered to act, in accordance with the will of the people as expressed by the vote, when the referendum is properly put in operation. The term 'legislature' has a restricted meaning, which only applies to the membership thereof, and it also has a general meaning which applies to that body of persons within a State clothed with authority to make the laws (Bouvier's Law Dic.; Webster's Dic.; 18 Am. & Eng. Ency., 822; 25 Cyc., 182), and which, in this State, under section 1, article 3, Const. S. D., includes the people. * * *

"In Baldwin v. Trowbridge (2 Bart. Contested El Cas., 46) the minority report, in presenting the legal side of the controversy, shows the following pertinent language, which meets with our approval: 'But it was argued that this power was by express terms left, not to the States simply, but to the legislatures thereof, and that this is such a limitation upon the people of the States that they have no power to restrict their legislatures in the exercise of this right, conferred upon them by the Federal Constitution; but I submit, with all due respect, that not only the history and object of the section under consideration, but the proper definition of the term 'legislature,' as therein used, show the fallacy of this construction. The 'legislature' of the State, in its fullest and broadest sense, signifies that body in which all the legislative power of a State resides, and that body is the people themselves, who exercise the elective franchise, and upon their power of legislation there is no limitation or restriction, except such as may be found in the Federal Constitution, or such as they themselves may provide by the organic law of the State.'

"The writ was denied.

"State ex rel. Davis v. Hildebrant (94 Ohio St., 154; 114 N. E., 55), is likewise to the point. The general assembly, being the representative legislative body of the State of Ohio, passed an act on May 27, 1915 (105–106 Ohio Laws, p. 474), redistricting and apportioning the State into several congressional districts. The State had theretofore by an act passed April 28, 1913 (103 Ohio Laws, p. 568), been districted and divided. A sufficient number of the people filed a petition for a referendum of the later act. It was submitted to the electors of the State, and was reejcted by a majority of the voters. It was contended that the act of 1915 was a valid act, and was not a subject of referendum, because section 4, Article I of the Federal Constitution, provided that the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Members of Congress 'shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof.' The court put the question:

"Does the term 'legislature,' as used in Article I, section 4, of the Federal Constitution, comprehend simply the representative agencies of the State, composed of the members of the bicameral body, or does it comprehend the various agencies in which is lodged the legislative power to make, amend, and repeal the laws of the State, including the power reserved to the people, empowering them to 'adopt or reject any law' passed by the general assembly under the provisions of section 1, article 2, of the constitution of Ohio?

"After reference to the State constitution, which is in form similar to the seventh amendment to our own, the court says:

"These various sections disclose that, while the legislative power has been delegated to the bicameral body, composed of the senate and house of representatives, the people of Ohio have, by the aforesaid provisions of their constitution, determined the manner by which such legislative power may be exercised, under what circumstances the laws passed by it may become operative without an appeal to the people, and have further imposed the conditions under which such laws may become operative or inoperative as they may have been adopted or rejected by the popular vote designated as the 'referendum.'

"While Article I, section 4, of the United States Constitution, is controlling upon the States, in so far as it grants the legislature of the State authority to prescribe the times, places, and manner of holding elections, this is the quantum of the Federal grant. The character of the legislature, its composition, and its potency as a legislative body are among the powers which are, by Article X of said Constitution, 'expressly reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.'

"Webster's New International Dictionary defines 'legislature' as follows: 'The body of persons in a State, or politically organized body of people, invested with power to make, alter, and repeal laws.'

"The Century Dictionary defines the same term as follows: 'Any body of persons authorized to make laws or rules for the community represented by them.'

"Under the reserved power committed to the people of the States by the Federal Constitution, the people, by their State organic law, unhindered by Federal check or requirement, may create any agency as its lawmaking body, or impose on such agency any checks or conditions under which a law may be enacted and become operative. Acting under this recognized authority, the Ohio constitution, prior to the adoption of the amendment of 1912, provided that the 'legislative power' of the State should be vested in the general assembly, consisting of a senate and house of representatives. The same provision now exists, but by the adoption of the amendment of 1912 the people expressly limited this legislative power by reserving to themselves the power to reject any law by means of a popular referendum. The lawmaking body, the legislature, as defined by lexicographers, comprehends every agency required for the creation of effective laws. It can not be claimed that the term 'legislature' necessarily implies a bicameral body. When the term was originally embraced in the Constitution the Legislatures of Pennsylvania, Georgia, and Vermont consisted of but a single house, with a second body in each called an executive council. These States later abolished their councils and established a legislature consisting of two branches, and such is the character generally of the various State legislatures to-day. (1 Bryce's American Commonwealth, p. 461, note.)

"The constitutional provision relating to the election of Congressmen, conferring the power therein defined upon the various State legislatures, should be construed as conferring it upon such bodies as may from time to time assume to exercise legislative power, whether that power is lodged in a single or two-chambered body, or whether the functions of the latter be curbed by a popular vote or its enactments approved by a referendum vote.

"This case went to the Supreme Court of the United States. (State ex rel. Davis v. Hildebrant, 241 U. S., 565, 36 Sup. Ct., 708, 60 L. Ed., 1172.) That court passed the question of the power of the State to adopt and use the referendum as an instrument of legislative will 'as obvious,' holding that the State law, which had been made subject to the referendum, was valid and operative. A conclusion manifestly unsound if the word 'legislature' means a bicameral body, and that meaning is inflexible under the Constitution of the United States; for, if that were so, the States would have no power to prevail against it whatever the form of their expression may have been.

"But it is said that the Supreme Court may be unsound in that respect, but is sound in result, because the Congress had passed an act (act Aug. 8, 1911, c. 5, 37 Stat., 13) making the referendum a component part of the legislative authority empowered to deal with the election of Members of Congress. There is nothing in the act of Congress which 'prevents the people of a State from reserving a right of approval or disapproval by referendum of a State act redistricting the State for the purpose of congressional elections' (syllabus). But, if it were so, it would not avail respondent, for the power of the State to act comes from the Constitution and not from any act of Congress. To give such effect to an act of Congress would be to say that Congress might by act amend the Constitution, Chief Justice White disposed of the controversy when he defined the issue:

"The right to this relief was based upon the charge that the referendum vote was not and could not be a part of the legislative authority of the State, and therefore could have no influence on the subject of the law creating congressional districts for the purpose of representation in Congress—

"And said—

"The court below adversely disposed of these contentions, and held that the provision as to referendum was a part of the legislative power of the State. * * * As to the State power, we pass from its consideration, since it is obvious that the decision below is conclusive on that subject, and makes it clear that, so far as the State had the power to do it, the referendum constituted a part of the State constitution and laws, and was contained within the legislative power, and therefore the claim that the law, which was disapproved and was no law under the constitution and laws of the State, was yet valid and operative, is conclusively established to be wanting in merit.

"It could not have been so held if the act of the legislature, as distinguished from legislative authority, was essential under section 4. If that were so, the court must have denounced the referendum in that and all cases where the Constitution leaves a matter to the 'legislature,' and refused to follow the State court, for its first duty is to the Constitution.

"Our attention is called to an unpublished decision of the Supreme Court of Oregon in Hebring v. Attorney General (180 Pac., 328). The premise of the decision is that the reserved power of the people is limited to a review of 'any act of the legislative assembly,' and that the word 'act' was used having in mind the exercise of the legislative function as outlined in the original draft of the State constitution, and that the word 'act' did not comprehend a joint resolution.

"We have already demonstrated that our Constitution is more comprehensive. The decision does not appeal to us for another reason. Its basis is fundamentally unsound, in that it proceeds upon the theory that the right of the people to legislate upon the question rests in the antecedent provisions of the State constitution, whereas the right comes from the Constitution of the United States.

"Other questions were discussed by counsel. We have considered them, and are agreed that they are not controlling.

"The writ will issue.

"Mount, Main, and Holcomb, JJ., concur.

"MACKINTOSH, J. (concurring). By the adoption of the initiative and referendum amendment the people of this State became a part of the legislative branch of the State government, and all legislative actions, except those especially exempted, are subject to their participation. The reasons which have led up to this modern form of legislation are as set forth in Judge Chadwick's opinion, and, upon both authority and reason, no curtailment of this power should now be judicially sanctioned. If the people have declared their intention to assert their authority over the legislature in acts many of which are of temporary or small importance, it was surely their intention to preserve to themselves the right of reviewing legislative action of lasting and great importance, and within this category assuredly fall all actions dealing with the amendment of the Federal Constitution. It would be idle to say that the right of referendum could be exercised in the unimportant matters and not in the important.

"The dissenting opinion of Judge Parker indulges in altogether too narrow and restricted an interpretation of the right of referendum, and seems to be entirely out of harmony with the course of the decisions of this court upon this and kindred matters arising under laws affecting modern legislative and governmental functions. By strict adherence to dictionary definitions this dissenting opinion crushes the spirit of the constitutional provisions under consideration, and, if it were the prevailing view in this case, would mark a step backward by a court which has come to be recognized as rather liberal in its interpretation of legislation aimed at the correction of social and public evils. It is clear to my mind that the law contemplated the submission to the people of all legislative acts, using that word in its broad signification, and it is also clear that the Constitution of the United States, in providing for amendments thereof, intended that those amendments should by Congress be submitted to the legislative powers of the various States, and that the term 'legislature,' as used in that broad way, was not meant to refer merely to what is commonly called a legislature.

"The view expressed by Judge Fullerton appears to me to be equally as untenable as those written by Judge Parker and those agreeing with him. As I understand it, that view is that because the legislature ratified the proposed constitutional amendment by joint resolution instead of by an act, that therefore there has never been any ratification by the State of Washington of the proposed prohibition amendment. The answer to this has been admirably expressed in the majority opinion, and it would appear to be self-evident that the technical manner of signifying the agreement of the legislative body is a question which should be determined by the Congress of the United States and is not a matter of our concern.

"I am compelled by the majority opinion to concur in the result therein arrived at."

SALARY OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY OF NEW YORK.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3201) fixing the salary of the district attorney for the eastern district of New York.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes to the calendar.

CHOCTAWHATCHEE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with amendment the bill (S. 3159) granting the consent of Congress to the State road department of the State of Florida to construct and maintain a bridge across the Choctawhatchee River, near Caryville, Fla., approximately 170 feet south of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad bridge, and I submit a report (No. 260) thereon.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment was, in line 3, after the word "That," to strike out "the consent of Congress" and insert "authority," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority is hereby granted to the State road department of the State of Florida, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Choctawhatchee River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, near Caryville, Fla., approximately 170 feet south of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad bridge, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting authority to the State road department of the State of Florida to construct and maintain a bridge across the Choctawhatchee River, near Caryville, Fla., approximately 170 feet south of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad bridge."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NUGENT:

A bill (S. 3217) authorizing and directing the issuance of patent to certain lands to Franklin S. Ault; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico:

A bill (S. 3218) for the relief of Martina Sena, Luis E. Armijo, and Maria Baca De Romero; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 3219) extending the benefits of the general pension laws to the members of the Eighth, Twentieth, Twenty-sixth, Twenty-seventh, Twenty-eighth, Twenty-ninth, Thirtieth, Thirty-first, Thirty-second, and Thirty-third Regiments, the several batteries of Artillery, the several troops of Cavalry, and the several independent companies which comprised the Pennsylvania Volunteer Militia, otherwise known as the "emergency men," who were called into service by the President of the United States of America, officered by United States officers, and sworn into the service of the United States for an indefinite period, the same as if they had been in the service of the United States for a period of 90 days or more; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARRIS:

A bill (S. 3220) for the relief of Janie Beasley; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3221) to construct a public building for a post office at the city of Savannah, Ga.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

EMBARGO ON WHEAT.

Mr. OWEN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 211), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry immediately investigate the reasons for the embargo on wheat and why transportation is not available to move the wheat of Oklahoma, Kansas, Texas, Colorado, and other States, and what steps the Grain Corporation has taken to obtain ships for the movement of such grain.

The said committee is hereby empowered to sit and act at such time and place as it may deem necessary to require, by subpœna, or otherwise, the attendance of witnesses, the production of books, papers, and documents; to employ stenographers at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page. The chairman of the committee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses. Subpœnas for witnesses shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee thereof. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The expense thereof shall be paid from the contingent funds of the Senate on vouchers ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman thereof and approved by the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

FREE ZONES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any further morning business?

Mr. JONES of Washington. On Saturday last the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] referred to the so-called free-zone bill and its reference to the Committee on Commerce. I was absent at that time attending a hearing of the Committee on Commerce on that bill. I desire to read from the RECORD for just a moment as to what then occurred. After referring to different bills which had been referred to different committees, as he thought improperly, the Senator from Pennsylvania said:

Mr. President, without criticizing anyone, but in order to complete the statement that I made a moment ago, I desire to say—and the matter is really hardly important enough perhaps to refer to, but as it is before me I want to do so—that quite an important inquiry concerning free zones in ports of the United States has been conducted by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives. A pamphlet which I hold in my hand contains the information on the subject from the United States Tariff Commission. It is purely a financial and fiscal matter, which is always within the jurisdiction of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives and of the Finance Committee of the Senate; and yet I find Senate bill 2284, introduced by the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of free zones in ports of entry of the United States, and for other purposes, referred, undoubtedly at his request, as it was his bill, to the Committee on Commerce.

I am not in any way questioning the entire propriety of the Senator taking his own bill under his own jurisdiction and conducting the hearings—and hearings are now being conducted—but if it were not the Senator's own bill it would certainly be highly irregular to have the Ways and Means Committee and the Tariff Commission conducting an inquiry at one end of the Capitol and the Committee on Commerce, which has never had any jurisdiction over these questions, conducting a similar inquiry at this end of the Capitol. Under ordinary circumstances the bill should have gone to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. President, this bill was not referred to the Committee on Commerce because I introduced it or because it was my bill. It has not been my practice to prepare bills, introduce them, and have them referred to committees which do not ordinarily have jurisdiction over the subject matter simply to get them before a committee that I think may give favorable consideration to the measure.

I desire merely to call attention to the history of the bills on this subject. I regret that the Senator from Pennsylvania is not present. I had supposed that he would be here. I desire, however, to simply make an explanation about the matter, and then whatever action the Senate may desire to take can, of course, be taken hereafter.

The first bill relating to free zones was introduced nearly two years ago—March 21, 1918—by the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. That bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce. It remained in the Committee on Commerce during the remainder of the Congress, and no question was raised by the Senator from Pennsylvania or any other Senator as to the proper reference of that bill or the improper reference of it, if they considered it had been improperly referred.

Then, over a year afterwards, on May 23, 1919, in the Sixty-sixth Congress, the Senator from Texas reintroduced the bill, and it was again referred to the Committee on Commerce. I had then become chairman of the committee. I examined the bill and found that there were some provisions in it that I preferred to have changed, and I prepared a bill covering the same matter, taking the bill of the Senator from Texas as the basis for it, made the changes that I really thought I should prefer, and then introduced the bill. Because similar bills covering the same subject matter had twice previously been referred to the Committee on Commerce, and because I really thought that the bill related to the commerce of the country, especially its foreign commerce and our shipping commerce—it seemed to me that there was not any financial question involved in it, as it was entirely a proposition looking toward improving the facilities for commerce and promoting the interests of the commerce—I asked that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and that was done on June 23, 1919.

Then, at a later date, those who were specially interested in the proposition thought that they would like to change the bill in some particulars, and they prepared another bill, sent it to me to be introduced and referred to the committee, they having previously asked that a date be set for hearings upon the bill. On October 6 I introduced Senate bill 3170, covering substantially the same subject matter, and had it referred to the Committee on Commerce. That is the history of these measures.

The Senator from Pennsylvania stated that the bill was purely a financial or fiscal measure. I think anyone reading the bill will see that it is not a financial measure; that it is not really a fiscal measure; but that it relates almost solely and exclusively to the commerce of the country, especially the foreign commerce, and the methods of carrying it on. The purpose of the bill is to facilitate our foreign commerce, to facilitate the methods of carrying it on, not in the way of raising duties or lowering duties, or anything of that sort, but making the facilities for carrying on and conducting foreign commerce more simple, less expensive, and in that way to promote its development.

We have no special line of jurisdiction marked out in our rules for the various committees of the Senate. In the other body of Congress there are limitations in express language placed upon the jurisdiction of the different committees. We have in the Senate a Finance Committee, but there is not anything said about what bills shall go to it or anything of the sort. Then, we have an Interstate Commerce Committee, and there is not anything in the rules as to what bills should go to that committee; but its name indicates really its jurisdiction as covering measures relating to commerce among the States. Then, we have a Commerce Committee, but there is no definition of the jurisdiction of that committee except as indicated by its name. When we consider that we have an Interstate Commerce Committee and have also a Commerce Committee, we have a right to assume that the Commerce Committee has jurisdiction of bills relating to and dealing with foreign commerce of the country, and I think it has been the practice to accord to that committee jurisdiction of such measures, embracing proposed legislation relating to shipping, especially to overseas shipping, and coastwise shipping, too, for that matter.

As I have stated, this bill really simplifies the methods of carrying on our foreign commerce. It provides simpler and less expensive facilities for conducting it, and, it seems to me, comes very clearly within the jurisdiction of the Commerce Committee.

I do not know what particular reasons may be assigned for its going to the Finance Committee of the Senate. If it is on the ground that it touches the tariff or affects the revenue, then the proper course would be to strike the bill from the files of the Senate rather than to take it from one committee and refer it to another, because under the Constitution all bills affecting the revenue must originate in the House of Representatives; and if this is a bill affecting the revenue, then not only should it be taken away from the Commerce Committee, but it should be stricken from the files of the Senate, as being in violation of the provision of the Constitution to which I have referred.

The Chair suggested that he would entertain a motion to discharge the Committee on Commerce, and the Senator from Pennsylvania then said:

I would not do that under the circumstances, because it is the Senator's own bill, and he has already commenced hearings. I shall be satisfied to call the attention of the Senate to the irregularity of the proceeding in the hope that it will not occur too frequently in the future.

The Committee on Commerce was holding hearings on this measure at that time—that was the reason I was not on the floor of the Senate—but I wish to say that if this bill does not properly belong to the Committee on Commerce that committee does not desire to consider it. We have an abundance of work to do in connection with measures which are clearly within the jurisdiction of the committee; we have an abundance of work in connection with measures as to which no question can be raised concerning our jurisdiction. The bill was not sent to the Committee on Commerce simply for the purpose of obtaining jurisdiction of it; it was sent there because it was believed that there is where it belongs. I still think that that is where it belongs, unless it should be held that it is a bill affecting the revenue, and if that contention is sound then it should be stricken from the files.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] said:

Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] were in the Chamber, I would ask that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2284) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of free zones in ports of entry in the United States, and for other purposes, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance. I do not wish to make that request in the absence of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah thinks that the bill does not properly belong to the Committee on Commerce, I am perfectly willing that the matter should be submitted to the Senate; at any rate, I should like to know the grounds for the contention that it does not come within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce. I find from the Journal that apparently the motion was not in fact entered to discharge the Committee on Commerce; but I hope that if there are Senators who think that the bill should not be before the Committee on Commerce they will not hesitate for a moment about making a motion and letting the Senate pass upon the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it seems to me the Senator from Washington takes the sound and correct view of this matter. The bill referred to by him is not a revenue-raising measure, nor does it affect the tariff at all. If the point raised against the bill is based upon that idea, as the Senator from Washington has said, then the bill should have originated in the House and ought not to be here at all. The Committee on Commerce has entertained jurisdiction of it, and it seems to me the jurisdiction of that committee extends to every feature of this bill.

It is not a tariff measure at all. In the hearings before the Commerce Committee those in favor of high protection have advocated the bill and some who are in favor of a tariff for revenue only have advocated the bill; and they all agree that it is not a measure affecting the tariff, but is simply a measure to promote foreign commerce, which is a subject clearly within the jurisdiction of the Commerce Committee.

As the Senator from Washington has said, that committee takes jurisdiction of shipping, both coastwise and foreign; it has handled all such legislation, and, in addition to that, what is known as the trading-with-the-enemy act, establishing an alien enemy property custodian for property of that description, was handled entirely by that committee. Every measure affecting commerce and designed to promote foreign commerce, especially overseas commerce, has been handled by that committee. I think the bill is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Commerce Committee, and that the Finance Committee has really no function to perform in reference to it. It is not a tariff measure. It is not a revenue measure. It does not possess any of the features involved in that, because, as I have said, in the hearings before us people who are in favor of high protection favored this bill; people who are against high protection favored the bill; and they all concede that it is not a question of protection or of free trade or anything of that sort that is involved in this measure. It is purely a measure intended to promote foreign commerce, and that is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Commerce Committee. I think the bill ought to stay there and the hearings ought to be continued.

CLASSIFICATION OF SALARIES.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, on last Friday the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] had some articles from the local papers read into the RECORD, and a discussion of those articles ensued, consuming quite a little of the time of the Senate, which related to the Joint Commission on the Reclassification of Salaries of Federal Employees.

I was not present on Friday when the Senator from Utah produced these articles and commented on them, else I think I could at that time have made a statement which would have satisfied the Senator from Utah, as well as other Senators who seem to have been interested in the matter. I believe, however, that it is advisable for me to make some statement at this time, not in defense of the Joint Commission on the Reclassification of Salaries, but that Senators may have some definite information and not be directed in channels which are not warranted by the situation.

The Senator from Utah, in opening his statement, said:

I now desire to read certain extracts from articles which of late have appeared in some of the local newspapers, and particularly to call the attention of the members of that commission to them and ask them whether or not the articles are inspired.

I also desire that the Senate shall understand that there is no power granted to the joint commission to pursue the policy which these articles state is to be pursued under the direction and power of the commission.

Mr. President, from this statement one would infer that some very important course of action had been taken by the commission which was in violation of its authority under the law, and whereby the commission was deviating from a correct policy. I have read these articles with much care since my attention was called to them, as well as the colloquy which took place after they were read. I have endeavored to discover what it was that would call for such a serious inquiry and for information bearing upon such an important question.

During the colloquy, particularly in response to a question by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], the impression was left that this commission was intending to establish a training school. That idea was commented on also by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and anyone reading the colloquy which took place at that time certainly would gain the impression that this Joint Commission on the Reclassification of Salaries were intending to establish a training school and to pay the professors and teachers out of the money appropriated for the work of the commission.

Mr. President, there is not only no substance to any such claim, but, if I am able to read these newspaper articles correctly, there is no foundation in the articles themselves for any such assumption. The articles themselves do not say that the commission is going to establish a school, and, so far as I know, these articles convey nothing but a little bit of information which is of value, doubtless, to the many thousands of employees of the Government in the District of Columbia. If I am able to read the articles aright, there is nothing more stated than that the commission has appointed an advisory committee, among other advisory committees, for the purpose of considering various questions of employment policy, and that this question of the establishment of a training school is merely one subject to be considered by the advisory committee. There is no thought in the minds of the commission and, I submit, no intimation in these articles which would justify any conclusion that the commission is going ahead to establish a training school.

There are various other matters referred to by the Senator from Utah which, it seems to me, convey an impression which ought not to prevail here in the Senate about this commission. I call attention further to another statement by the Senator from Utah. At the end of one of these articles—the one in the Post, I believe—is found this statement:

The national federation is bending every effort to make sure that the jurisdiction of the commission, at present limited to the District, will be extended to cover all employees of the Government throughout the country.

And the Senator from Utah says:

Where is the authority for such a proposition?

Well, now, Mr. President, what was the proposition? Nothing except a statement that the representatives of Federal employees were seeking to have the jurisdiction of the commission extended to the employees throughout the country, whereas at the present time the jurisdiction is confined to the employees in the District of Columbia. What is there involving the question of authority? The commission has done nothing about it. Nobody else has done anything about it except some outside people who really feel that the work of this commission should be extended; but the thought that it should be extended, when presented to me, was not approved, for the reason that I wanted and the other members of the commission wanted to have the work in the District of Columbia first concluded, so that the Senate, and the commission as well, and the country, should know the value of the work of the commission.

In other words, we did not want to extend our jurisdiction throughout the country, but we were importuned to ask that it be done.

But what has this to do with the question of authority? It is a statement of the newspapers as to what somebody else is doing; but, somehow or other, it seems that the Senator from Utah rather felt that the commission was trying to do something in the matter, although there is nothing in the article which would warrant such an inference.

Then, after reading the authority which created the commission, the Senator from Utah says:

Mr. President, we find, if these reports are true, Mr. Luther C. Steward—and every Senator knows who he is—directing the policies of this commission which was created by Congress; and, not only that, but making arrangements for the purpose of opening a school to teach the employees of the Government how to carry on the work which the Government has employed them to do and for which it is paying them.

Mr. President, it seems to me that that would be considered by some people at least as a reflection upon the entire commission, not because the commission is willing at all times to accept advice and suggestions from anyone but because it seems to leave the inference that some outsider is directing the policy of the commission; and, by the way, there is no such inference in these newspaper articles. The only statement that is made in these newspaper articles in regard to Mr. Steward is that he, as one of the representatives of the Federal employees in the District of Columbia, has been appointed a member of an advisory committee of nine, and the Senator says, "We all know who Mr. Steward is." I suppose we do, and I for one want to say here that I do not know of anybody in the District of Columbia who is more familiar with the conditions of the employees in this District, who has studied the question of wages and conditions of employment more than Mr. Steward; and if we were to close our ears to his suggestions we would not be performing our duty. As I view it, it is the duty of this commission to get information and to get assistance from whatever source it can; and I submit that we are not only justified in calling on Mr. Steward for whatever assistance he may render, but we would be derelict in our duty if we did not do it.

The Senator from Utah also refers to the appropriations which have been made for this commission. He says we first got $25,000; that then we came asking for $125,000 more; and finally another $65,000 was granted. Mr. President, the situation is simply this: When the commission was created $25,000 was appropriated. But the members of the Appropriations Committee themselves said they knew after the commission was formed that that would not be enough; that it was only for the purpose of getting something started; and that they expected the commission to come to Congress for an additional appropriation. That the commission did. Some of the members of the commission thought they ought to have $125,000, and the committee finally recommended an appropriation not of $65,000 additional but $50,000 additional, making a total appropriation of $75,000.

The reason why there was this difference of opinion among the members of the commission as to the amount that would be required is very easily understood. Under the joint resolution nobody expected that the entire work of the commission would be done for that amount of money, and so provision was made in the resolution for requiring the heads of the departments to detail to the work of the commission such employees as the commission might request. So it was simply a question of how many people we should take out of the departments and use in this work or how many should be employed from the outside. So far as the Government is concerned, it makes no material difference, because the Government pays the salaries of these people anyhow.

I for one rather felt that we ought to go outside the Federal employees and get more help than we did. We have secured very valuable people who have been making a study of this identical proposition. I want to state to the Senate now that this work of reclassification is a business in itself; it is a profession in itself, and there are experts who have been devoting years of their lives to this particular work. We have employed some of those to assist us, and we have gathered in additional help from the employees of the various departments. So it makes no material difference whether we have the work done by some one already in the Government service or employ some one from the outside. The work means so much labor, and it must be paid for by the Government, whether it is done by those in the present employ of the Government or whether they are newly employed from the outside.

But, in all seriousness, Mr. President, in regard to the innuendo which is carried in the Senator's remarks that the commission is seeking from time to time to augment the work which it has been delegated to carry on, I wish to say that there never has been a commission, I believe, which has exerted itself more earnestly in the attempt to carry out the program as outlined in the joint resolution creating it than this commission. The commission was created by a joint resolution of Congress, approved March 1, 1919. On the 3d of March the commission organized, and it has been at work ever since. By the terms of the joint resolution its report is to be forthcoming by the 20th of January next. The commission is working to that end, and unless some unforeseen obstacle should arise, I have not any present doubt but that the commission will be able to complete its labors by that time, and within the appropriation which has been made.

Reference has been made, Mr. President, to certain members of the commission. If I mistake not, on a previous occasion the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] took occasion to refer to the fact that this commission was created for the purpose of providing for some "lame ducks" of the House; that is to say, Members of the last Congress who were not reelected to the present Congress. As to the commission seeking to continue its labors, and positions upon the commission being sought, for the entire commission I want to disclaim any such purpose or intent. I want to say also that not a member of the commission, either from the House or from the Senate, had anything to do with the joint resolution which created the commission, or has anything to do with seeking a position upon the commission. As I understand, in the original joint resolution provision was made that the entire membership of the commission should be appointed from those who should be Members of the present Congress. When it came over to the Senate, as I understand it, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] proposed to amend the joint resolution in the committee, and it was amended, so that Members of the last Congress might become members of the commission. The three members of the commission on the part of the House were named from those who are not Members of the present Congress, and it was provided that their salaries should be the same as if they were Members of Congress. I want to congratulate the Senator from Washington for his foresight in suggesting that amendment. From actual experience I am convinced that it is one of the best features of the joint resolution.

The work of this commission requires daily and constant attention on the part of its members, and the three members appointed by the Speaker of the House—Mr. Keating, Mr. Hamlin, and Mr. Cooper—have devoted practically all their time to the work of the commission since it was organized. I do not usually throw bouquets at anyone, but I want to say that those three men have given as intelligent, as faithful, and as efficient service to the work of the commission as any three men whom you can imagine. I do not know of any three men who could have been selected who would have performed this service any better than they have done, and I think it was an extremely wise provision that at least three members of the commission should not be called to the work of the present Congress.

The three Senators on the commission are Members of the present Congress, and they devote such time as they can to the work; and a good deal of time is being devoted by the Senate Members to the work; but necessarily the detailed supervision must be put upon somebody who can be in constant attendance.

A statement was also made during the discussion to the effect that Mr. Keating had been engaged to superintend the lobbying in regard to the Plumb bill, and reference was made to his salary as superintendent or manager of that enterprise. Mr. Keating has not received a dollar of compensation for any work of that sort, it has not interfered with his work on this commission in the slightest, and whatever attention he may give to that matter is given out of office hours or in the evenings. I want to say also that the evenings are not given to it. Mr. Keating, Mr. Hamlin, Mr. Cooper, and other members of the commission meet at night and go over this work, as do many of the various employees.

The commission has brought to its assistance men throughout the country of recognized ability in this direction. Richard H. Dana, president of the National Civil Service Reform League; Dr. Beard, of the board of research of New York; and others whom I might name have been called upon. Wherever we have taken up any subject it has been done with the idea in mind that when anything is finally agreed upon there will have to be a reason given for it.

I want to say further that the work of the commission is not behind closed doors. There is nobody imposing any ideas upon the commission, but the commission is seeking to gather in the ideas from all sources, and wherever any important factor is involved we have sought to enlist the services of representatives of the employees, representatives of the administration, and representatives of the citizens of the country at large; and whatever is done will be done with information from these various sources at hand.

I know, Mr. President, that some criticism has been made that we have been calling upon the employees to give their version of the situation. We have not only gotten their versions, their statements of fact, but we have statements of fact from the various heads of the departments and the various chiefs of bureaus. We have gotten information from all those sources, and I will state the reason for it. You have here in the District of Columbia, coming under the jurisdiction of this commission, practically 108,000 employees, who will be affected by the work of the commission.

Do you want to close the door to the information which they can give? When you begin to cast aspersions upon the work of Mr. Steward, who is one of the representatives of the employees, I want to ask you if you want to close your doors to testimony from that source? Do you not want to get the point of view of the men and women who do the work for the Government here in the city of Washington? Do you not want to hear from them? It is their lives that are vitally concerned in this work.

But it is also the duty of the Government and of this commission to take into consideration the situation outside of the service, to try to find out how the pay for service there compares with the pay here. This commission, if I may say it, has tried to bring to its assistance all these various elements, and I want to compliment and to thank the employees of Washington, the supervising officials, the heads of departments, and the various outside citizens who have lent their aid, for the very efficient work which they have been performing. We expect to bring in a report. Whether a training school shall be established or not, it is not for the commission to decide; but we want to present all these questions to Congress so that Congress may do the right thing both for the employees and for the country at large.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if it had not been for one or two statements made by the Senator from New Mexico, I would not ask a moment's time of the Senate. In the first place, I am very glad to learn that the commission over which the Senator has the honor of presiding, the Reclassification Commission, has not authorized the statements that were published in the papers and read by me last Friday, and has no thought of carrying them out.

I want the Senator from New Mexico to know that at no time have I ever said that the commission did intend to carry out the program as contained in those newspaper articles. I did say this:

> I now desire to read certain extracts from articles which of late have appeared in some of the local newspapers, and particularly to call the attention of the members of that commission to them and ask them whether or not the articles are inspired.

Nowhere in my statement did I say anything otherwise, but I based all that I said upon the proposition "if the newspaper articles were true," and the Senator knows it if he has read my remarks.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask the Senator to point out any statement in the articles themselves which justify the thought that the commission, at the expense of the funds provided or otherwise, intended to establish a training school.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from New Mexico knows as well as other Senators know that these newspaper articles were prepared for the papers. The last paragraph in the article in the Star reads as follows:

> The National Federation is bending every effort to make sure that the jurisdiction of the commission, at present limited to the District, will be extended to cover all employees of the Government throughout the country.

The joint resolution gave the commission no authority for that. I want to say further, Mr. President, that in this article it states that—

> Retirement plans will be gone over by the committee, and the results of its deliberations laid before the members of the Reclassification Commission for their consideration. It is out of all these deliberations that all the final policies of the reclassificationists, as they will be placed before Congress, will grow.

I do not believe the commission ever authorized any subcommittee of the commission to go into any question that is not authorized by the joint resolution creating the commission.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to ask the Senator what there is in that last paragraph of the newspaper article which seems to indicate that the commission attempted to do anything of the kind?

Mr. SMOOT. Whoever wrote this article, and I think it was inspired and perhaps written by Mr. Steward, knew enough about it to know that—

> Three representatives of the organized Government employees have been appointed by the Joint Congressional Commission on Classification of the Civil Service to serve on an advisory committee on wages. They are Luther C. Steward, president of the National Federation of Federal Employees; W. Carson Ryan, jr., president of Federal Employees' Union No 2; and Miss Ethel Smith, executive secretary of the Washington committee of the National Women's Trade Union League, with which local and national organizations of the Federal employees are affiliated.
>
> The chairman of the advisory committee is Courtney W. Hamlin, of the Reclassification Commission, and other members or representatives of two groups, as follows:

Then it goes on and names them all. I have not any doubt that that information came from the commission. It could not have come from any other source. Their appointment was for a specific purpose, and a reading of the article shows what I have stated.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The article states that the National Federation is bending every effort to make sure that the jurisdiction of the commission will be extended.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and connected with the appointment of these three people by the commission for the purpose of considering the question as to what to recommend to the commission. That is what the article says.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But the newspaper article does not say that the commission or anybody on its behalf is seeking to have its jurisdiction extended.

Mr. SMOOT. No; and in my opening statement here I simply said that I called the attention of the commission to the article, and I ought to have done so, and any other Senator who was interested in the question ought to have done it, because I say to the Senator now that if the program is carried out as stated in the newspaper articles and Congress appropriates money that will be demanded we will have no end to the life of the commission.

I have not a word of complaint about the Senator, nor have I a word of complaint as to the labors the commission have performed under the authority granted it. That is not what I am complaining of. I wanted to know whether the newspaper report was true and whether the commission had entered into any arrangement that a school should be established in the different departments here in order to educate the employees of the Government to do their work. I say that no Senator can read the article in the Star without drawing the conclusion that that is what is going to happen if Mr. Luther C. Steward can accomplish it.

Not only that, but I say to the Senator from New Mexico that I heard of this very program before it appeared in the paper, but I did not believe that it would be made public so quickly—at least, before the commission acted upon it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like again to ask the Senator to read anything in either one of those newspaper articles which intimates that the commission intends to establish a training school.

Mr. SMOOT. I had better read the article and then let the Senator himself judge whether it does or not. I do not want him to take my word for it. This is what appeared in the newspaper:

> Training of new Government employees for the work they have to do for Uncle Sam will be one of the big matters to be passed upon by the advisory committee on employment policies which is in process of selection to-day by the Joint Congressional Commission on Reclassification of Salaries in the District.
>
> "Training of new Government employees for the work!"

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCORMICK in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Utah how long his discussion of this matter will last?

Mr. SMOOT. If I am not interrupted, I shall conclude in a very few moments.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am very anxious to proceed to the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. So am I, I will say to the Senator, and therefore I am not going to take the time I should like to occupy.

In my remarks in the Senate last Friday I made this statement:

> Mr. President, we find, if these reports are true, Mr. Luther C. Steward—and every Senator knows who he is—directing the policies of this commission which was created by Congress; and, not only that, but making arrangements for the purpose of opening a school to teach the employees of the Government how to carry on the work which the Government has employed them to do and for which it is paying them.

That is the statement I made, and that is the conclusion that I or anyone else reading the article would reach.

I simply want to say to the Senator from New Mexico that he is mistaken when he says that the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] offered the amendment changing the appointment so as to include the three ex-Members of Congress. I remember very well when the Senator from Washington offered an amendment to the bill that was introduced by former Senator Weeks creating a commission; but the Senator from New Mexico is mistaken in that respect, and I want to tell him another thing about which he is mistaken.

I was a member of the subcommittee which recommended the first appropriation of $25,000. I will tell the Senator now that I knew every Member who was appointed from the House, and that was even before the appropriation was made. The Senator is mistaken when he says that nobody knew who was going to be appointed.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I did not make that statement.

Mr. SMOOT. I will let the Senator repeat the statement then that he did make.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I simply said that the members of the commission, I am authoritatively advised, had no part in the passage of the joint resolution creating the commission and never sought the positions which were finally given them.

Mr. SMOOT. I say that the Senator is mistaken, and I say it because I know it. The Senator says Mr. Keating is giving all his time to the commission. If that is the case, why is he employed as an attorney to do outside work? No contradiction has ever been made of the statement that I put in the RECORD when it was first announced that he was employed as an attorney for certain work by labor organizations. I objected at the time, not that he was employed as an attorney, but because of the fact that the commission created by Congress appointed Mr. Keating as a member of the commission, paid him a salary of $7,500 a year, and it was his duty, as I thought, to give his time to the business for which the Government of the United States paid him and for which he was appointed.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. SMOOT. If it will not take too much time, I will yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Will the Senator give us any information that he may have regarding those alleged activities of Mr. Keating? Does the Senator believe Mr. Keating is neglecting his duties on the commission?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not in a position to state that he has neglected his duties as a member of the commission, but I do say that a man appointed to such a position, with the Government paying him the same salary that a man receives who is serving as a Senator or Representative, can not accept a position outside, such as he did accept, and give his time and his service to the persons who have employed him if he gives the time he ought to give as a member of the commission to which he was appointed. I do know that, Mr. President.

Close the doors to the employees of the Government? Why, no. No one ever suggested such a thing, and the Senator knows that there is not a Government employee in the District who has not had a chance to tell the commission just what work he was doing and just what he was employed to do and to give all the information that the questionnaire which was sent to every employee in the District asked for.

I was delighted when I heard that every employee of the departments in the District would have an opportunity to say just what he or she was called upon to do. I should like to see every one of those answers; I want them classified; and I then desire that there shall be a thorough examination of them, in order to ascertain if they correspond with what the heads of the departments of our Government say those employees are doing.

Let me tell the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] that when that time comes a great deal of the duplication work that is going on in the departments will cease, for there will not be in the future appropriations made for such work. The Senator knows that there is duplication of work in the departments; any Senator who has given any time to the study of the question knows it; and the quicker it is rooted out the better it will be for the Treasury of the United States. I know that the people of the United States, burdened as they are and will be for the next generation with heavy taxation, will call upon us to see that unnecessary salaries are not paid, even though they are proposed to be paid, to employees in the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, I know that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] wants the floor, and I am not going to take any more time upon this question; but I desire to say that every word I uttered on last Friday in reference to this matter was for the best interest of our Government. I called attention to the article, and no honest man can read it but will know that it was inspired by some one close to the commission. I believe, Mr. President, that this publicity will have the effect of checking much of the work that was under way in order that this plan mapped out in the article should be carried to a successful conclusion.

REFERENCE OF "FREE-ZONE" BILL.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] is now here, and I desire to direct his attention to the fact that I called the attention of the Senate a few moments ago to what occurred on Saturday in reference to the free-zone or free-port bill. Without going over what I have previously stated, I merely wish to say that I gave the history of the bill and showed that in the last Congress the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] introduced a free-port bill, so called, and it was referred to the Committee on Commerce; that no question was raised with reference to the jurisdiction of the committee over that bill; that again—in May, I think it was, of this year—he reintroduced the bill and had it referred to the Committee on Commerce; that when I examined the measure I thought that there should be some changes in it, and I prepared a bill covering those changes, and that as the original bill had been referred to the Committee on Commerce, and as I believed from the terms of the bill it should go to that committee, I had the bill introduced by me so referred.

I wish to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I do not want any Senator to hesitate about questioning the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce with reference to the free-zone bill if he does not think it belongs there. That committee has all it can do with measures that are clearly within its jurisdiction. I believed when I introduced this bill and had it referred to that committee that it was within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce; I still think so. As I stated awhile ago, it has not been my practice to prepare bills and introduce them and have them referred to committees which would have jurisdiction over them in order to get them considered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator from Washington which Senate bill his committee has under consideration? I notice that on June 27 the Senator from Washington introduced Senate bill 2288. That was the bill to which the Senator from Pennsylvania referred last Saturday. I understand that there is also Senate bill 3170, which was introduced by the Senator upon the same subject. Which bill has the Senator's committee under consideration?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The committee has under consideration all of the bills covering the subject matter, but is having the hearings especially on Senate bill 3170, because that is the bill the friends of the proposition finally prepared. That bill, as the Senator will notice, is the bill which was introduced by me by request a few days ago.

Mr. SMOOT. I will procure a copy of Senate bill 3170, as I have not one, though I have a copy of Senate bill 2288.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Well, the bills are substantially the same, except that Senate bill 3170 has a provision in it that those who are interested in it do not really desire to have retained in the bill; but they did not indicate that to me when they sent the bill to me to be introduced. I introduced it for them. The next day they came up and said they wanted a great part of section 3 stricken out, but I did not care to reintroduce the bill in order to make that change. The bill, however, was reintroduced in the other House in amended form. The committee is considering the proposition of free zones, and has before it not only Senate bill 3170 but also Senate bill 556, which was introduced by the Senator from Texas, and Senate bill 2288, to which the Senator from Utah has referred.

If the Senator from Pennsylvania thinks that the bills should not be considered by the Committee on Commerce or that committee has not jurisdiction of them, I hope the Senate will be called upon to pass on the question. As I suggested when the Senator was not here, if this bill affects the revenue, and that is the reason the Senator thinks it ought to go to the Finance Committee, then the bill should be stricken from the files of the Senate entirely, because the Constitution provides that bills affecting the revenue must originate in the House. I do not know, however, the particular grounds the Senator had in mind when he raised the objection.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I rose on Saturday merely to call the attention of the Presiding Officer and of the Senate to a careless practice which has grown up of referring bills undoubtedly belonging to one of the leading committees to some other committee. The practice arises in two ways: A Senator has a bill which he wishes, very naturally, to keep under his personal supervision, and he has the bill referred to some committee of which he is a member, notwithstanding the fact that it very evidently belongs to some other committee. I have known bills that beyond any question belonged to the Committee on Commerce being referred to some committee such as the Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, because the Senator introducing the bill happened to be a member of that important committee. While that comparison may seem ridiculous, it is a fact that bills are often referred without any propriety or reason, simply at the whim of the Senators who happen to introduce them; or it occasionally happens that the lobby or those back of a bill like the personnel of one committee rather than another and urge the reference of the measure in which they are interested to the committee of their fancy.

While I have the highest respect for the personnel of the Committee on Commerce and know it is constituted of very able Senators both on the majority and the minority side, most of whom are sound in their economic views, so far as the majority are concerned, I know that a great many exporters wanted this legislation referred to the Committee on Commerce. But be that as it may, I am not disposed to get into a controversy over it. I only wanted to call attention to the abuse.

My attention was directed to it by the reference of the reciprocity repeal bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations—a most gross violation of parliamentary propriety and procedure. Measures affecting that question have always gone to the Finance Committee. When the original reciprocity bill was introduced, during the second half of the Taft administration, it was referred to that committee, and the committee held hearings, extending over a period of months, participated in by representatives of the State granges from all over the United States, and yet, through the gross carelessness of some one at the desk, the reciprocity repeal bill was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. As my attention happened to have been called to similar omissions and miscarriages of reference, I thought it my duty to call the matter to the attention of the Senate and of the Chair.

There are other important instances where not only the Finance Committee but other committees have been ignored to the serious detriment of the public service, because, Mr. President, when a committee has spent 10 or perhaps 20 years in considering all the issues and ramifications of a certain character of legislation it is certainly not in the interest of efficiency and effective legislation to refer some bill embodying similar principles to a committee that has never given any consideration whatever to the subject. I have two or three quite important bills in my mind to which I intend to call the attention of the Senate later which have been improperly referred; but before doing so I wish to proceed in an amicable and just way and to consult the Senators who introduced the measures and the chairmen of the committees to which they were referred.

So far as the bill referred to by the Senator from Washington is concerned, measures affecting the question of free ports have from time immemorial been referred to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House. If in the last Congress, which was under the control of the now minority party, bills of that character were irregularly referred and if the example was followed in this Congress, that does not excuse or condone what was clearly either a mistake or an irregularity.

This is not a new question before the American Congress; it has been before us every year or so during the 24 years I have been a Member of the body. The Senate has——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that some 20 or 25 minutes ago, when the Senator was not in the Chamber, I felt constrained to rise and suggest that this is Calendar Monday and quite a number of us are interested in measures upon the calendar. I do not like to insist upon the regular order this morning, but I hope the Senator will recognize that he is speaking by unanimous consent.

Mr. PENROSE. I am pretty nearly through; I am rising to a question of privilege; I do not detain the Senate very often with any remarks of mine, and so I think I will proceed until I am through.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator, of course, is at liberty to do so——

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If he is speaking to a question of personal privilege. I did not understand that he rose to speak to such a question.

Mr. PENROSE. It is a question of privilege under the rules.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, if the Senator does not take the suggestion in the kindly spirit I made it, I will rely upon my right to call for the regular order.

Mr. PENROSE. I shall be through in a minute, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well; I shall be glad to indulge the Senator for a few minutes, if he cares to go on.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, as I was saying, this is not a new question. It has been before the Congress for a generation. Legislation of the character proposed has generally been supported by the importers, and opposed by manufacturers and those believing in the policy of protection. The question is an ancient one, and I do not know that the Committee on Commerce has ever, until within the last few months, devoted any consideration to it or to the principle involved, or that it knows anything about it. I was on the Committee on Commerce for some 10 years and I never heard of any such question discussed before that committee.

As the chairman of the committee has said, they have all they can attend to without hunting trouble. So has the Finance Committee, and I do not intend at this time, nor at any other time, to ask to have the reference of this bill changed. The Commerce Committee can go on, so far as I am concerned, with all the hearings they want on this measure, and doubtless the more hearings they have, the more they will know, which is desirable. As a matter of fact—and I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this for his information—I have grave doubts as to whether the bill is constitutional. I want to call his attention to, and have him consider when he proceeds with this entertaining occupation of considering free ports, paragraph 6 of section 9 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, if his attention has not already been called to it, which reads as follows:

No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another: nor shall vessels bound to, or from, one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another.

I am not going to discuss the constitutional point involved in this paragraph, but it looks to me as though it was of sufficient force to render the whole bill impossible and unconstitutional; and from the information I have received lately, the bill is not likely to get very far in the House of Representatives or in the Ways and Means Committee. So I am not going to say anything further than to record my dissent, and express the hope that there will be greater logic and regularity followed in the future in the reference of bills in this body.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I agree with what the Senator has said with regard to the reference of bills, although I do not believe that anyone at the desk is responsible for these references. My observation has been that Senators usually designate where they want bills to go, and the clerks at the desk either follow that suggestion or else the Presiding Officer announces the committee to which the bill should be referred. As I said, however, this bill was not referred in order to give the committee jurisdiction; and I should like myself, if the Senator thinks it is an irregularity, to have it go there, or anything of that sort, to have him ask that it be referred to some other committee. It would not offend me in the least.

Mr. PENROSE. I appreciate the Senator's courtesy, Mr. President, but I have already stated that I do not intend to ask that, and am entirely satisfied to have the Committee on Commerce proceed with the hearings on the bill, particularly as I think the bill has little or no show of passage.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to assure the Senator that every feature of the bill will have consideration if it is left to the Commerce Committee, if the Senate thinks that is the proper place for it. The constitutional provisions will be considered, I think, probably as fully there as they would be in the Finance Committee. The clause of the Constitution to which the Senator refers I have read several times and am familiar with it, and it will be taken into consideration in the consideration of this measure. But if the Senator from Pennsylvania, or any member of his committee or any Member of the Senate, thinks that this bill is improperly before the Commerce Committee, I should be glad if they would make the motion and ask that it be referred to the committee which they think should properly have jurisdiction of it.

AIR SERVICE.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I offer an amendment to House bill 9205, the first deficiency appropriation bill, and I shall follow the reading of the amendment with a somewhat unusual request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

On page 11, after line 23, insert the following:

"For the activities of the Air Service of the Army during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the sum of $15,681,350 is hereby made available from the unexpended balance of funds appropriated for the fiscal year 1918 by the act approved July 24, 1917, entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Signal Corps of the Army and to purchase, maintain, manufacture, repair, and operate airships and to make appropriations therefor, and for other purposes,' and of the funds appropriated for the Air Service for the fiscal year 1919, by the act approved July 9, 1918, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.'"

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am not entirely certain as to the parliamentary procedure which would be proper in this case. Suffice it to say, in explanation—it will take me but a sentence or two—that the War Department sent a request to the Committee on Appropriations, which now has under consideration a deficiency bill, to include in that bill an appropriation for the purchase of airplanes. Such an estimate was not a deficiency estimate, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations very properly, I believe, insisted that the Committee on Military Affairs should take some jurisdiction over that request. The Committee on Military Affairs, therefore, requested the Secretary of War and the appropriate officers of the Aviation Department of the Army to come before the commitee and explain to them how it was that $15,000,000 was requested for the purchase or the building of airplanes, which in no sense constituted a deficiency item. There is no bill before the Committee on Military Affairs to-day for this purpose; but the committee, after listening to the arguments in favor of the request made originally to the Appropriations Committee, instructed me, as its chairman, to present this amendment to the Senate, the amendment being applicable to the deficiency bill now resting in the Appropriations Committee.

I therefore, by the direction of the Military Affairs Commitee, offer this amendment, and I am instructed by them to state that it constitutes a report from the Committee on Military Affairs upon this question, and then to request that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

In other words, Mr. President, I report this amendment from the Committee on Military Affairs. That would place it upon the calendar; and I then ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York requests that the amendment just reported by the Committee on Military Affairs be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not want it to go on the calendar?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. Just to go to the committee?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has to go on the calendar momentarily, as a report, but I ask that it be immediately referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SMOOT. The proper way is just to report it, and ask that it go to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I merely want it noted in the RECORD that it is the equivalent of a committee report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ISSUANCE OF SECURITIES.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, Senate joint resolution 88, being a joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to supervise the issuance of securities, and for other purposes," was reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency and undertakes to amend the bill which was enacted in the last Congress, having been reported from the Finance Committee, providing for a corporation having a capital of $1,000,000,000 for certain purposes. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will remember it very well.

Mr. President, this is an amendment to a bill which was acted on by the Finance Committee in the last Congress, and also by the Ways and Means Committee. Many hearings were held by the Ways and Means Committee and by the Finance Committee. The Secretary of the Treasury and one if his assistants, Mr. Leffingwell, came before both committees and had prolonged consultations with them. Yet, notwithstanding that extraordinary familiarity and experience which the Finance Committee has with this extraordinarily important piece of legislation, it goes to the Committee on Banking and Currency, which never heard of the measure and does not know anything about it, and then is reported out to the Senate without, I believe, a quorum present. I am a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I admit that I was not there. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is a member of that committee, and I do not recall whether he was there or not; but I feel very safe in asserting that no quorum was present when this joint resolution, involving a billion dollars, was reported out of the committee.

I therefore move that the joint resolution be taken from the calendar and referred to the Committee on Finance for further examination and investigation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just one word before that is done. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the title of the joint resolution is wrong. The title of the joint resolution is:

Joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to supervise issuance of securities, and for other purposes."

That is not the name of the act at all. The act is the one to which the Senator has just referred, and was considered by the Finance Committee; and not only was Mr. Leffingwell there, but the Secretary of the Treasury himself appeared there.

Mr. PENROSE. For several days the committee met to study this very important question.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I remember attending a session of the Committee on Banking and Currency when this matter was considered there. I never understood that it was a matter which the Finance Committee at any time had had before it. In the absence of the chairman of that committee, I should dislike to see this action taken.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not think there will be any trouble with the chairman of the committee. I know the chairman so well that, while I believe he is out of town, I will answer for him.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not see what is to be gained by that, unless the Senator from Pennsylvania is opposed to the joint resolution.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I want to say that, although I am a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I may say that I have given this joint resolution some consideration, I have always believed that it was a matter which should go to the Committee on Finance. I am sure the matter was considered by that committee when it was first enacted into law.

Mr. PENROSE. For several days.

Mr. GRONNA. I was the one, I think, who opposed the passage of this joint resolution under a unanimous-consent request; and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], I know, has refused to let the joint resolution go through. It is a matter of tremendous importance, and it should not be passed until it has had further consideration. I am very glad to have it referred to the Committee on Finance, although I am a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. FLETCHER. What is the number of the joint resolution on the calendar?

Mr. PENROSE. One hundred and eighty-seven. Certainly no Member of the Senate can object to having a committee admitted to be expert on this question reexamine the bill. I do not see how anyone can object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that Senate joint resolution 88 be taken from the calendar and referred to the Committee on Finance. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is closed, and the calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

The first business on the calendar was the resolution (S. Res. 76) defining a peace treaty which shall assure to the people of the United States the attainment of the ends for which they entered the war, and declaring the policy of our Government to meet fully obligations to ourselves and to the world.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 529) for the relief of the heirs of Adam and Noah Brown was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 600) for the relief of the heirs of Mrs. Susan A. Nicholas was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1223) for the relief of the owner of the steamer Mayflower and for the relief of passengers on board said steamer was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

EMMA H. RIDLEY.

The bill (S. 174) for the relief of Emma H. Ridley was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

Mr. CALDER. I hope there will be no objection to this bill. It is exactly the same as one passed by the Senate at the last session of Congress. The bill proposes to appropriate one year's salary for the widow of a doctor who died under extraordinary circumstances while attending the sick at the hospital on the Isthmus of Panama during an epidemic of typhoid fever. He really gave up his life for his country. By an act which I have in my hand, approved June 22, 1914, of almost the same character, we gave the family of another doctor two years' pay. This is a very meritorious measure and ought to pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1722) for the relief of Watson B. Dickerman, administrator of the estate of Charles Backman, deceased, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1369) to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 168) to create a commission to investigate and report to Congress a plan on the questions involved in the financing of house construction and home owners and Federal aid therefor was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2224) to incorporate the Recreation Association of America was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1660) to provide a division of tuberculosis in, and an advisory council for, the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1273) to prohibit intoxicating liquors and prostitution within the Canal Zone, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is not present, but on two or three occasions when this bill has been reached on the calendar he has asked that it go over. He did not want to have it stricken from the calendar. He stated that the same provision is already in a bill that has passed the Senate, and if it passes the House it will then be in force, and there will be no necessity for action upon this bill. I therefore ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41), proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2457) to provide for a library information service in the Bureau of Education was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 131) to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

DISTRICT RENT COMMISSION.

The bill (S. 2992) to create a rent commission of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. GORE. Let that go over.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

The bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

JACOB NICE.

The bill (S. 1448) for the relief of Jacob Nice was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

OFFICERS AND MEN OF COAST GUARD.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 102) to equalize the pay and allowances of commissioned officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the Coast Guard with those of the Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

JOHN T. EATON.

The bill (S. 209) for the relief of John T. Eaton was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not understand that there is any objection to this bill.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John T. Eaton, of Helena, Mont., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $560, in compliance with the findings of the Court of Claims, Senate Document No. 220 of the first session of the Sixty-third Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY C. MAYERS.

The bill (S. 642) for the relief of Mary C. Mayers was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Whereas Joseph L. Mayers, lately an American citizen, residing at Yokohama, Japan, died on May 7, 1899, as the result of injuries received on May 6, 1899, by the fall of the first whaleboat belonging to the U. S. S. Charleston, then lying in Victoria Harbor, Hongkong, China, and which whaleboat was negligently detached from the davits of said ship by some of the ship's crew, said Mayers having gone to said ship on official business; and

Whereas the said Mayers left surviving him a widow, Mary C. Mayers, who was wholly dependent on her husband for support, and said widow is now without means: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $5,000 for the aid and support of the said Mary C. Mayers, widow of the said Joseph L. Mayers, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be paid to said Mary C. Mayers by the Secretary of the Treasury immediately upon the approval of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator reporting the bill if that is the usual compensation given in such cases? Is it more than a year's salary, or is it just the annual salary?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator from Utah that it has been some time since I wrote the report, but as to both this and the following bill, Senate bill 1194, similar bills were passed by the Senate during the last Congress, and they are in exactly the same form as they were when passed. In all these cases we have always complied with the law and allowed the beneficiary one year's salary.

Mr. SMOOT. I will take that for granted, then, Mr. President.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1194) for the relief of Elizabeth Marsh Watkins, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2377) to amend section 1 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, so as to provide for the payment of the expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board and employees by the Federal land banks and joint stock land banks, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask that that may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

FISHLAKE NATIONAL FOREST, UTAH.

The bill (S. 430) to authorize the exchange of certain lands within the Fishlake National Forest, Utah, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be is enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to accept title to the following-described lands, either in whole or in part, upon certification by the Secretary of Agriculture, that the lands are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes and approximately equal in value to the lands to be given in exchange therefor: West half of the northwest quarter of section 17; northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 18; north half of the northeast quarter, southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 21; southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 28; south half of the southeast quarter of section 30; west half of the northeast quarter, northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 31; northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 33, township 26 south, range 2 west of the Salt Lake meridian, within the Fishlake National Forest, and to issue to the Monroe Land & Livestock Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Utah, in lieu thereof patents to the following-described areas, or to such parts thereof as are approximately equal in value to the lands conveyed: East half of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, southwest quarter of the northeast quarter, northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 19; north half of the northeast quarter of section 20; southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 21; south half of the northeast quarter, northeast quarter of the southeast quarter, northwest quarter of the southwest quarter, southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 29; east half of the northeast quarter of section 30, township 26 south, range 2 west, of Salt Lake meridian: Provided, That the lands conveyed to the Government shall thereupon become parts of the Fishlake National Forest and subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SWAN LAND & CATTLE CO.

The bill (S. 2758) providing for an exchange of lands between the Swan Land & Cattle Co. and the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon proper execution and delivery by the Swan Land & Cattle Co. (Ltd.), a corporation, of a deed conveying to the United States, its successors and assigns, a good merchantable title in fee, free of incumbrance, to certain lands needed by the United States for construction, operation, and maintenance purposes, in connection with the North Platte irrigation project, Nebraska-Wyoming, to wit: The southwest quarter of the northeast quarter, and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 25, township 25 north, range 63 west, sixth principal meridian, Wyoming; then in exchange for such lands so conveyed a patent shall be issued by the United States to said Swan Land & Cattle Co., its successors and assigns, conveying to said company the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 26, and the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 23, township 25 north, range 63 west, sixth principal meridian.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IDAHO NATIONAL FOREST AND PAYETTE NATIONAL FOREST.

The bill (H. R. 1429) adding certain lands to the Idaho National Forest and the Payette National Forest, in the State of Idaho, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, all public lands in central Idaho within the tract commonly known as the Thunder Mountain region, bounded by the Idaho, Salmon, Challis, and Payette National Forests, are hereby reserved and set apart as national forest lands, as follows, subject to all valid existing claims, and the said lands shall hereafter be subject to all laws affecting the national forests: That part of the said tract lying north of the fourth standard parallel north, Boise meridian and base, is hereby added to and made a part of the Idaho National Forest; and that part of the said tract lying south of the said fourth standard parallel is hereby added to and made a part of the Payette National Forest.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL AIRCRAFT STANDARDS COMMISSION.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 56) to enable the United States to participate in the work of the International Aircraft Standards Commission was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

PROTECTION OF BIRDS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 1199) to prohibit the purchase, sale, or possession for the purpose of sale of certain wild birds in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments. The first amendment was, in line 5, page 1, after the word "any," to strike out "game bird. For the purpose of this act the following shall be considered game birds: The anatidae, or waterfowl, including brant, wild ducks, geese, and swan; gruidae, or cranes, including little brown, sandhill, and whooping cranes; rallidae, or rails, including coots, gallinules, and sora, or other rails; limicolae, or shore birds, including avocets, curlew, dowitchers, godwits, knots, oyster catchers, phalaropes, plover, sandpipers, snipe, stilts, surf birds, turnstones, willet, woodcock, and yellow legs; columbidae, or pigeons, including doves and wild pigeons; gallinae, or grouse, including wild turkey, pinnated grouse, ruffed grouse, or any kind of grouse, and quail; reedbirds, or ricebirds; marsh blackbirds"; and insert "heath hen, sage hen, any kind of quail, bob white, grouse, partridge, ptarmigan, prairie chicken, pheasant, wild turkey, Hungarian partridge, English, ring-necked, Mongolian or Chinese pheasant, or marsh blackbird," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful, within the District of Columbia, for any person at any time to buy, sell, or expose for sale, or to have in possession for the purpose of selling, any heath hen, sage hen, any kind of quail, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask to have the bill go over. I should like to hear from the Senator having charge of the bill something more about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed in open executive session to the consideration of the treaty with Germany.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany.

Mr. LODGE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to occupy just a moment of the time of the Senate to make a brief statement.

It has been stated a number of times of late that at the time Germany secured the treaty with China with reference to her possessions in Shantung John Hay was Secretary of State. This statement was originally made by the President at Los Angeles. It was not surprising that a man speaking extemporaneously should be inaccurate in his dates, and I do not call attention to it for the purpose of charging an intentional misstatement, but that we may be accurate as to the facts and for the truth of history. Furthermore, my admiration for the services of Mr. Hay and my understanding of his vast work is such as to lead me to the conclusion that things might have been different if he had been Secretary of State at that time.

The two German missionaries who were killed in Shantung, over which the dispute afterwards arose, were killed in November, 1897. The date of the German lease is that of March 6, 1898. President McKinley on August 23, 1898, notified Mr. Hay by cable that he would offer him the Secretary of Stateship. Mr. Hay accepted the appointment and became the Secretary of State on September 30, 1898, actually entering upon the performance of his duties of the office on October 1, 1898. The German treaty was consummated, therefore, some six months prior to the time that Mr. Hay became Secretary of State.

After Mr. Hay became Secretary of State, Italy, following the program which had apparently been outlined in China by Great Britain, France, and Germany, also sought certain concessions in China, to which Mr. Hay objected. He afterwards, as the world knows, immediately after he became Secretary of State, took up the work of checking the further division of China and of establishing the policy associated with his name known as the "open door."

I read a paragraph or two from the Life of Hay, by William Roscoe Thayer. I read a paragraph from page 240:

> The Boxer upheaval interrupted and made more difficult Hay's endeavor to preserve the Chinese Empire. After the Japanese defeated the Chinese in 1894, China lay like a stranded whale, apparently dead, or dying, and the chief powers of Europe came, like fishermen after blubber, and took here a Province and there a harbor, and were callous to the fact that their victim was not dead. They not only seized territory, but forced from the Chinese concessions for mines, railways, commercial privileges, and spheres of influence. From the time that Hay became Secretary he strove to keep intact the political integrity of China and to persuade all the powers to maintain there the policy of the open door.

It was after he became Secretary of State, as I have stated, that he made his objection to the further aggression upon the part of Italy.

Under date of September 20, 1900, Mr. Hay, writing to a friend, said:

> I take it you agree with us that we are to limit as far as possible our military operations in China, to withdraw our troops at the earliest day consistent with our obligations, and in the final adjustment to do everything we can for the integrity and reform of China and to hold on like grim death to the open door.

The author, commenting, says:

> Hay's achievement in this Chinese contest gave him an immense prestige. Throughout the world he was now looked upon as a statesman, honest, disinterested, resourceful, and brilliant.

Mr. President, my purpose in calling attention to this is no other than to get the facts in the RECORD as they actually exist. Mr. Hay was not Secretary of State at the time the German aggression took place, and the aggressions which followed the German aggressions he sought from his first entrance as Secretary of State to prevent. He exercised his influence from the very beginning to protect the integrity of China.

Friday, October 10, 1919.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the pending amendment is in reference to article 156 of the treaty. It strikes out the word "Japan" and inserts in lieu thereof the word "China." If this amendment should prevail and the treaty should be amended in this respect it would give to China what belongs to China, and it would relieve the treaty of one of its very many serious objectionable features.

Mr. President, when the armistice was signed by the contending armies there was a specific and definite written agreement among the powers as to the basis of peace and as to the grounds and principles which should govern the making of a peace under the armistice. The allied Governments, after propositions had been made for an armistice by Germany, submitted a written proposition which was agreed to by all the Allies and by our Government, and I desire to read it from the official correspondence of our Secretary of State:

> The allied Governments have given careful consideration to the correspondence which has passed between the President of the United States and the German Government. Subject to the qualifications which follow they declare their willingness to make peace with the Government of Germany on the terms of peace laid down in the President's address to Congress of January, 1918, and the principles of settlement enunciated in his subsequent addresses. They must point out, however, that clause 2, relating to what is usually described as the freedom of the seas, is open to various interpretations, some of which they could not accept. They must, therefore, reserve to themselves complete freedom on this subject when they enter the peace conference.
>
> Further, in the conditions of peace laid down in his address to Congress of January 8, 1918, the President declared that invaded territories must be restored as well as evacuated and freed. The allied Governments feel that no doubt ought to be allowed to exist as to what this provision implies By it they understand that compensation will be made by Germany for all damage done to the civilian population of the Allies and their property by the aggression by Germany by land, by sea, and from the air.

That, Mr. President, is the end of the proposed agreement. When Mr. Lansing transmitted this to the German Government through the Government of Switzerland he used this language, after quoting what I have just read:

> I am instructed by the President to say that he is in agreement with the interpretation set forth in the last paragraph of the memorandum above quoted. I am further instructed by the President to request you to notify the German Government that Marshal Foch has been authorized by the Government of the United States and the allied Governments to receive properly accredited representatives of the German Government, and to communicate to them the terms of an armistice.

When the President approved this memorandum made by the other allied Governments and sent it to Germany through the officials of Switzerland, he gave the last approval necessary to make a binding contract between all the parties. There can be no doubt, Mr. President, that everybody understood, on both sides of the controversy and all over the world, that this was an agreement positively to make a treaty of peace upon the conditions and the terms laid down by President Wilson in this address. But if there should be any possible doubt, at least as to Great Britain and our country, that is dissipated by what happened afterwards. The armistice was agreed to on the 11th day of November, 1918, and on that day the President issued a proclamation to the people of our country as follows:

> My fellow countrymen, the armistice was signed this morning. Everything for which America fought has been accomplished. It will now be our fortunate duty to assist by example, by sober, friendly council, and by material aid in the establishment of democracy throughout the world.

On the same day, or within at least a day or so, but I think on the same day, the President sent an official message to Congress in which he practically reiterated the same thing. But a few days later the premier of England, Lloyd-George, who was representing Great Britain in making the agreement to which I have referred, sent a cablegram of congratulation to the President in the following language:

> My heartiest thanks for your kindly message. I am certain that the ideals of our two countries regarding international reconstruction are fundamentally the same. I feel sure that at the peace conference we shall be able to cooperate fruitfully to promote the reign of peace with liberty and true democracy throughout the world.

Mr. President, it seems to me there can be no doubt that this agreement superseded and set aside any other agreement between the same parties made at any time at which there was an agreement for a different basis of settlement. Every person knows, and particularly every lawyer knows, that when an agreement is once reached between parties it takes the place of and sets aside every other prior agreement that is in conflict with its terms. If that doctrine be true, then, under that agreement every one of the Governments which were parties to it—and that included all of the belligerent Governments; when Germany agreed to it, it included her likewise—said, "Any other agreement that we have made on the side or in any other way with a view of bringing about a peace differing from that to which we have now agreed must be cast aside and held for naught." There can be and there is no question that this agreement absolutely by its terms set aside the secret treaties to which I am going to refer later.

There is no doubt, Mr. President, that that agreement met the hearty approval of all civilized people everywhere in the world; neither is there any doubt that the treaty finally agreed to and which is now before us violated that agreement and the President's address upon which it was based in almost every particular. The President's address referred to is the one in which he sets forth the famous 14 points; and the very first of those 14 points is what everybody knows to be the proposition of "open covenants of peace openly arrived at"; but the very first day that the conference met they violated that particular stipulation of the President's address.

The President undoubtedly was in earnest when he made that address. I know it met with my hearty approval and I think it met with the approval of all of our citizens. One of the things we had fought for—or, at least, so we claimed—was the abolishment of secret treaties, was the abolishment of secret diplomacy, was to open a new rule for the world, based on open diplomacy, "open covenants of peace, openly arrived at." So much was the President in favor of that particular provision that in the same address, which was officially approved by all the powers and used by the agreement as a basis for a future peace, he approved the methods that had been adopted by the Bolsheviki and our enemy, Germany, in agreeing to a peace at Brest-Litovsk. In that same address the President said:

The Russian representatives—

He is speaking now of the Brest-Litovsk treaty—

The Russian representatives have insisted, very justly, very wisely, and in the true spirit of modern democracy, that the conferences they have been holding with the Teutonic and Turkish statesmen should be held with open, not closed, doors, and all the world has been an audience, as was desired.

But when the peace council met, as I have said, the first thing they did was to close the doors. After the President gave official approval even to the despised Lenin and Trotski in their demand for open diplomacy, and after the entire world had agreed that this treaty should be based upon the 14 points, the first of which is "open covenants of peace, openly arrived at," the peace delegates violated the agreement, went behind closed doors, and in all the history of the world there never were treaty negotiations carried on with greater secrecy than were the negotiations leading up to the formulation of this treaty.

Mr. President, the representatives of the British Government, the French Government, and the Japanese Government—Mr. Balfour representing Great Britain, Viscount Ishii representing Japan, Viviani and Ambassador Jusserand representing France—all stood on the rostrum where you now sit and to us and to our assembled guests made speeches that were published all over the United States; speeches full of professions of earnestness, of a desire for a democratic peace, of a desire for a just and a fair peace. They delivered to us orations on that occasion that moved many of their hearers to tears. We believed what they said; we thought they were in earnest; we thought we were working with the Allies represented by these leaders sent here to address us, and that they were going to do what they proclaimed to us and to the world they would do when we made peace. Many of us went over the country at different times when funds were being raised for the Red Cross or Liberty bonds were being sold and proclaimed from every stump that one of the things for which this war was being fought was to abolish secret diplomacy; was to bring about absolute justice between nations; was to abolish conquest; that no nation should be transferred from one nationality to another like chattels without their consent. Those were the doctrines that from that rostrum came from the eloquent lips of those great representatives of the great governments that were allied with us in the Great War. But, Mr. President, to their shame I think it should be said—yes; to their disgrace, and the disgrace of the governments they represented—at the very time they were so eloquently addressing us, their pockets were bulging with secret treaties by which they had agreed at the peace table to carve up the world among themselves, in absolute violation of every principle enunciated in the address delivered by the President containing the 14 points, and in absolute violation of all their professions of fairness and justice so eloquently pronounced from that rostrum.

Not only did they conceal from us, their allies, that they had already agreed how they should parcel up the world, but they concealed later on from China that they were going to ravish her. They concealed it from her when they were inducing her to enter the war on our side. It seems to me that in all the annals of history from the very beginning of civilization there was never a more disgraceful spectacle than great nations that claimed to be and are recognized to be the leaders in civilization and in world affairs, on the one hand, inducing China to come into the struggle, to cast her lot with them, to send her men to the front, to turn over to them the numerous ships of Germany which were interned within her waters, and which were almost vital to allied success, and at the same time concealing from her the fact that they had agreed secretly that when the war was over they were going to carve her up, that they were going to turn over a large share of her domain to her worst enemy.

Mr. President, what is said in defense of this rape of China effectuated in the particular clause which we are now considering? I have heard no man defend it. It is a well-known fact that in private conversation the President himself, who agreed to it, describes it as infamous. But they say in extenuation that it was necessary to give Shantung to Japan—the President has repeated the statement over and over again—because England and France had made secret treaties agreeing to do it. He has also said officially that he did not know anything about those secret treaties until the representatives of the nations met around the peace table at Versailles.

I am going to take up that and whatever other objections I can think of or that can be offered in defense of this treaty as it stands, but before I do so I wish again to correct a statement made by the President of the United States. In his recent trip over the country the President made his first great speech at St. Louis. It was perhaps the greatest of all the speeches he made and was recognized as such. St. Louis was the place where he went into the question fully and discussed it in detail. In that speech the President said:

Great Britain and France, as everybody now knows, in order to make it more certain that Japan would come into the war and so assist to clear the Pacific of the German fleet, had promised that any rights that Germany had in China should, in case of the victory of the allies, pass to Japan.

Mr. President, that speech was published, and the quotation I have read was, I presume, printed in practically every daily newspaper in the United States the morning after the President delivered it. It received greater circulation than any other speech the President made on his trip.

If what the President has said is true, then some of the infamy and shame and disgrace of this provision of the treaty is removed. It would not make it right even then, but it could at least be offered as an extenuating circumstance.

It was, however, a misstatement entirely of the facts; it was absolutely untrue that England and France had to agree with Japan to give her the German possessions in China in order to get Japan into the war. Yet, the great American citizenship were not fully informed on that subject; and when they read this statement from the lips of the President, and particularly if they had not seen it contradicted, and particularly knowing that the President was one of the commissioners at Versailles, and knew all about what happened there, they naturally would have a right to believe it. As I said a moment ago, if it were true there would be some excuse for giving this territory to Japan, because we could say that we would look with some favor on a proposition made by the fighting nations to give something to another prospective ally to get her into the war.

But, Mr. President, the next morning after the President of the United States made that statement, I called attention here on the floor of the Senate to the fact that it was absolutely without any foundation of fact. The war began in August, 1914. Japan, as I remember now—I am speaking only from memory, and I should be glad to be corrected if I am wrong—declared war against Germany on the 23d day of August, 1914. At least, Mr. President, it was but a few days after the war commenced. There was no such agreement made with Japan by any government. There was no pretense of such an agreement. There was no necessity of making such an inducement, and, in fact, no such agreement and no such promise was made at that time. But in order that there may be no misunderstanding and no possible doubt, since the President made the statement unqualifiedly, and the denial, of course, not going to the people as his statement did, I want to read the telegram which the President sent to me on the 12th of September. It was sent from Garrison, Mont.:

Hon. G. W. NORRIS,
United States Senate, Washington:

I thank you for correcting an unintentional inaccuracy in one of my recent speeches.

(Signed) WOODROW WILSON.

There can be no doubt of the fact that this telegram refers to this particular correction, because it was the only time that I had referred to anything that the President had said anywhere.

Mr. President, the misstatement of fact went forth all over the country, as I said. I waited until the President's trip was concluded before I gave publicity to his telegram, in which he admits that the statement he made was, as he puts it, inaccurate. I had hoped that when a misstatement of this importance was made, pertaining to a very material proposition involved in this treaty, and the man who made it had his attention called to the fact that he had made it, even if he had in some way made it innocently, he would at least give as great publicity to the correction as he did to the misstatement that was originally made.

Of course the truth will never completely overtake the falsehood. The truth will never reach the eyes and ears of all the millions of people who read and heard the statement that is untrue. It seems to me if the President wanted to be fair with the American people and with the American Senate, if he wanted to be fair with the world, with the honest, peace-loving citizenship of this age, he would at least have been careful to have given as great publicity to this correction as he did to this misstatement.

Mr. President, the secret agreement that I am coming to was not made until in February, 1917. There never was even any negotiation to make until the 27th day of January, 1917. The war had been going on since August, 1914, and Japan had been in the war practically all of that time. The President, in this misstatement, said that it was for the purpose of enabling Japan to assist to clear the Pacific of the German fleets. At the time that agreement was made there was not a single German ship of any kind, either merchant or naval, on the Pacific Ocean. There was no ship in any harbor that belonged to Germany except those that were interned from the beginning of the war. The Pacific Ocean was as free from German ships of all kinds at the time that secret agreement was made as is the Potomac River at the foot of Seventh Street in Washington at the present time.

I put this secret correspondence in the RECORD on the 15th of last July, but I think, in connection with what the President has said, I had better put some of it at least in the RECORD again.

On the 26th day of February, 1917, the British ambassador at Tokyo wrote to Viscount Ichiro Motono, the imperial Japanese minister for foreign affairs, as follows:

MY DEAR EXCELLENCY: With reference to the subject of our conversation of the 27th ultimo—

That would mean the 27th day of January; that is when it was first proposed—

when your excellency informed me of the desire of the Imperial Government to receive an assurance that on the occasion of a peace conference His Britannic Majesty's Government will support the claims of Japan in regard to the disposal of Germany's rights in Shantung and possessions in the islands north of the Equator, I have the honor, under instructions received from His Britannic Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, to communicate to you the following message from His Britannic Majesty's Government:

His Britannic Majesty's Government accede with pleasure to request of the Japanese Government for an assurance that they will support Japan's claims in regard to the disposal of Germany's rights in Shantung and possessions in the islands north of the Equator on the occasion of the peace conference, it being understood that the Japanese Government will in the eventual peace settlement treat in the same spirit Great Britain's claims to the German islands south of the Equator.

I avail myself of this opportunity, M. le Ministre, to renew to your excellency the assurance of my highest consideration.

CONYNGHAM GREENE,
His Britannic Majesty's Ambassador.

The reply of the Japanese Government is short, and I will read it. It follows, and it was written on the 21st of February:

The Japanese Government is deeply appreciative of the friendly spirit in which your Government has given assurance, and happy to note it as a fresh proof of the close ties that unite the two allied powers. I take pleasure in stating that the Japanese Government, on its part, is fully prepared to support in the same spirit the claims which may be put forward at the peace conference in regard to the German possessions in the islands south of the Equator.

Mr. President, remember, that was just before we went into the war.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. Has the Senator referred to the statement made by Mr. Balfour in the House of Commons to the effect that President Wilson was acquainted with all the secret treaties?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I have not referred to that. I understand that he made that assertion, but I am assuming that the President's statement is correct when he said that he did not know anything about them. That is a conflict between Balfour and President Wilson that I am going to let them fight out. One or the other of them is most woefully mistaken, undoubtedly; but the President has said that he did not know anything about these treaties until they got around the peace table, and I am assuming, for the purpose of my argument, that the President told the truth.

Mr. President, following this agreement between Great Britain and Japan, the same kind of an agreement was made with France. The consideration was different. The islands of the Pacific had already been disposed of and divided up between Great Britain and Japan. They made the same agreement with Italy. They made the same agreement with Russia, Russia at that time being still in the war.

But what I started to say when I was interrupted was that we must remember that this was just before America entered the war. It was done at a time when it was known that America was going into the war, and it was done at a time when it was practically certain that if America went into the war China would follow us in. And, as I shall show later, Japan had thus far kept China out of the conflict. China would have been in at the beginning had it not been for Japan. At that time Japan had reason to believe that China was coming in, and would therefore sit at the peace table with the rest of the nations who had been in the war, and she wanted at that time to sign and seal China's fate before she could get in.

Remember also that while this happened two and a half years after Japan went into the war—and this conclusively shows that the President's statement to the American people was untrue—it all did happen before the representatives of France and of Great Britain and of Italy and of Japan came here to America to enthuse us in this war. So that they knew all the time after we went in of these secret agreements. They knew also when China went in. I think it was a breach of faith with us when they did not tell us of these secret agreements; but it was doubly a breach of faith with China when they all, including ourselves, induced her to come in, knowing that they had made an agreement between themselves that they were going to rob her at the peace table, just as if she were an enemy.

Mr. President, it is said, in extenuation of this provision in the treaty, that if we do not sign it Japan will go ahead just the same and keep Shantung, and that therefore we do not do any good for China by refusing to sign it. There is a good deal of doubt whether Japan will keep Shantung, Mr. President. But for the moment, for the sake of the argument, I am going to admit it. What does it amount to? Here is China about to be ravished. She has been our ally. She went in with us. She helped us more than Japan did. She lost more men from German guns in France than Japan lost in the entire war. She made greater sacrifices than Japan made. She comes to the peace conference and asks nothing but what is hers.

Now, it is said that if we do not approve this treaty she is going to be robbed anyway; therefore, let us approve it and give our official sanction to the robbery. Mr. President, regardless of what may happen, let us keep our hands free from being stained with the innocent blood of one of our allies in this contest. If Japan takes Shantung anyway, are we not at least in better position before God and humanity if we can say that we did not approve it?

Then we are asked if we would go to war to take Shantung away from Japan. Nobody has suggested such a thing. Yet the President and others make the argument that if we do not approve this treaty we will have to go to war with Japan in order to keep her from getting Shantung. Nothing is further from the truth, Mr. President.

Nobody has advocated that we should declare war upon Japan if she refuses to give up Shantung. Nobody has suggested such a thing; and, so far as I know, nobody is advocating it. It does not follow, though, even if we are not willing to go to war, that we must therefore give our official approval to this disgraceful rape of an innocent people.

Then it is said that if we reject this proposition the treaty will fall. I do not believe that. But for argument's sake let us admit that to be true. What does it mean? Mr. President, we had better have no treaty than to stain our hands with dishonor and crime against a friend and an ally. I believe that Mr. Lansing told the truth before the Foreign Relations Committee when he testified that if we had refused to agree to the Shantung crime it would not have meant the overthrow of the treaty or the abolishment of the league of nations.

There was presented to President Wilson at that conference an opportunity, Mr. President, when these secret treaties were disclosed, that never before was presented to any human being. Never since the days of Adam and Eve in the garden was mortal man given an opportunity to do such a great act and such great good for humanity as was presented to him there.

When these treaties were laid on the table, he ought to have laid on the table by the side of them this agreement I have read, to which they had all agreed, fixing the basis for a peace. He ought to have said, "We have fought this war to abolish secret treaties, and we will not lay the foundation of a future peace upon a crime." And he should have further said to them, "These secret treaties must go in the discard."

Mr. President, if he had had the courage to do that, there would have risen up behind him and in front of him and all around him millions, yea, billions, of war-sick people all over the universe, holding up his hands. There would have been a crystallized sentiment in favor of that proposition from every nation in the world. England would have been there, France would have been there, Italy would have been there. Those who represented those Governments could not have withstood the sentiments of their own countries. If they had, and had gone back for new instructions, they would have been repudiated. I have more faith in the great common people of England and France than to think that any other result could have happened. After all, Mr. President, the strongest power in this world is a crystallized public sentiment. In the end, it is more powerful than the combined armies and navies of the world. Before this onward march the decrees of monarchs and kings, the demands of rulers, are disregarded and trampled under foot. Before this onward march the schemes and machinations of men disappear as the dew fades in the morning sun. The sentiment of a civilized world is crystallized, and was crystallized when this peace conference met, in favor of a permanent peace—a fair and honorable peace—a peace such as had been outlined in the written agreements between all the parties when the armistice was signed. There was a world sentiment in favor of the abolition of secret treaties, of secret agreements, of the transfer of peoples from one nationality to another without their consent. All this sentiment needed to become the most powerful factor in the world was some one at the peace conference to act as a spokesman—some one with the courage to stand up in that peace conference in favor of justice, in favor of honesty. If our President had had the courage to do this in this momentous hour, the world would be on a different basis to-day. Had he absolutely demanded that the peace conference should go no further unless it proceeded to carry out in good faith the agreements under which they met, and give to the suffering, hungry world that for which all humanity had need and that for which more than 50,000 of our boys had given their lives—had he done this, the world would have been with him; the opposition would have faded; the other representatives would have submitted, and we would have had a just peace instead of this criminal violation of everything that is sacred to honest men.

But suppose they had not? What then? Then the President ought to have said, and he ought to have made it good, if it were necessary, "This peace conference ends as far as America is concerned. We will not be a party to a crime such as this. We will not carry out secret agreements the effect of which will be to violate the territory and the neutrality and the rights of one of our allies which, although weak, was just as sincere and just as honest and just as faithful as any of us."

But, Mr. President, if you go on and put it through, what will it mean? They say we must put it through in order to have a permament peace. To me that seems foolish. To me that is absolutely illogical. But for the moment let us admit that we can not get peace any other way, that we can not get a league any other way, that we have to put it through with this crime in it. Do you not know that it is just as impossible to build a permanent peace on such a foundation as it is to stop the sun in its course? Mr. President, it is contrary to the laws of God and nature. Every page of history tells us that such a peace can not last, and never has lasted. You can not violate the laws of God by any man-made treaty or law, and when you start to build a peace on such a foundation, when you start to build the temple of justice upon a foundation of sand, of crime, of dishonor, of disgrace, your temple will crumble and decay just as surely as history repeats itself. When you expect permanent peace under such conditions you are expecting an impossibility. If we reject this treaty we will take one step—a necessary step—toward a permanent peace, because the adoption of the treaty in its present form absolutely means future war. All history proves this. There is no danger of America being left out in the organization of a league of nations. Everyone knows that a league without America in it will not succeed. All civilization wants a treaty that will bring permanent peace. The first step to get such a treaty is to reject any proposal that all history proves will bring the opposite of peace. Let the peace-loving people know that America will not stand for anything but a genuine treaty based upon absolute justice, and there will be no difficulty in securing consideration on such a basis by all honest, civilized, fair-minded peoples.

Every student of the world's history knows that such a peace can not be lasting. Why, Mr. President, 50 years ago Germany took Alsace and Lorraine from France, and she had at least the excuse that she was at war with France. We do not even have that here. We are proposing to take territory from an ally. But Germany took Alsace and Lorraine. She took them because she was powerful enough to do it. She thought she had them for all time, and apparently that was true. Time went on, and nobody made a move to free Alsace and Lorraine. Nothing was done. Practically 50 years passed, and the world had almost forgotten it. But the first cannon that boomed in this war aroused a cry all over the civilized world that Alsace and Lorraine must be restored to France.

Many years ago Poland was despoiled. The powerful nations divided it up just as this treaty proposes to divide up China. They did it because they had the power—because Poland was not strong enough to resist. Just like this treaty proposes to treat China because she is too weak to resist. Many years of history passed away. The world had forgotten that there ever was such a country as Poland. It was necessary to become a student of ancient history in order to have any knowledge of Poland; but, Mr. President, this war was not half fought out until the spirit of Poland arose from a grave that was green with the grass and moss of centuries. Do not get the idea that because you have the power you can do things that are contrary to the laws of God Almighty. This disgraceful Shantung provision, if approved, will just as surely bring the fruits of disruption and ruin to anything builded and founded on it as the sun will rise to-morrow morning. There is no escape. The cruel, heartless nations that despoiled Poland never doubted but that they had completed the job so thoroughly that Poland would never again be known as a nation. On the face of it it looked as though they had done this. According to the standards of man power that was true, but these men did not realize that a law higher than man controls the destinies of peoples and of nations. It looked as though Poland was crushed, never to rise again. According to human laws this seemed to be true. We know now that it was not. Germany thought she had Alsace and Lorraine for all time. She had no doubt whatever on this score. The balance of the world had practically conceded that this was true; and yet, as if by magic, in God's own time, all this changed and Alsace and Lorraine, by common consent, came back to France. And this wrongful and inhuman thing—the taking of Alsace and Lorraine by Germany because she had the power to do it—was one of the real causes of the present World War. It was a smoldering fire that was never extinguished, although man was not able with mortal eye to see the flame. So it will be with Shantung. So it will be with other crimes and illogical things that are supposed to be handled for all time by this treaty. We could not change this law if we would. We should not desire to change it, even if we could.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCORMICK in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the able Senator if, in his judgment, at the peace conference, in order not to perpetuate the evils of which he has been speaking, in order not to perpetuate wrongs which had been committed against China, he would have insisted, or does now insist, that our representatives ought to have compelled Great Britain and France to cede back to China the interests which they had in Hongkong, the Yangtze Valley, and in the Tonkin part of China, which is really, in part at least, under the domination of France?

Mr. NORRIS. No; for the reason, I will say to the Senator, that it was not an issue. China was not demanding it, and there was not any occasion to give it any consideration. It was not brought up at the conference.

Mr. KING. The Senator, I understand, is denouncing the perpetuation of wrongs which result from depriving a nation of a part of its territory; and I think he speaks in conformity with the lessons of history. Now, if it was a wrong for Japan to have negotiated that treaty with China in 1915, under which certain cessions were made to Japan, was it not a wrong for England and France to have taken China's territory? And if it was the perpetuation of a wrong to allow Japan to keep Shantung, to use the expression of the Senator, was it not a wrong to recognize the rights of Great Britain and France in China?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there is this difference. We are asked now to give official approval to this wrong. If we are ever asked to give approval to another thief's conduct, I will be opposed to it, but it may be that it will never be brought or called to our attention. We must act in this case. The responsibility is on us. We can not escape it, and we must either approve a crime, or we must adopt this amendment or reject the treaty.

There is no other escape. We were not consulted, and had no responsibility in the cases the Senator has called attention to, and there are many other sins in the past that have gone on, of which we have not taken any notice, because probably better—possibly to our shame but probably better—to hold aloof than to mix in quarrels where we are completely out. But we are in this quarrel, we are in this war, we can not escape this responsibility, and it is up to us to determine whether we shall give approval to this criminal act.

Moreover, the cases which the Senator put happened before this war—happened before the time when by universal consent we were setting up a new milestone in the history of the world; before we agreed to make a treaty based on self-determination, the abolition of secret treaties, and the establishment of a doctrine that nations can not be transferred by kings and rulers, even though they are weak, from one nationality to another without their consent. When do we expect to establish this new doctrine? If we are going to use the sins of the barbarous days as a precedent for crimes in this civilized age, then how can we expect the civilized world to progress and become better?

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. It seems to me there is absolutely no analogy between the Shantung case and the case of the British possession of Hongkong and the French possessions anywhere in China, for this reason: We and our Allies have taken away from Germany whatever rights she was claiming in China. The analogy would be perfect if, in a war in which we were concerned, the possession of Great Britain and France of their territory in China had been taken away. Then we might have been called at the peace table to hark back to the original conditions under which Great Britain and France acquired that territory. But that is not this situation.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, I invite the Senator's attention to the fact, however, that Japan and China had entered into a treaty in 1915 under the terms of which that was ceded to Japan.

Mr. NORRIS. I am going to take up that treaty later.

Mr. KING. I know that the Senator from Nebraska, if he will pardon me, will contend that that treaty was forced upon China.

Mr. NORRIS. I shall not only contend it, but I will prove it, and I will prove it by a witness that the Senator will not dare dispute, when I reach that part of my address. Nobody, outside of a few Senators here, and I am surprised that they do, contends that there is any validity to that treaty of 1915. I am not going into it now, but before I get through I am going to take up that question probably more extensively than I otherwise would. I did not believe there was anybody left in this body who would even contend for a moment that that treaty had any validity or was entitled to any respect by any honest man.

Mr. President, English troops recaptured Belgium. Did anybody think or even suggest that it should be given to England, and let England by a side agreement agree to restore Belgium? American troops took portions of France from Germany. Yes; American troops recaptured a portion of the sacred soil of Alsace-Lorraine. Has anybody heard any American say that we ought to give Alsace-Lorraine, or any part of it, to America because we recaptured it? No; as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] suggests to me just now, it would have made it no better even if we had had a secret treaty.

Mr. President, it is absolutely as cruel to take Shantung from China and give it to Japan as though in this treaty we took California from the United States and gave it to Japan. I can not see any difference in principle. The only difference existing is that the United States is strong and China is weak, and that is the thing for which we fought the war, to equalize the weak and the strong, and we are violating that principle here in the very peace treaty which we make and upon which we expect to build the future peace of the world. I have more respect for the thug who attacks on the street an able-bodied man than I have for the thief who has not the courage to attack anybody but a cripple. I think it would be more honorable if we by this treaty took California and gave it to some other nation than it is to take it from somebody who is unable to defend himself.

Mr. President, I have here an editorial printed in the News-Herald, of Franklin, Pa., written, I think, by William P. F. Ferguson. It takes up some of this ground that I have gone over, and does it so well that I want to read a portion of it. It is headed "Why Think Us Fools?"

WHY THINK US FOOLS?

It is difficult not utterly to lose patience with the President when we read such reports of his utterances as the wires have been giving us during the past few days.

For example, yesterday's dispatches represent that at San Francisco the President made to his hearers statements like the following:

"That he asked his colleagues at Versailles specifically whether they meant, under the league, to inaugurate a new policy toward China, and they told him they did.

"Far from being detrimental to China's interests the treaty is really the first in the world's history to do something for China's benefit.

"In all previous instances of acquisition of Chinese territory the United States has not even protested.

"That he is not satisfied with the Shantung settlement, but it is 'irrational' to propose to make the situation better by the treaty's amendment.

"It is not from China, but from Germany, that Shantung is taken by the treaty.

"It's the first time in the history of the world that anything has been done for China."

Before I read what this able editorial writer says in commenting on the President's address thus quoted, I want to refer to something that I intended to refer to and forgot, that it has been said that we are doing something for China, that this is a good thing for China, that when the league is established then we will restore this country to China.

Mr. President, I do not see how anybody can offer that argument in good faith. If we want to give Shantung to China, our chance is now to put into the treaty, to put into the bond, what we want to say. Every lawyer knows that it would not be admissible in evidence to prove, after we have made a law of this treaty, that when we said "Japan" in the treaty we really meant "China." No one would ever be able even to get into evidence in a court of justice anything to make an explanation of that kind. Another principle of law that is as old as the hills is that you can not explain by parol evidence a written document unless there is something misleading or capable of different construction in the written document. It must be its own explanation. The theory of the law is that all conversations and all agreements and all divergences of opinion were brought together when the agreement was made. Japan will be able to say, when the treaty is properly approved and becomes a law, "We point to the bond; we object to the introduction of any other evidence in explaining something that is perfectly plain on its face."

Then where is the opportunity in the treaty for China to get relief? Nobody has ever yet, so far as I have heard, pointed to a single sentence or a single provision in the treaty or the league that would give China an opportunity, that would give Ireland an opportunity, that would give Egypt an opportunity, that would give India an opportunity, that would give Korea an opportunity, that would give South Africa an opportunity to ask for independence or the return of their own property. There is no such thing in the treaty. When the treaty is agreed to, the last nail in the coffin, as far as this league is able to hold it, is driven into every one of those nationalities. There is no other outcome. There is no other possible construction.

Permit me now to return to the editorial. Commenting on what I have quoted from the President, the editor says:

Sandwiched among these assertions the President asked his hearers whether it would be "wise to go to war with Japan" to prevent her taking Shantung from China.

It depends upon whether you take the President seriously, whether, reading this carefully, you pronounce it deliberate and willful misrepresentation with intent to deceive or most undignified pettifogging.

Neither form of expression is desirable in speaking of the utterances of the President of the United States, but the facts are of an extreme sort that demand a consideration of truth and fairness that is difficult with a careful observance of the laws of conventional courtesy.

For by no possible interpretation nor with any conceivable allowance for the temptations of oratory, can any informed mind excuse such presentations of the Shantung case. The President's statements are neither fair nor truthful. They exhibit either a lamentable inability to appreciate plain facts and a deliberate closing of the presidential eyes to matters which challenge and demand attention or a desire to obscure the thinking and lead astray the conclusions of those who, in good faith, come to him for information upon a matter where he should be the best informed man in the world.

Put in plain words, these utterances convince us that President Wilson is either blinded by his idealistic dreams to the point where he is incapable of recognizing the most obvious facts or he is led away by the necessities of his controversy to a point where the dividing line between truth and falsehood loses definition in his mind.

Are we too severe?

Let us examine.

We have no disposition to dispute the President's word when he says that he asked the representatives of the powers at Paris whether they purposed to deal fairly with China; the circumstances were such that that question was naturally suggested. It may easily be that the powers replied with assurances of fair intent; we fail to recall a case in history where international throat cutting has not been attended by the warmest assurances to the world as to the honor and beneficence of the cutthroats.

But the fact is that in the presence of that question and answer the powers—President Wilson, "in his own name and in his own right," as the document runs, consenting—fixed upon and adopted and put into operation, so far as they were able, a policy of monumental injustice toward China.

Our President can talk about the treaty "doing something for China's benefit"; he can call it a "new policy"; the thing that the treaty does is to rob China of a Province that is as truly and as integrally a part of the Chinese domain as Hampshire or Kent is of England; and the policy is new and different from the old policy of "grab" only in that the signature and approval and guaranty of the civilized world is solemnly to be given to the theft.

It is sheer drivel to try to justify the proceedings by saying, as the President does, that the treaty takes Shantung, not from China, but from Germany. The close parallel of that sort of pleading is the shyster lawyer contending that his client is blameless and in lawful possession of the stolen money because he stole it, not from its rightful owner, but from the thief who had stolen it from the rightful owner.

It is equally shallow drivel to plead that the United States did not protest when Germany committed the original theft and therefore, by that failure to protest, is now committed to giving our solemn approval and blessing to a transfer of the stolen property to another thief.

We are ashamed, profoundly ashamed, to find stuff of that sort upon the lips of the President of the United States.

True, we did not protest against Germany's seizure of Shantung. The failure was to our shame; but we have the excuse that it was a day when international justice was in a most confused state and few statesmen of any country saw clearly. We have the further excuse that the extent and purpose of the act of Germany could by no means then be understood.

But will the President say—nay, he does say that our failure to protest against a wrong a quarter of a century ago binds us to approve a wrong now; that our neglect to stop a thief puts upon us the obligation to approve and declare right the transfer of the stolen goods to another thief!

The unescapable conclusion of the President's position is monstrous. The doctrine is not that of the idealistic Americanism that President Wilson has been talking to us and all the world about, but that of the cynical might-makes-rightism of the Hun.

It is pitifully weak in the President to admit his dissatisfaction with the Shantung provisions of the treaty but pronounce any effort to amend those provisions "irrational." Wherein irrational? Intelligent thought asserts that the irrational thing is formally to consent to that which is not acceptable, to give the force of the most widely agreed upon international covenant ever entered into, and then to hope that, in some unknown way and by some unseen means, it will not accomplish the injustice which it is framed to perpetuate. If anyone can point out anything more irrational than to assert, as the President does, that the way to do justice for China is first to consent to and become partner in an utterly gross and indefensible injustice he must go to the madhouse to find it.

And the question about going to war with Japan, which the President has brought forward two or three times, as if it were a profound argument, is petty claptrap.

There is no issue of going to war with Japan; no proposition to do anything of the sort—and the President knows it. He asks the question purely for its psychological suggestion to unthinking minds.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the argument, what little there is, in favor of the Shantung provision is based upon irrational considerations, such as this writer points out, without in any instance logic, reason, or justice behind them, without in any case any plea that is justifiable, the main argument being, "We had the power and we took it in order to satisfy Japan." We robbed an ally to give to another ally.

Mr. President, Japan was not so good an ally as was China. There is some question about Japan's loyalty to the cause of the Allies. Japan went into the war at the beginning. With the assistance of English troops she captured the German stronghold in China. Then she quit and used her influence to keep China out of the war. What would be said in France if, when we were about to enter the war to help the Allies, it had been disclosed that the English Government tried to keep us out? Would they think that the English Government was loyal to the cause? What would have been said of us if, after we went in, we had used our influence to keep China out, as Japan did and as Japan succeeded in doing up to the time we went in, and until she made the secret agreement to carve China up at the peace table? That does not look to me like loyalty; that does not look to me as though Japan's heart was in the cause.

Take those two things and put them together—the fact that Japan quit fighting when she got what she wanted and the fact that she kept China out of the war for more than two years—and you can not square them with loyalty to the cause. Yet we take from the loyal ally a part of her domain—that has been her domain from the very beginning of her history—and give it to the other ally; and it happens in this case that the other ally is the bitterest enemy that China has on the face of the earth. If China had had a voice in the matter and we had said, "China, we are going to carve you up; we are going to take away from you your ancient province, that contains the ashes of Confucius, that contains the ancient homes of your ancestors, just because we have the power to do it; but we are going to allow you to say to whom it shall go," what would China have said? Her answer would have been, "Give it to anybody on earth except to the Japanese Government." There is not any question about that. So we have added insult to injury when we propose such an unholy, such a wicked, thing. We are asked to do in this treaty, and particularly in this particular provision, just what we have condemned in the past. We are asked to do the very thing that is conceded by all students of history, by all earnest believers in a permanent peace, by all Christian people who want the world to become better, the thing that has always, without any exception, brought war in the past. It is universally conceded that all similar things, from the beginning of history, have ultimately and finally resulted in war; and yet it is proposed that we shall do over again what has always brought war, on the theory that this time it will bring peace. And never in the barbarous days of the darkest ages has there ever been put over on an innocent nation a more damnable, wicked, cruel, and unjust thing than is proposed in this particular article.

Mr. President, I want to read a portion of an editorial printed in England which I think shows that, as a rule, the great common people of the world of equal education are about the same in their sympathies and in their aspirations. They want what is square and fair; they do not want to do an injustice to anybody else, even though it would benefit them, financially or otherwise. I want to read a portion of the leading editorial printed in the August number of an English magazine called Foreign Affairs. It is the official organ of the Union of Democratic Control, a British organization composed of trade councils, labor unions, teachers' associations, and so forth. They have a total of more than 260 organizations affiliated together. I will not read all of it, although it is all worthy of consideration; but speaking of the treaty, it says:

> The treaty is repudiated by liberal thought all over the world. Its terms constitute a palpable breach of faith, inasmuch as they violate the conditions upon which the armistice was signed.

I think I have proven that by the official records, Mr. President, this afternoon—

> The treaty is repudiated by liberal thought all over the world. Its terms constitute a palpable breach of faith, inasmuch as they violate the conditions upon which the armistice was signed. Its ratification is a political unreality. Large portions of it are literally incapable of fulfillment. It seeks to make of a great people an outcast among the nations. Reaction against it is certain. The moral support of the world, withdrawn from imperialist Germany by her invasion of Belgium, passes henceforth from the Allies to the German democratic Republic.
>
> The men who betrayed their peoples and the world by dictating this dishonorable and violent settlement will be execrated by posterity.
>
> To labor for its revision, and for the expulsion from power of the men and governments guilty of transmitting such a heritage of damnation to posterity becomes henceforth the duty of all sane influences in every country. For the latter have repeated, but even with less justification, and on a larger scale, the enormous blunder committed by the German militarists at Brest-Litovsk. Their sin is unforgivable.
>
> No man who realizes what this so-called "peace" treaty means, and the bitter mockery of the peace celebrations in connection with it, can pass a group of children playing in the street or in the fields without saying to himself, "Upon these innocents four men at Versailles have passed sentence of death; and that sentence will in due course be executed if I and my neighbors do not intervene to prevent it."

Mr. President, from the depths of my heart I believe that the last sentence I have read from that editorial is absolutely true. As I look over the pages of history and see the crimes which in the past have been committed by nations simply because they had the power, and as I see how in God's own time the works of human beings, although it seemed they were invincible at the time, were afterwards made to look foolish and to appear silly from their weakness, and how in the years that have followed those works have been overthrown, I can not help but feel that the approval of this treaty will fasten upon posterity future wars which will bring suffering and death to millions and millions of those who shall follow us.

Why, Mr. President, about the only word that comes to Senators concerning this treaty—at least from honest sources—comes from men and women who honestly want to rid the world of war, who are conscientious in their desire to make a peace which will be permanent. They have been told by a few of the leaders of the world who have drafted the treaty, including our own President, that it means a permanent peace; and they believe what they have been told. They do not realize that bound up in the folds of this treaty, which is as long as the Holy Bible, are innumerable Alsace-Lorraines, are many other instances where the very law of God has been violated, and where every provision of the 14 points has been cast to the winds and nullified. It is based on crime; it must fail; it can not endure.

Mr. President, the history of this world, the history of civilization, is a history of progress. From barbarism up to now we have climbed as the result of one contest after another. The world is bound to go on; we can not tie it up in a strait-jacket; we can not put a fence around every country and say that this shall be the line now and eternally. If we could do that, in a thousand years from now we would not have advanced an inch from where we are now. If that had been done before 1776, if we were here at all, we would be subjects of Great Britain.

A good many people have been made to believe, falsely, I think, wrongly in all cases, that the rejection of this treaty means more war right now. There is not anything to that contention; but there are things that are even worse than war, as much as I dislike war, as much as I abhor it, as far as I would go to avoid it.

Mr. President, there was not any danger of the peace conference being dissolved if America had demanded what was right in this and in other particulars, and it would not have been confined to Shantung alone. There would have been other benefits. The very fact that the President has agreed to this, the very fact that it has been put in the treaty and agreed to by the representatives of these several governments, by the great powers, has emboldened nations to take steps that they would have been afraid to take in the face of the world if it had not been for such an agreement.

We read in the papers, since the armistice was signed, about a treaty between Persia and England. That was concluded on the 9th day of August. The preamble says:

Preamble: In virtue of the close ties of friendship which have existed between the two Governments in the past and in the conviction that it is in the essential and mutual interests of both in future that these ties should be cemented and that the progress and prosperity of Persia should be promoted to the utmost, it is hereby agreed between the Persian Government on the one hand and His Britannic Majesty's minister, acting on behalf of his Government, upon the other, as follows:

Let me pause there to say what this editorial writer says—that in all the history of the world, where a great nation was about to cut the throat of a weak nation, it always started in by professing friendship for the weak nation. In the treaties to which I am going to refer between Japan and China, and later between Japan and Korea, that is true in every instance; and here comes England, now, with a great profession of friendship for Persia, and she practically takes her over.

This is article 1:

The British Government reiterates in the most categorical manner the undertakings which have been repeatedly given in the past to respect absolutely the independence and integrity of Persia.

England, as Hamlet says, "protests too much." We might not doubt her virtue if she were not continually asserting it and calling it to our attention.

Second. The British Government will supply—at the cost of the Persian Government the services of whatever expert advisers may, after consultation between the two Governments, be considered necessary for the several departments of the Persian administration.

Listen—

"After consultation" means after English representatives decide what is best, not for Persia but for England. That is what will be done at the expense of the taxpayers of Persia.

These advisers shall be engaged on contract and endowed with adequate powers, the nature of which shall be the matter of agreement between the Persian Government and the advisers.

And there will not be very much for Persia to do except to sign where the advisers tell her, and when.

Third. The British Government will supply at the cost of the Persian Government such officers and such munitions and equipment of modern type as may be adjudged necessary by a joint commission of military experts, British and Persian—

Think of a Persian military expert in consultation with a British military expert! Of course, it is a travesty. Everybody knows that it means that Great Britain will do what she pleases, and that Persia will acquiesce—which shall assemble forthwith for the purpose of estimating the needs of Persia in respect to the formation of a uniform force which the Persian Government proposes to create for the establishment and preservation of order in the country and on its frontiers.

For the purpose of financing the reforms indicated in clauses 2 and 3 of this agreement the British Government offers to provide for or arrange a substantial loan.

Then, Mr. President, it is provided in the treaty that Great Britain shall loan to Persia for this purpose $10,000,000 at 7 per cent interest. Reduced dov n to a nutshell, it means that England will take charge of Persia, appoint the officers, put in the military experts, send in the munitions that she needs, have them all under her control, make Persia pay for it, and in order to let Persia pay she will loan her the money at 7 per cent. It is the entering of the camel's head in the Persian tent. It will never go backward; and the history of those things in the past will be repeated there, in the face of the league of nations and in the face of this great treaty that they said was going to bring about perpetual peace!

And where does England get her money to loan at 7 per cent? Why, she gets it from us at four and a quarter. [Laughter.] We are loaning money to England, and I have been told—although I have not been told officially, and it may not be true—I have been told that the interest is due and has not been paid on what she owes us. But we are loaning money to England. We got the money by going out before the taxpayers of the United States and coercing them, in many instances, into subscribing for bonds. That goes to England, a great share of it, several billions, and England gives it to Persia and gets 7 per cent, besides practically taking Persia under her wing. Do not forget, Mr. President, that the commerce that will grow out of this will enrich English merchants as well as the profit on the money will enrich the British treasury.

Mr. President, it may be said that that has not anything to do with Shantung, and directly that is true. I have mentioned it because I believe it has an important bearing on the treaty at large, on the proposition of entering into this treaty that is laid before us. It shows, I think, that the great nations, of which Great Britain was the leader, have concocted this scheme, by which she is going to gobble up all the loose parts of the earth, and while they are coming to us and getting our money and asking our people to bow down in toil to produce it they are going to profit by it in taking advantage of a weak nation like Persia, just as Japan took advantage of Korea.

If at this conference our President had been true to the principles that he enunciated, and which the other nations agreed to as a basis for a peace treaty, England would never have dared fly in the face of public sentiment of the world with this disgraceful rape of Persia. If the treaty that we now have before us as it refers to China was not such a parallel to what England is now doing in Persia, she never would have dared take the step. The treaty before us gives her a precedent. She will at least be able to say her taking of Persia is founded upon the precedent established by this treaty in permitting Japan to take China, and she can no doubt truthfully add that her treatment of Persia will be better and more humane than the treatment which everybody knows Japan will accord to China.

If we had stood upon the contract that was made between all the nations when the armistice was signed and insisted that we should have an honorable treaty, this treaty with Persia never would have seen the light of day. But they started in at Versailles with a crime, with many crimes, and instead of overthrowing the old methods of diplomacy, which we said we fought to overthrow, we reestablished them, and thereby gave license to any nation to go out and practice the same old cruel methods that they have practiced since the days of barbarism.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to read some extracts from various treaties that have been made between China and Japan, and between Japan and various other countries, in which the independence of China was not only recognized but guaranteed. It is important to know that all nations, including our own, practically all of our great allies, have made various treaties in which they have practically guaranteed the integrity of the Chinese Nation, and that this treaty is a violation of everyone of those sacred agreements. It is important in that respect; but I call your particular attention to it because I intend to follow it later on with quotations from treaties that were made between Japan and Korea, and show that the course that Japan is taking now with China is exactly and precisely the same thing that she did with Korea, and that she is pursuing such a course that if you should strike out of the various treaties the word "China" and insert "Korea" you would have almost a reproduction of the treaties that she made with Korea. Everybody knows what happened to Korea; and if Japan is pursuing the same course now it will not be long before the same thing will happen to China that happened to Korea.

Our own Secretary of State, Mr. Hay, sent a circular telegram to the diplomatic representatives of the United States at Berlin, Brussels, The Hague, Lisbon, London, Madrid, Paris, Rome, St. Petersburg, Tokyo, and Vienna, July 3, 1900, and in that he says:

The policy of the Government of the United States is to seek a solution which may bring about permanent safety and peace to China, preserve China's territorial and administrative entity, protect all rights guaranteed to friendly powers by treaty and international laws, and safeguard for the world the principle of equal and impartial trade with all parts of the Chinese Empire.

Lord Salisbury, English prime minister, in an interview with the United States ambassador to England, July 7, 1900, "expressed himself most emphatically as concurring" in the policy of the United States as set forth in the above telegram.

In a statement made in the English House of Commons August 2, 1900, regarding the policy of the British Government, it was declared:

Her Majesty's Government are opposed to any partition of China, and believe that they are in accord with other powers in this declaration.

August 12, 1905, Great Britain and Japan entered into a treaty, and it reads in part as follows:

Preamble. The Governments of Great Britain and Japan * * * have agreed upon the following articles, which have for their objects:
(a) The consolidation and maintenance of the general peace in the regions of Eastern Asia and of India;
(b) The preservation of the common interests of all the powers in China by insuring the independence and the integrity of the Chinese Empire and the principle of equal opportunities for the commerce and industry of all nations in China.

In a dispatch from the Marquis of Lansdowne to His Majesty's minister at St. Petersburg, September 6, 1905, this language is used:

His Majesty's Government believe that they may count upon the good will and the support of all the powers in endeavoring to maintain peace in Eastern Asia and in seeking to uphold the integrity and independence of the Chinese Empire and the principle of equal opportunity,

And so forth.

On September 5, 1905, Japan made a treaty with Russia, article 3 of which reads as follows:

Japan and Russia mutually engage—

I will skip the first engagement, because it has nothing to do with China—

2. To restore entirely and completely to the exclusive administration of China all portions of Manchuria now in the occupation or under the control of their troops, with the exception of the territory above mentioned. * * *

* * * * * * *

4. Japan and Russia reciprocally engage not to obstruct any general measures common to all countries which China may take for the development of the commerce and industry of Manchuria.

China and Japan, on December 22, 1905, made a treaty, article 12 of which reads as follows:

The two Governments "engage that in all matters dealt with in the treaty signed this day or in the present agreement the most favorable treatment shall be reciprocally extended."

France and Japan made a treaty June 10, 1907, in which this language is used:

The Governments of Japan and France, being agreed to respect the independence and integrity of China, as well as the principle of equal treatment in that country. * * *

Japan and Russia on July 30, 1907, made a treaty, article 2 of which reads as follows:

The two high contracting parties recognize the independence and the territorial integrity of China and the principle of equal opportunity in whatever concerns the commerce and industry of all nations in that Empire, and engage to sustain and defend the status quo and respect for this principle by all the pacific means within their reach.

In an exchange of notes between Japan and the United States in November, 1908, it is said:

It is the wish of the two Governments * * *

2. They are also determined to preserve the common interests of all powers in China by supporting by all pacific means at their disposal the independence and the integrity of China and the principle of equal opportunity * * * in that Empire.

On July 4, 1910, Japan and Russia made a treaty, article 2 of which reads:

Each * * * engages to maintain and respect the status quo in Manchuria resulting from the treaties, conventions, and other arrangements concluded up to this day between Japan and Russia, or between either of those two powers and China.

On the 13th of July, 1911, Great Britain and Japan made a treaty, the preamble of which reads as follows:

The two Governments declare as among their objects: The preservation of the common interests of all powers in China by insuring the independence and integrity of the Chinese Empire and the principle of equal opportunities for the commerce and industry of all nations in China.

Mr. President, in the face of that, when the war was on, and after Japan had taken the German possessions, and had them in her possession, and all the rest of the Allies were fighting against Germany and her allies, one morning, out of a clear sky, came the demand made by Japan upon China known as her famous 21 demands, which, in effect, demanded the surrender at least of all foreign affairs and many internal affairs of the Chinese Government to Japan. That is another illustration that Japan did not have at heart a desire to very loyally support the Allies' cause, because while the other allies were struggling with the Kaiser's forces in Europe, she endangered the cause by practically declaring war against China unless she submitted, and that would have driven China, regardless of her wish, into the arms of Germany.

The importance of this act as it relates to Japan's fidelity to the allied cause can not be overestimated. These 21 demands were made, for instance, without there being even indirectly any dispute or controversy between the two nations. They were made without any cause, without any reason, at a time when all the allied nations except Japan were anxious to get China into the war on the side of the Allies. Had China refused to consider them or to make any concessions to Japan, Japan—as her ultimatum, which she soon thereafter gave, shows—would have made it impossible for China afterwards to come in as an ally. In addition it would, as I have said, regardless of her wish, made her an ally of Germany. This conduct of Japan can not square with loyalty to our cause.

On December 3, 1914, the Japanese minister at Peking, Mr. Hioki, was handed at Tokyo the text of the 21 demands for presentation to the Chinese Government. They were divided into five groups, and it is interesting, Mr. President, to note the instructions that the Japanese Government gave to its ambassador to carry out the purpose of these 21 demands. Those instructions contained the following language:

In order to provide for the readjustment of affairs consequent on the Japanese-German War and for the purpose of insuring a lasting peace in the Far East by strengthening the position of the Japanese Empire, the Imperial Government have resolved to approach the Chinese Government with a view to conclude treaties and agreements.

Mr. President, let us look at that language just a moment. It says "In order to provide for the readjustment of affairs," and also to insure a lasting peace. How were those objects to be attained? To get a lasting peace by strengthening the position of the Imperial Japanese Government.

It is because Japan wanted to strengthen herself that she took that opportunity, when all the world was at war, to make these demands upon China.

There had been no quarrel. There had been no controversy between Japan and China. No one knew that this was coming out of a clear sky. A great part of the world was engaged in a war at that time. Our Government was not in and China was also neutral. In that situation Japan, without any warning, without any notice to anybody, made 21 demands upon the Chinese Government. I will put those in the RECORD later, and comment on them. But at the present time I am calling attention to the language of the instructions that the Japanese Government gave to its ambassador when he was instructed to present those demands.

Later on, in these same instructions, this language is used:

Believing it absolutely essential, for strengthening Japan's position in eastern Asia as well as for the preservation of the general interest of that region, to secure China's adherence to the foregoing proposals, the Imperial Government are determined to attain this end by all means within their power. You are, therefore, requested to use your best endeavor in the conduct of the negotiations, which are hereby placed in your hands.

Seizing an opportunity, Mr. President, when nobody else was in condition to object, she pounces upon China, and makes demands which, if complied with, would have meant practically the nullification of the Chinese Empire. She did it at a time when she knew no one could come to the relief of China, when the whole world was at war, and she did it notwithstanding the fact that if China had refused to do what she had demanded, and had gone to war, it would have put another ally in the arms of Germany.

Mr. President, while most of the Senators are probably familiar with the 21 points, I think I ought to read an analysis of them, and I am reading now from the analysis that was submitted to the peace conference by the Chinese representatives. I might say these demands are in five groups. Group I deals with the Province of Shantung, which is greater in area and in population than the whole of England, besides being a piece of China, packed with memories of Confucius, hallowed as the cradle of Chinese culture.

The first demand of this group insists on the Chinese Government engaging to "give full assent to all matters upon which the Japanese Government may hereafter agree with the German Government relating to the disposition of all rights, interests, and concessions which Germany, by virtue of treaties or otherwise, possesses in relation to the Province of Shantung.

I will have occasion later on to comment on this language when I come to the treaty between Japan and China, made in pursuance of these demands, in which this language is practically repeated.

At the date of the 21 demands, the "rights, interests, and concessions" of Germany in Shantung included the leased territory of Kiaochow with the harbor of Ysingtao, the trans-Shantung railway, known as the Tsingtau-Chinan Railway of Kiaochow, Tsinanfu railway, and other railway rights, as well as mining rights in the Province.

They were the fruits of 16 years of German aggression in Shantung Province. And their transfer to Japan means that the Teutonic methods, which enabled Germany to dominate and exploit the Province, will pass into the hands of a power with a great military base already standing on Chinese soil at Port Arthur.

The meaning of this Japanese succession to German rights in Shantung is best illustrated in the railway situation arising out of Japan's exercise of two of the "other railway rights" that were vested in Germany.

Although Japan's claim now before the peace conference, in so far as it relates to China, is confined to the "railways and other rights possessed by Germany in respect of Shantung Province," she has pressed on China the acceptance of the view that her first demand in Group I—which is substantially repeated in her conference claim—covers the German rights to finance, construct, and supply the materials for two lines of railway running into the two other Provinces of Kiangsu and Chihli, though starting in Shantung.

If the peace conference concede this Japanese claim, the following formidable situation will be created: Through the trans-Shantung railway, with its western or inland terminus at the provincial capital of Chinanfu where it flanks the northern section of the Tientsin-Pukow railway—built by the Germans—Japan will at once dominate the whole of Shantung as well as the northern half of this important trunk line. Then, by financing, constructing, and supplying the materials for the first of the aforesaid "two lines of railway"—i. e., a line from the city of Kaomi, on the trans-Shantung railway, to a point strategically dominating the southern or British constructed section of the same Tientsin-Pukow railway—Japan will practically master the great railroad linking Tientsin (the port of Peking) and North China with the Yangtze Valley and South China.

The seven demands in Group II exact in favor of Japan and her nationals a series of preferential rights, interests, and privileges in south Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia calculated at once to increase the existing difficulties which seriously hamper effective Chinese administration in these two areas and to develop a situation facilitating the extension thereto of the territorial system which has transformed Korea into a Japanese province.

GROUP III. JAPAN'S IRON POLICY IN CHINA.

Besides involving the violation of the territorial integrity and sovereignty of China in Shantung, south Manchuria, and eastern inner Mongolia, the 21 demands also encroach on Chinese economic independence by their exaction in Group III of an undertaking with respect to the Han-Yeh-Ping Co., or iron works, well calculated to lead to ultimate Japanese acquisition of the most important industrial enterprise in the Yangtze Valley.

In its final form as insisted upon in the Japanese ultimatum the undertaking reads that if in future the Han-Yeh-Ping Co. and the Japanese capitalists agree upon cooperation, the Chinese Government, in view of the intimate relations subsisting between the Japanese capitalists and the said company, will forthwith give its permission. The Chinese Government further agrees not to confiscate the said company nor, without the consent of the Japanese capitalists, to convert it into a state enterprise nor cause it to borrow and use foreign capital other than Japanese.

I will not read further from this presentation made by the Chinese representatives, because the reading of the demands themselves, which I shall print, show clearly that Japan was pursuing the same course with China she had followed in Korea and meant that Japan's ultimate intention was the complete subjugation of China.

Mr. President, if you will really gather the idea of these demands, you will find that, taken altogether, they absolutely took away from China not only the right to govern herself but the right to conduct business in her own Empire, and gave to Japan a bill of sale of everything she had. The demand from which I have just read says that a certain corporation, financed to some extent, as I understand, by the Japanese Government, but altogether by Japanese capital, and being very close to the Japanese Government, had to be allowed certain concessions and was to be allowed to do certain things, being practically given extreme control in a particular line of industry in which it was engaged.

I want to read what Baron Makino, one of the Japanese statesmen, said. He was a member of the peace delegation at Versailles. He said:

China has the raw material. We have need for raw material, and we have the capital to invest with China in its development for use by ourselves as well as by China. We have to rely—in a large measure upon the rich natural resources in China in order to assure our own governmental existence.

He said—

That explains why these demands were made. He has left no doubt as to why they were made. He said, "China has the raw material; we need it; we will get it," and from official instructions given to the ambassador who presented the 21 demands, we learn that they said, "We are determined to have it at whatever cost."

Mr. President, there are a good many similarities, and I am reminded of a couple now, between Germany and Japan. When Germany wanted to attack France the shortest way was across Belgium, and so, without any right and in violation of every national precedent and law, she simply went across Belgium. When Japan wanted to attack Germany over in China she did the same thing. She crossed 150 miles of Chinese territory in order to get at Germany, and she did not have to do it because England, with the small army that she had there in assisting in that attack on the Germans, landed her army and made her fight and attack upon soil that was in possession of the Germans at the time. So while we condemn Germany, and rightfully, too, because it is acknowledged to be a crime against civilization and humanity, we must remember that the great Japanese Government did not hesitate to do the same thing in the same war.

Germany 50 years ago took Alsace-Lorraine. Why? Because Alsace-Lorraine had iron and Germany needed the iron in her business and she took it. What do we get from the Japanese statement? "China has the raw material, and in a large measure we have to rely," said the minister, "upon the rich natural resources in China in order to insure our own economic existence." So while the world was at war Japan landed troops on the soil of a neutral territory, just as neutral as Belgium, marched them across that territory without the consent, and without even asking the consent, of the Government—I believe Germany did ask consent and it was refused, but Japan did not even go that far—and she did it because of one of the reasons, as her minister says, that "China has the raw material and we want it; it is necessary for our economic existence."

The demands contained in Group V were postponed, as the official correspondence between China and Japan will show, but they are pending now. They have never been withdrawn. Japan has never said she would withdraw them; she has never intimated that she would withdraw them. All of Group V, however, were postponed with the exception of one, and then Japan delivered an ultimatum to China, who had refused to concede the right of Japan to control and administer her governmental affairs. That ultimatum was delivered to China on the 7th day of May, 1915, and said:

In case the Imperial Japanese Government failed to receive from the Chinese Government before 6 p. m. of May 9—satisfactory response to their advice, they will take such independent action as they may deem necessary to meet the situation.

Two days—

When that ultimatum was delivered, Japan already had several thousand soldiers landed on Chinese soil to enforce it. China knew it. Helpless as she was, she had to concede, and the treaty of 1915 between China and Japan, that has been called to my attention earlier in the discussion by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], was the result.

In considering that treaty we ought to remember the world conditions that existed then. An ultimatum given to China and she was given only two days to reply. Mr. President, if there had been a dispute, if there had been a claim that Japan owned something over in China, there would have been some reason for this difficulty, but there never was even a pretense that China had not fulfilled her duty to Japan, there was not even a pretense that Japan had any property or rights there. It was just as bare-faced as though to-morrow morning we would wake up and find that Canada had demanded that Maine should be turned over to Canada and would give us only two days to comply. There was no quarrel, there was no war, there had been no dispute, and there was no claim even by Japan, and to say that a treaty drafted under those circumstances should be given a moment's consideration by any honest people or any honest tribunal is a travesty upon justice.

Mr. President, I think the American people ought to know—and so far as I know they have had no opportunity as yet to know—some of the secret correspondence that went on between the Russian ambassador to Japan and his Government. Mr. Krupensky was the ambassador of Russia at Tokio, and on the 16th day of November, 1917, he sent a dispatch to his Government, of which I shall read a part. Speaking of the conversation he had with the Japanese foreign minister, he says:

In reply to my question as to the credibility of the rumors alleging that Japan is prepared to sell to the Chinese Government a considerable quantity of arms and munitions, Viscount Motono—confirmed them and added that the Peking Government had promised not to use the arms against the southerners. It was evident from the minister's words, however, that this promise possessed only the value of a formal justification of this sale, infringing, as the latter does, the principle of nonintervention in the internal Chinese feuds proclaimed by Japan herself. It is most likely that the Japanese are aiming principally at obtaining the privilege of rearming the entire Chinese Army and at making China dependent in the future on Japanese arsenals and the supply of munitions from Japan. The arms to be supplied are estimated at 30,000,000 yen. At the same time Japan intends establishing an arsenal in China for the manufacture of war materials.

He was the minister of foreign affairs of Japan—

Mr. President, this official dispatch, sent by Mr. Krupensky to his government, gives undoubtedly his honest conception of what the Japanese Government intended to do. The Japanese demands on China were pending at that time, and a reading of them will show that among other things Japan demanded that the practical control of the manufacture of arms in China be turned over to Japan; that Japan be given the right to establish arsenals in China and to control them, which would give Japan practically the right to say what arms China should use and to supply to China what munitions she pleased and to handle them and use them as she pleased. It would have made the Chinese Army, whatever that might be or might become, absolutely dependent for its very existence upon Japanese officials and Japanese generals.

In another dispatch that Krupensky sent he says:

The Japanese are manifesting more and more clearly a tendency to interpret the special position of Japan in China, inter alia, in the sense that other powers must not undertake in China any political steps without previously exchanging views with Japan on the subject—a condition that would to some extent establish a Japanese control over the foreign affairs of China.

In that connection we ought to remember that one of the decisive acts preceding the annexation of Korea by Japan was the conclusion of a Japanese-Korean treaty in November, 1905, vesting in the Japanese Government the direction and control of foreign affairs. That was one of the specific steps which Japan took in getting control of Korea. Here she is continuing the same step in China. Again reading from Krupensky's official letter:

On the other hand, the Japanese Government does not attach much importance to its recognition of the principle of the open door and the integrity of China.

There you are getting the truth; there you are getting the judgment of an unbiased ambassador in an official letter telling his Government the conditions that exist in the capital of China. Let me repeat it:

On the other hand, the Japanese Government does not attach much importance to its recognition of the principle of the open door and the integrity of China.

Japan had made the various treaties which I have read; she had officially agreed to the Hay doctrine of the open door; but now we find from the secret correspondence of an official of the Russian Government, giving his Government the true situation in Japan, that he states that Japan does not pay much, if any, attention to those things:

The Japanese Government does not attach much importance to its recognition of the principle of the open door and the integrity of China, regarding it as merely a repetition of the assurance repeatedly given by it earlier to other powers and implying no new restrictions for the Japanese policy in China. It is therefore quite possible that at some future time there may arise in this connection misunderstanding between the United States and Japan. The minister for foreign affairs confirmed to-day in conversation with me that in the negotiations by Viscount Ishii at Washington the question at issue is not some special concession to Japan in these or other parts of China, but Japan's special position in China as a whole.

I think that dispatch ought to be rather interesting to our Government, to note the impression that the Russian ambassador got as to what Japan thought of the agreement that she had made, among other powers with us, as to the integrity of China. She did not regard it as being much of a stumbling block. Now, Krupensky sent another dispatch after the Lansing-Ishii agreement had been made. From the dispatch it seems he was referring to a conversation he had with Viscount Motono, Japanese minister of foreign affairs, and he asked him:

Whether he did not fear that in the future misunderstandings might arise from the different interpretations by Japan and the United States of the terms "special position" and "special interests" of Japan in China.

And Krupensky said in reference to that in his official letter to his home Government as follows:

I gain the impression from the words of the minister that he is conscious of the possibility of misunderstandings in the future, but is of the opinion that in such a case Japan would have better means at her disposal for carrying into effect her interpretation than the United States.

Mr. President, the Lansing-Ishii agreement between our Government and Japan was entered into in November, 1917, while the war was in progress. That was after Japan had made secret treaties in February, 1917, with Great Britain and France by which she was to get Shangtung and the islands of Germany north of the Equator. Remember that it was subsequent to that time that the agreement was reached; and we find that Mr. Krupensky, the Russian ambassador, in conversation with the Japanese foreign minister at Tokyo, gains the impression that Japan expects a misunderstanding because of a difference of interpretation of the Ishii-Lansing agreement in the future, but she thinks she will be in better position than we will be to enforce her understanding. That agreement was made without Japan notifying Lansing or our Government that Japan had a secret agreement in regard to China, which, I think, was a violation of good faith. There can be no doubt about the truth of that statement, for Mr. Lansing testified before the Foreign Relations Committee in the hearings on this treaty that when the agreement between himself and the Japanese Government was reached he had no knowledge of the secret treaties to which I have referred, that might have a very important bearing upon the Lansing-Ishii agreement; and now we have the official correspondence of the Russian ambassador at Tokyo stating that he gets the impression from conversations with the foreign minister of Japan that Japan expects a difference in interpretation to arise. She was looking forward to it. She made the agreement with Mr. Lansing with her pockets filled with secret treaties, and even when she made it she was conscious that she was going to construe it differently from what she knew was going to be our construction. Yet we are asked here to approve a treaty that will give Japan a greater right to enforce her understanding.

Senators, I am sorry the map which was on the wall yesterday has been removed. If you will look at the map of the Pacific Ocean you will realize that the giving of the German island possessions north of the Equator to Japan means that Japan is brought thousands of miles nearer to our coast. When she gets those islands fortified she will not be so distant from us as she has been heretofore, and she will, as Krupensky says in his official correspondence, be at least in better shape to enforce her demands than she would be now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator, I presume, realizes that Japan will not be allowed to fortify those islands. She merely receives them in trust for the league of nations, and no fortifications will be permitted.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. In connection with the suggestion the Senator from Nebraska has made in reference to the position which Japan has in the league of nations, I wish to read a translation of an editorial in the Niroku, a Japanese newspaper, the translation having been published in the Japanese Advertiser of May 9, 1919. It reads as follows:

The imperial family of Japan is as worthy of respect as God and is the embodiment of benevolence and justice. It is the parent not only of her 60,000,000, but of all mankind on earth. The league of nations, proposed to save mankind from the horrors of war, can only attain its real object by placing the imperial family of Japan at its head, for to attain its object the league must have a strong punitive force and a supernational and supperracial character; and this force can only be found in the imperial family of Japan.

So, in the Japanese view of things, appealing to the league of nations would be to appeal to the imperial family of Japan.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator knows that some very foolish things are also printed in some very foolish American newspapers.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I happen to know about that; some of them are printed in a newspaper I know of in Omaha.

Mr. President, it may be that Japan will not fortify these islands; but when I realize that the representatives of all these great nations stood on that rostrum with their pockets full of secret treaties without disclosing them to us, and when I know that they brought China into the war without letting her know that they had already agreed to carve her up into mincemeat, I do not know how many secret agreements still exist and, regardless of anything that may be said in the treaty, may be carried out, and I am led somewhat to that conclusion by the fact that England has just entered into this disgraceful treaty with Persia by which she is going to take her over without regard to the league of nations.

I want to tell you, Mr. President, that I started in this thing in good faith. No man had more honest and hopeful intentions than I had when that peace conference met at Versailles. No man in all this world was more anxious to have a permanent peace than I. No man under any flag would sacrifice more according to what he had to sacrifice than I would to have brought about a league that was honest and honorable. I believed that our allies were honest and honorable. I went out in the liberty loan campaigns, for the Y. M. C. A., for the Red Cross, all over this country proclaiming that doctrine to the people, and I believed it from the bottom of my heart. I thought they were square; I thought they were fair; and when the league of nations part of the treaty was first given to the world, while I disliked some of it very much, I was almost on the point of swallowing it. I was willing to sacrifice almost anything to get the right kind of a league of nations. To me it seemed that article 10 was almost damnable. I thought that the article providing for disarmament might not mean anything, and other things the same way; and yet I said to myself, "They are honest, we are honest, and if all of us are going into this honestly I can overlook a good many things that do not seem right."

Later, however, the treaty came. You will remember that the league of nations was given to the world first. Later it developed what they had done in making the treaty; and although it seemed to me that there were a lot of sins even in the league as they had promulgated it, when the treaty came forth it made the league look like a banner of purity compared to the crime, the deceit, the wrong, and the sin that was bound up in that treaty.

When I discovered that these same men who had talked eloquently here to us had in their pockets secret treaties when they did it; when I discovered that they pulled out those secret treaties at the peace table, in contravention and in contradiction to the very agreement that they all made when we entered that peace conference; when I saw that they were demanding that these secret treaties be legalized; and, more than all, Mr. President, when I saw our own President lie down and give in and submit to the disgrace, the dishonor, the crime, and the sin of that treaty, then I said: "Great God! I do not believe I want to have any kind of dealings with any of you people. I am suspicious of you all the way through. You are dishonest. You have not been fair with us or with the world. You have been wicked. You have concluded to act here just the same as though you were acting in barbarous days after proclaiming to us and after we had believed that you were in earnest and fighting for democracy to build a peace, a world peace, a league of nations that would bring peace and happiness forever to a suffering people."

Now, Mr. President, I want to ask permission to print without reading, in connection with this Krupensky correspondence, the Lansing-Ishii agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRANCE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE LANSING-ISHII AGREEMENT.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 2, 1917.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to communicate herein my understanding of the agreement reached by us in our recent conversations touching the questions of mutual interest to our Governments relating to the Republic of China.

In order to silence mischievous reports that have from time to time been circulated, it is believed by us that a public announcement once more of the desires and intentions shared by our two Governments with regard to China is advisable.

The Governments of the United States and Japan recognize that territorial propinquity creates special relations between countries, and, consequently, the Government of the United States recognizes that Japan has special interests in China, particularly in the part to which her possessions are contiguous.

The territorial sovereignty of China, nevertheless, remains unimpaired, and the Government of the United States has every confidence in the repeated assurances of the Imperial Japanese Government that while geographical position gives Japan such special interests, they have no desire to discriminate against the trade of other nations or to disregard the commercial rights granted by China in treaties with other powers.

The Governments of the United States and Japan deny that they have any purpose to infringe in any way the independence or territorial integrity of China, and they declare, furthermore, that they always adhere to the principle of the so-called "open-door" or equal opportunity for commerce and industry in China.

Moreover, they mutually declare that they are opposed to the acquisition by any government of any special rights or privileges that would affect the independence or territorial integrity of China or that would deny to the subjects or citizens of any country the full enjoyment of equal opportunity in the commerce and industry of China.

I shall be glad to have Your Excellency confirm this understanding of the agreement reached by us.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurance of my highest consideration.

ROBERT LANSING.

His Excellency Viscount KIKUJIRO ISHII,
Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of Japan on Special Mission.

(The ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of Japan, on special mission, to the Secretary of State.)

THE SPECIAL MISSION OF JAPAN,
Washington, November 2, 1917.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note to-day, communicating to me your understanding of the agreement reached by us in our recent conversations touching the questions of mutual interest to our Governments relating to the Republic of China.

I am happy to be able to confirm to you, under authorization of my Government, the understanding in question set forth in the following terms:

In order to silence mischievous reports that have from time to time been circulated, it is believed by us that a public announcement once more of the desires and intentions shared by our two Governments with regard to China is advisable.

The Governments of Japan and the United States recognize that territorial propinquity creates special relations between countries, and consequently the Government of the United States recognizes that Japan has special interests in China, particularly in the part to which her possessions are contiguous.

The territorial sovereignty of China, nevertheless, remains unimpaired, and the Government of the United States has every confidence in the repeated assurance of the Imperial Japanese Government that while geographical position gives Japan such special interests, they have no desire to discriminate against the trade of other nations or to disregard the commercial rights heretofore granted by China in treaties with other powers.

The Governments of Japan and the United States deny that they have any purpose to infringe in any way the independence or territorial integrity of China, and they declare, furthermore, that they always adhere to the principle of the so-called "open door" or equal opportunity for commerce and industry in China.

Moreover, they mutually declare that they are opposed to the acquisition by any Government of any special rights or privileges that would affect the independence or territorial integrity of China or that would deny to the subjects or citizens of any country the full enjoyment of equal opportunity in the commerce and industry of China.

I take this opportunity to convey to you, sir, the assurances of my highest consideration.

K. ISHII,
Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of Japan on Special Mission.

HON. ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, Mr. President, I want to read from a statement made at the peace conference by the representatives of the Chinese Government. They say:

It is also submitted that but for the attitude of Japan—inspired largely, it seems, by her desire to replace Germany in Shantung—China would have been associated with the Allies in August, 1914, and again in November, 1915, in the struggle against the Central Powers.

In August, 1914, the Chinese Government—

Now, just let us pause there a moment. August, 1914, was when the war commenced.

In August, 1914, the Chinese Government expressed their desire to declare war against Germany and to take part in the Anglo-Japanese operations against the German garrison at Tsingtao. The proposal was not pressed, owing to the intimation reaching the Chinese Government that the proposed Chinese participation was likely to create "complications" with a certain power.

Everybody knows that that "certain power" was Japan.

If that does not demonstrate that Japan's loyalty was merely skin deep, I do not know what it does demonstrate.

Reading further from the same article:

Again in November, 1915, the Chinese Government expressed their desire to enter the war in association with the Allies, but the Japanese Government opposed the proposal.

Eventually, however, the Chinese Government addressed a note of warning to Germany on February 9, 1917, severed diplomatic relations with the latter on March 14 following, and finally declared war against Germany and Austria on August 14, 1917, the opposition of the Japanese Government having been removed in the circumstances indicated in another dispatch written by M. Krupensky to the Russian Government on February 8, 1917, reporting on his efforts to induce Japan to withdraw her opposition to China's entry into the war on the side of the Allies.

Mr. President, China declared war against Germany August 14, 1917. She wanted to declare war in August, 1914, at the beginning of the war, but did not do it because of Japan's influence. She wanted to do it again in November, 1915, but did not do it because Japan objected, and the Allies did not want her in without Japan's consent. There was a great deal of correspondence, and I am going to read another letter from Krupensky later, if I do not forget it, showing what he was trying to do, and how he was trying to get Japan to consent that China should come into the war on our side.

My God, Mr. President! Can there be any doubt about the desirability of having China come in? Here was the war, engaged in which were nearly all of the nations of the earth, trying to get every power in, big and little, to help in whatever way they could. Here was China, wanting to come in. She wanted to furnish men to take the German possessions in China and was denied the privilege by the Allies because Japan wanted to keep her out. She wanted to come in in 1915, but Japan kept her out again; but in 1917 Japan withdrew her objections. Why? Because of that secret agreement made in January and February, 1917, that I have already read. In the meantime the other Governments were trying to get Japan to consent, and Japan started out and got this secret agreement with England and France and Italy and Russia; and when she got that she said: "All right; let her come in. I have got her nailed up, anyway."

Now, put that up against Japan, and what have you? Engaged in a great struggle, one of the things that was vital was ships—we all knew that—ships to meet the destruction of the German submarines. Articles now appearing in the papers by the American admiral who was over there and had charge of the American Navy disclose now publicly the fact that about this time there was a feeling of great distress among the officials all through the British Navy and the American Navy. They were afraid they were not going to be able to meet the destructive methods of the German submarines. They could not build ships fast enough to do it. Night and day, everywhere, they were urging more ships. Now, here was China. In her harbors were a lot of German ships, interned. China was neutral; they had not let her come in; Japan had kept her out, and they needed every ship that China had. Do you think Japan had the interests of the Allies' cause at heart? Does it look as though Japan was loyal to the cause for which more than 50,000 American boys gave their lives? Does it look as though she was doing what she could, when they needed ships, to keep China out when we could have gotten not only ships but men to help in the fight? And she never did consent until she got that secret agreement that I have read, in January, February, and March, 1917, by which these other powers agreed that China should be dismembered at the peace table and turned over to Japan.

Then they all asked her to come in. In friendship, or at least it had the appearance of being friendship, they invited China into this war. "Come in," they said to China, "and help us to whip Germany. Give us these ships." And China came in. She sent several hundred thousand men to the battle fields of France—not as soldiers, but as workers—and they worked in the trenches under the fire of German shot and shell, where Japan's men never did go. She turned over all those ships to the allied cause, and they were used in carrying men, munitions, and food to the soldiers on the battle front. And now we propose to carve her up and give her sacred territory to that very Government that kept her out so long; that did not have the high sense of honor to the Allies to try to get another Government in to help win the war; who kept her out at a time when ships were vital, and when the leading men on the allied side feared that we were going down to defeat for want of ships. I wonder, Mr. President, if the American people understood that condition, whether they would ever consent that this criminal portion of this treaty should be approved by the American Senate.

I want to read a sentence or two from this same paper presented to the peace conference:

The chief value of Kiaochow lies partly in the harbor of Tsingtao and partly in an area dominating the finest anchorage of that harbor, which has been delimited by the Japanese Government and is already reserved for exclusive Japanese occupation under Japanese jurisdiction, no one other than Japanese being permitted to hold land within its boundaries.

All done during the war. A portion set aside exclusively for Japanese, no one allowed to be there; and, if we are to believe the pretensions of friendship and peace in a country that is soon going to be turned back to China, it is going to be turned back just as Korea was turned back. If Japan intended it should be turned back she would not have objected to putting it in the treaty. Why should it not be put in the treaty? Japan has never offered a suggestion or a reason. There is none. Here is part of China; China wants it, and the world wants her to have it; but Japan says, "Give it to me. I will give it back to her when I get ready."

Japan will make the conditions of its return, and she will make them so as to give nothing but the shell. She will keep the kernel, and eventually, if she goes on in the same course that she pursued in Korea, the Chinese Republic will be no more.

This same article, speaking further on this same subject, says:

This delimited area presumably is the "place to be designated by the Japanese Government" as "a concession under the exclusive jurisdiction of Japan." The restoration of Kiaochow to China, with retention by Japan of the area dominating it, would be the restoration of the "shadow" of this "place in the sun" and the retention of its substance by Japan.

I will now read from a letter by Mr. Krupensky. Of course Russia wanted to get China in, and there was a good deal of communication between the home government and the Russian ambassador at Tokyo. Mr. Krupensky sent another letter, which, as far as I know, has never been published in this country, but which is in the official correspondence of Krupensky with his government. He was instructed to sound out Japan to see if Japan would not agree to let China come into the war, and here is what he says, in part, in an official letter:

On the other hand, the minister pointed out—

That is, the Japanese minister—the necessity for him, in view of the attitude of Japanese opinion on the subject, as well as with a view to safeguard Japan's position at the future peace conference—

Now, note that, "with a view to safeguard Japan's position at the future peace conference."

This letter was sent on the 8th day of February, and it was just a few days afterwards when the Japanese minister at Tokyo took up with the British ambassador at that place the proposition of giving Shantung to Japan.

This continues:

With a view to safeguard Japan's position at the future peace conference, if China should be admitted to it, of securing the support of the allied powers to the desires of Japan in respect of Shantung and the Pacific islands.

Now, Mr. President, there is Krupensky ordered to sound out the Japanese Government and see if there can not be some arrangement brought about by which China can come into the war, and she is anxious to come in if they can get Japan's consent. Everybody else wants her in. Krupensky, in sounding out the Japanese minister at Tokyo, finds that Japan wants to have some understanding at the peace conference, if they will let China in, about Shantung and the German islands in the Pacific.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What is the date of that?

Mr. NORRIS. It is within a few days of the time when these other negotiations started. This is February 8.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Nineteen hundred and seventeen?

Mr. NORRIS. Nineteen hundred and seventeen; when, as you noticed in the first part of my address, I showed where the conference took place in the month of February, a little later than this. It is all connected up. This continues:

With a view to safeguard Japan's position at the future peace conference, if China should be admitted to it, of securing the support of the allied powers to the desires of Japan in respect of Shantung and the Pacific Islands. These desires are for the succession to all the rights and privileges hitherto possessed by Germany in the Shantung Province and for the acquisition of the islands to the north of the Equator which are now occupied by the Japanese. Motono plainly told me that the Japanese Government would like to receive at once the promise of the Imperial [Russian] Government to support the above desires of Japan.

Now, listen! Here is Krupensky's conclusion:

In order to give a push to the highly important question of a break between China and Germany I regard it as very desirable that the Japanese should be given the promise they ask.

Oh, that looks like loyalty on the part of Japan, the other allies striving to get China in for the valuable assistance she could be to them, Japan keeping her out, and succeeding in keeping her out, as I said before, until she got that disgraceful agreement to permit the acquisition by Japan of this Chinese territory.

Mr. President, some of the people who have argued in favor of this proposition have taken the position that China had entered into the treaty of May, 1915, in answer to these demands, by which she had agreed that Japan should have these German possessions; and I said to the Senator from Utah, when he seemed to refer to that treaty with approval, that I would bring a witness on the stand who would denounce that treaty whom he would not dare dispute, and I am going to produce him now, Mr. President.

First I will read the official statement of the Japanese Government on the question of Shantung, because I will have to read the other one made by this witness. That official statement reads:

The official text of the statement made to the press in Tokyo Sunday by Viscount Uchida, minister for foreign affairs, in regard to the Shantung settlement, as made public by the Japanese embassy here to-day, reads:

"It appears that, in spite of the official statement which the Japanese delegation at Paris issued on May 5 last, and which I fully stated in an interview with the representatives of the press on May 17, Japan's policy respecting the Shantung question is little understood or appreciated abroad.

"It will be remembered that in the ultimatum which the Japanese Government addressed to the German Government on August 15, 1914, they demanded of Germany to deliver, on a date not later than September 15, 1914, to the imperial authorities, without condition of compensation, the entire leased territory of Kiaochow with a view to eventual restoration of the same to China. The terms of that demand have never elicited any protest on the part of China or any other allied or associated powers.

"Following the same line of policy, Japan now claims as one of the essential conditions of peace that the leased territory of Kiaochow should be surrendered to her without condition or compensation. At the same time abiding faithfully by the pledge which she gave to China in 1915, she is quite willing to restore to China the whole territory in question and to enter upon negotiations with the Government at Peking as to the arrangement necessary to give effect to that pledge as soon as possible after the treaty of Versailles shall have been ratified by Japan.

I will pause there just a moment. Assuming that Japan is honest, that she wants to give it back to China, why does she not give it; why does she not pick up her duds and go home? Why does she not let China have it? Why does she not put it in the treaty that way? Why does she insist that in order for China to get it she must get it first?

Now, she says, "When the treaty is agreed to I will enter into negotiations with a view to turning it back." Everybody who has studied the history of Japan in Korea knows what these negotiations mean.

Reading further from this same official statement:

"Nor has she any intention to retain or to claim any rights which affect the territorial sovereignty of China in the Province of Shantung. The significance of the clause appearing in Baron Makino's statement of May 5, that the policy of Japan is to hand back the Shantung Peninsula in full sovereignty to China, retaining only the economic privileges granted to Germany, must be clear to all.

"Upon arrangement being arrived at between Japan and China for the restitution of Kiaochow—

What necessity of arriving at anything? If she wants to give it to China, and China is anxious to get it, for God's sake, why does she not give it to her and go home?—

"the Japanese troops at present guarding that territory and the Kiaochow-Tsinanfu Railway will be completely withdrawn.

As a matter of fact, they have been extended, since the armistice has been signed, in all kinds of directions and in all ways.

"The Kiaochow-Tsinanfu Railway is intended to be operated as a joint Sino-Japanese enterprise without any discrimination in treatment against the people of any nation.

"The Japanese Government have, moreover, under contemplation proposals for the reestablishment in Tsingtao of a general foreign settlement, instead of the exclusive Japanese settlement which by the agreement of 1915 with China they are entitled to claim."

You will notice that she refers to the agreement of 1915, brought about by force; to that treaty; to those demands, all illegal, all immoral, all wicked, all without justification, all brought about by force; and yet this man refers to those, and this witness that I am now going to put on the stand by the name of Woodrow Wilson takes up that question. He can not remain silent and let the Japanese Government even claim that there is any validity to that treaty of 1915 or to those negotiations.

You will remember that when this statement was published the President issued a statement in answer to it, in dignified language, but without question calling attention to the fact that these demands made by Japan upon China in 1915 were of no validity whatever and had nothing to do with the treaty of peace at Versailles. They were certainly without foundation. He did not consider them as amounting to anything and he would not dare let the occasion go without saying so to the world.

Now comes the President's statement. I will ask permission to print the entire statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

THE PRESIDENT'S STATEMENT.

President Wilson's statement was as follows:

"The Government of the United States has noted with the greatest interest the frank statement made by Viscount Uchida with regard to Japan's future policy respecting Shantung. The statement ought to serve to remove many misunderstandings which had begun to accumulate about this question.

"But there are references in the statement to an agreement entered into between Japan and China in 1915 which might be misleading if not commented upon in the light of what occurred in Paris when the clauses of the treaty affecting Shantung were under discussion. I therefore take the liberty of supplementing Viscount Uchida's statement with the following:

"In the conference of the 30th of April last, where this matter was brought to a conclusion among the heads of the principal allied and associated powers, the Japanese delegates, Baron Makino and Viscount Chinda, in reply to a question put by myself, declared that—

"'The policy of Japan is to hand back the Shantung Peninsula in full sovereignty to China, retaining only the economic privileges granted to Germany and the right to establish a settlement under the usual conditions at Tsingtao.

"'The owners of the railway will use special police only to insure security for traffic. They will be used for no other purpose.

"'The police forces will be composed of Chinese, and such Japanese instructors as the directors of the railway may select will be appointed by the Chinese Government.'

"No reference was made to this policy being in any way dependent upon the execution of the agreement of 1915 to which Count Uchida appears to have referred. Indeed, I felt it my duty to say that nothing that I agreed to must be construed as an acquiescence on the part of the Government of the United States in the policy of the notes exchanged between China and Japan in 1915 and 1918, and reference was made in the discussion to the enforcement of the agreements of 1915 and 1918 only in case China failed to cooperate fully in carrying out the policy outlined in the statement of Baron Makino and Viscount Chinda.

"I have, of course, no doubt that Viscount Uchida had been apprised of all the particulars of the discussion in Paris, and I am not making this statement with the idea of correcting his, but only to throw a fuller light of clarification upon a situation which ought to be relieved of every shadow of obscurity or misapprehension.

"WOODROW WILSON."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think that those who ask us to approve the treaty in the face of the testimony of that witness will be willing to admit that the treaty of 1915 is what I have claimed for it all the time, absolutely a nullity. Your leader denounces it; even though he asks us to approve this criminal thing he does not go so far as to say, "You shall approve that damnable treaty of 1915, forced upon China against her will while the world was at war."

But, Mr. President, there is still another reason why that treaty is of no force and effect. China is a republic. She has a written constitution. I wish Senators would remember that she is a republic, and that while we ought always to do justice to every nation regardless of the form of government, we ought to be particularly careful that the newborn republics, that have taken our Nation as an example when coming into the fold, to follow us, are properly and honestly protected, particularly when we have by solemn declaration many times in the past said we would do it.

This treaty of 1915, as I have said, was brought about by force. It was never approved by the Legislature of China, and the constitution of China provides that it must be. I put this in the RECORD once before, but I am going to do it again. Article 25 of the constitution of China reads as follows:

ARTICLE 25. The President makes treaties. But, should articles therein provide for any change of territory, or increase the burdens of the citizens, the concurrence of the legislature shall be required.

So even if everything was lovely, that treaty is a nullity, because no man claims that there was even a pretense at concurrence by the Legislature of China. The legal effect of the constitution in regard to treaties is practically the same as ours. Who would ever claim that this treaty now before us would be legal or binding, or have any effect whatever upon the American Government, unless it is approved by the Senate of the United States? The treaty of 1915 between Japan and China, culminating out of the famous 21 demands and signed at the point of the sword, was never approved by the Chinese Legislature. It is null and void; first, because it was signed under compulsion and coercion, admittedly so by everybody who knows anything about it. And even if this had not been true it is absolutely null and void because it has never been approved by the Chinese Legislature.

I can hardly understand how anyone can stand on the floor of the Senate and defend that treaty. I am going to read later on at least the first article of it. It shows on its face that it is illogical and dishonorable. But now since the President has spoken, since the man who is behind this treaty has condemned it, I do not suppose any more of his cohorts or followers will stand up and say that there is any validity to the treaty of 1915 between Japan and China.

I want to read again—I read it before, but I think it was in two different places—the instructions given to the representative of Japan when these demands were made:

Believing it absolutely essential for the strengthening of Japan's position in eastern Asia as well as for the preservation of the general interests of that region to secure Chinese adherence to the foregoing proposals, the Imperial Government are determined to attain this end by all means within their power.

That means by anything. They started out with their instructions that "We are going to obtain these things by any means that it may be necessary for us to resort to." When she makes that kind of demand without cause, without reason, without there having been any dispute or quarrel or disagreement, it is time for the Christian world and for civilized people to take notice. That is the way this treaty of May, 1915, between Japan and China was brought about.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print at this point in my remarks the original 21 demands made by Japan upon China.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). Without objection, consent is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

JAPAN'S 21 DEMANDS.

JAPAN'S ORIGINAL DEMANDS.

Handed to His Excellency the President of Yuan-Shih-kai, by His Excellency Mr. Hioki, the Japanese minister to China, on January 18, 1915, translated from the Chinese text and published by the Chinese Government at Peking in June, 1915.

I.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government being desirous of maintaining the general peace in Eastern Asia and further strengthening the friendly relations and good neighborhood existing between the two nations agree to the following articles:

ARTICLE 1. The Chinese Government engages to give full assent to all matters upon which the Japanese Government may hereafter agree with the German Government relating to the disposition of all rights, interests, and concessions which Germany, by virtue of treaties or otherwise, possesses in relation to the Province of Shantung.

ART. 2. The Chinese Government engages that within the Province of Shantung and along its coast no territory or island will be ceded or leased to a third power under any pretext.

ART. 3. The Chinese Government consents to Japan's building a railway from Chefoo or Lungkow to join the Kiaochow-Tsinanfu Railway.

ART. 4. The Chinese Government engages, in the interest of trade and for the residence of foreigners, to open by herself as soon as possible certain important cities and towns in the Province of Shantung as commercial ports. What places shall be opened are to be jointly decided upon in a separate agreement.

II.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, since the Chinese Government has always acknowledged the special position enjoyed by Japan in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia, agree to the following articles:

ARTICLE 1. The two contracting parties mutually agree that the term of lease of Port Arthur and Dalny and the term of lease of the South Manchurian Railway and the Antung-Mukden Railway shall be extended to the period of 99 years.

ART. 2. Japanese subjects in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia shall have the right to lease or own land required either for erecting suitable buildings for trade and manufacture or for farming.

ART. 3. Japanese subjects shall be free to reside and travel in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia and to engage in business and in manufacture of any kind whatsoever.

ART. 4 The Chinese Government agrees to grant to Japanese subjects the right of opening the mines in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia. As regards what mines are to be opened, they shall be decided upon jointly.

ART. 5. The Chinese Government agrees that in respect of the (two) cases mentioned hereinbelow the Japanese Government's consent shall be first obtained before action is taken.

(a) Whenever permission is granted to the subject of a third power to build a railway or to make a loan with a third power for the purpose of building a railway in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia.

(b) Whenever a loan is to be made with a third power pledging the local taxes of South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia as security.

ART. 6. The Chinese Government agrees that if the Chinese Government employs political, financial, or military advisers or instructors in South Manchuria or Eastern Inner Mongolia, the Japanese Government shall first be consulted.

ART. 7. The Chinese Government agrees that the control and management of the Kirin-Changchun Railway shall be handed over to the Japanese Government for a term of 99 years dating from the signing of this agreement.

III.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government, seeing that Japanese financiers and the Hanyehping Co., have close relations with each other at present and desiring that the common interests of the two nations shall be advanced, agree to the following articles:

ARTICLE 1. The two contracting parties mutually agree that when the opportune moment arrives the Hanyehping Co. shall be made a joint concern of the two nations and they further agree that without the previous consent of Japan, China shall not by her own act dispose of the rights and property of whatsoever nature of the said company nor cause the said company to dispose freely of the same.

ART 2. The Chinese Government agrees that all mines in the neighborhood of those owned by the Hanyehping Co. shall not be permitted, without the consent of the said company, to be worked by other persons outside of the said company; and further agrees that if it is desired to carry out any undertaking which, it is apprehended, may directly or indirectly affect the interests of the said company, the consent of the said company shall first be obtained.

IV.

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government with the object of effectively preserving the territorial integrity of China agree to the following special article:

The Chinese Government engages not to cede or lease to a third power any harbor or bay or island along the coast of China.

V.

ARTICLE 1. The Chinese Central Government shall employ influential Japanese as advisers in political, financial, and military affairs.

ART. 2. Japanese hospitals, churches, and schools in the interior of China shall be granted the right of owning land.

ART. 3. Inasmuch as the Japanese Government and the Chinese Government have had many cases of dispute between Japanese and Chinese police to settle, cases which caused no little misunderstanding, it is for this reason necessary that the police departments of important places (in China) shall be jointly administered by Japanese and Chinese or that the police departments of these places shall employ numerous Japanese, so that they may at the same time help to plan for the improvement of the Chinese police service.

ART. 4. China shall purchase from Japan a fixed amount of munitions of war (say, 50 per cent or more) of what is needed by the Chinese Government or that there shall be established in China a Chino-Japanese jointly worked arsenal. Japanese technical experts are to be employed and Japanese material to be purchased.

ART. 5. China agrees to grant to Japan the right of constructing a railway connecting Wuchang with Kiukiang and Nanchang, another line between Nanchang and Hanchow, and another between Nanchang and Chaochou.

ART. 6. If China needs foreign capital to work mines, build railways, and construct harbor works (including dockyards) in the Province of Fukien, Japan shall be first consulted.

ART. 7. China agrees that Japanese subjects shall have the right of missionary propaganda in China.

[At this point Mr. NORRIS yielded the floor for the day.]

Saturday, October 11, 1919.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, when the Senate adjourned last night I had just placed in the RECORD the 21 demands made by Japan upon China. Prior to placing them in the RECORD I discussed them at some length and gave an explanation of some of them. Before I pass from that subject I wish to comment briefly on a few of those demands.

To begin with, the demands were prefaced, as was every other treaty made by Japan with China or Korea, with a pretentious declaration of the friendship of Japan, in this case for China.

Mr. McCUMBER. They copied the Germans.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] says they copied the Germans. That is what I tried to demonstrate yesterday—that in a great many of the things they had been doing they were following the process that has been followed for years by the Kaiser in building up his immense military machine.

The 21 demands were prefaced with the following profession of friendship:

The Japanese Government and the Chinese Government being desirous of maintaining the general peace in eastern Asia and further strengthening the friendly relations and good neighborhood existing between the two nations agree to the following articles.

I shall show later, Mr. President, in the case of Korea how Japan pursued for years the same course in every attack that she made upon Korean independence. When she was about to stab China to the heart she prefaced her action, in which she demanded the agreement of China, with the statement that it was done because she was desirous of "further strengthening the friendly relations and good neighborhood existing between the two nations."

I commend to the reading of the Senate and of the country these 21 demands. In my humble judgment no person, particularly if he is familiar with the history of Japan, can read them without reaching the firm conclusion that if those 21 demands were acceded to, and action taken accordingly, the doom of China as an independent nation was absolutely sealed.

I said on yesterday the demands in group 5 were suspended. I believe I was somewhat in error in that statement. There were seven demands in group 5 altogether, and one of those demands was not suspended. None of them has been withdrawn; they stand now suspended as a sword over the neck of weak China and are likely to be renewed any day as the demands originally were presented without any possible excuse or reason.

Article 1 in Group II reads as follows:

The two contracting parties mutually agree that the term of lease of Port Arthur and Dalny and the term of lease of the South Manchurian Railway and the Antung-Mukden Railway shall be extended to the period of 99 years.

That illustrates the method that Japan has pursued. She gets a concession; then with arms and with force she demands an additional concession and extends the old one. The leases of Port Arthur and these railways had not yet expired, but Japan took the occasion to extend them for 99 years. Article 4 of Group II reads as follows:

The Chinese Government agrees to grant to Japanese subjects the right of opening the mines in South Manchuria and Eastern Inner Mongolia. As regards what mines are to be opened they shall be decided upon jointly.

I read yesterday, Mr. President, the instructions given the Japanese ambassador when these demands were sent to him. I also read the prime minister's statement affecting them. The ambassador was told in substance that Japan was determined to have these demands allowed at whatever cost, and the prime minister said in substance—and I gave the language literally on yesterday—that China had the raw materials that were necessary for Japan's progress and advancement. Putting them together they decided, when there was not even the semblance of a dispute, to make this demand at a time when the world was at war. Article 5 says:

The Chinese Government agrees that in respect of the (two) cases mentioned herein below the Japanese Government's consent shall be first obtained before action is taken:

(a) Whenever permission is granted to the subject of a third power to build a railway or to make a loan with a third power for the purpose of building a railroad in South Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia.

(b) Whenever a loan is to be made with a third power pledging the local taxes of South Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia as security.

ART. 6. The Chinese Government agrees that if the Chinese Government employs political, financial, or military advisers or instructors in South Manchuria or eastern inner Mongolia the Japanese Government shall first be consulted.

ART. 7. The Chinese Government agrees that the control and management of the Kirin-Changchun Railway shall be handed over to the Japanese Government for a term of 99 years, dating from the signing of this agreement.

If we went no further, Mr. President, if we considered only this demand, what is left to China? It is true that in article 4, which I have just read, it is stated that where the Chinese Government grants to subjects of Japan the right to mine in South Manchuria and eastern inner Mongolia the mines to be opened shall be decided upon jointly. Of course, everybody who is familiar with the history of the diplomacy of Japan, the strength of Japan, and the weakness of China, knows what that camouflage means. "Jointly" means that Japan will do as she pleases and as she did under similar conditions with Korea.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska if, in the course of his discussion of the preposterous and outrageous demands made by Japan upon China, he intends to touch upon the peculiar phraseology employed in some of the demands, namely, "outer" and "inner" Mongolia, employing geographic terms which hitherto had been wholly unknown to the Chinese mind, and involving a shadowy, indefinite geographic definition of territory, under which all sorts of complications might ensue and the actual demands of the Japanese Government might be extended to an indefinite area, inasmuch as those particular terms of description of territory have never been employed by the Chinese or, indeed, Mr. President, anywhere by geographers of the Orient?

Mr. NORRIS. In answer to the Senator, I will say that, in a general way, I expect to discuss the proposition, although I do not know whether or not the Senator has reference to some specific matter which I intend to discuss.

Mr. MOSES. Oh, no, Mr. President; but in reading the group of demands, of course, the Senator can not have overlooked the terms "inner" and "outer" Mongolia with reference to various phases of the concessionary demands which were made upon the Chinese Government. Those terms, "inner" and "outer" Mongolia, were terms absolutely new in the geographic terminology of the Orient. They meant nothing or everything to the oriental mind. Under them the Japanese Government, by the forced concession it had wrung from China through the operation of the threat by which they imposed this group of demands, might have extended its field of operations to cover the entire Chinese Empire, for all the Chinese authorities could tell.

Mr. NORRIS. I think there is no doubt about that.

Mr. MOSES. These new geographic terms were considered by oriental scholars and by publicists who have dealt with oriental affairs, particularly so far as the relations between the Chinese Republic and the Nipponese Empire are concerned, to have been intentionally introduced for the purpose of confusing the situation later on and of enabling the Japanese to extend far beyond the bounds of what anybody then dreamed possible the operation of their sovereignty under these demands.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his very valuable contribution, the importance of which can not be overestimated; and there is no doubt about the truth of the statement the Senator has just made.

Now, to continue with a few more of these demands. In article 1 of Group V the language reads as follows:

The Chinese central Government shall employ influential Japanese as advisers in political, financial, and military affairs.

Think of that! The Chinese Government shall employ Japanese advisers in political, financial, and military affairs! That means the turning over to Japan of the financial, political, and military affairs of China. What would be left? I wish every man who reads these demands—and I am only mentioning a few of them, for I desire to hasten along as rapidly as I can; many of those that I have not read are as bad and some of them worse than those I have read—I wish every man who does me the honor to read these demands would apply them to himself and to his own country. What would we say if some great nation without any warning, without any dispute or controversy existing, should on some bright day send its ambassador to our Government and make such a demand as the one I have just read? What would we think as citizens? If we were unarmed, if we did not have a large military establishment and the other country did, and the other countries of the world from whom we might expect some sympathy and aid were at war, we would be helpless. Everybody knows that to the very extent of our power we would resist any such a demand.

But if the power against us was sufficient to overcome us, or if we were weak and had no Army and no Navy to make a defense, would the crime be any less? Would it not be greater, Mr. President? Would it not, as I said yesterday, be the difference between attacking a full, able-bodied man and trying to rob a cripple or a woman or a child?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. MOSES. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the fact that the practice he is denouncing is not an uncommon one among these precious allies of ours. The seizure of the purse and the sword of China by Japanese hands has been paralleled by the seizure of the purse and sword of Persia in British hands.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that I called attention to that yesterday.

Mr. MOSES. I am very glad to know that.

Mr. NORRIS. And I put the treaty in the RECORD. That is true. The only difference is that with regard to Persia, that treaty is not before us. We are not called upon to act; but in this case we have to act. The responsibility is on our shoulders now, and we must either approve or disapprove this treaty and this provision in this treaty.

Article 4 of the Japanese demands reads as follows:

China shall purchase from Japan a fixed amount of munitions of war (say, 50 per cent or more) of what is needed by the Chinese Government, or that there shall be established in China a Chino-Japanese jointly worked arsenal. Japanese technical experts are to be employed and Japanese material to be purchsed.

After she had turned over her political, financial, and military affairs to Japan, then she has still further to buy of Japan her munitions of war, and an arsenal is to be established in China, controlled, this says, jointly by Japanese and Chinese; but then they must employ Japanese technical experts. That means that Japan is going to control it.

That means that the munitions of war, the guns and the powder that China will be allowed to have in the future will be absolutely and completely under the control of Japan. She will be powerless to defend herself, powerless to equip an army without Japan's consent. Japan was not taking any chances in this matter.

Article 6 says:

If China needs foreign capital to work mines, build railways, and construct harbor works (including dockyards) in the Province of Fukien, Japan shall be first consulted.

As I said a while ago, the simple reading of these demands, made without cause, is sufficient to convince anybody that the object of Japan is to get complete and absolute control of China.

I had something to say yesterday about the treaty. I offered the treaty between Japan and China that followed close upon these demands, that resulted from the ultimatum that I mentioned yesterday, and I want to read one article of that treaty, although I think I showed yesterday that it is not entitled to the consideration of any man who wants to be fair. It is absolutely discarded by everybody as far as I know, including the President of the United States, as I showed yesterday; but article 1 of that treaty reads as follows:

The Chinese Government agrees to give full assent to all matters upon which the Japanese Government may hereafter agree with the German Government relating to the disposition of all rights, interests, and concessions which Germany, by virtue of treaties or otherwise, possesses in relation to the Province of Shantung.

Mr. President, if there were no other evidence, that treaty shows upon its face that it is brought about by force. No one but a crazy man would agree to that treaty. Now, remember that that was in May, 1915, while the war was on, and no one knew what the treaty of peace was going to be. China agrees by that provision of that treaty to agree to anything that Germany afterwards consents to when the Allies get her down on her knees, as they ultimately did. There is only one like instance in modern history, and that is where the Allies compelled Germany to agree, in the present treaty, that she would agree to any treaty that might be made with Austria. Germany was an enemy. There was reason why we should make demands and exactions of that kind of Germany; but no one pretends that that was anything but force. Yet the same thing, almost in the same language, Japan requires, and there were for some time people who even contended that was valid. It shows on its face that it is infamous and is not entitled to anybody's consideration.

Now Mr. President, I want to read to the Senate one of the secret treaties that Japan made with Russia while this war was on, and then I am going to ask the Senate to look at the evidence that I have disclosed and see the conspiracy that Japan was in.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. As I understood the Senator yesterday, Japan entered the war against Germany in August, 1914.

Mr. NORRIS. That is right.

Mr. GRONNA. And she attacked the Germans, of course, in Shantung?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. During that time and up to the date which the Senator has just mentioned—May, 1915—she demanded what the Senator has read and made her 21 demands?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. In other words, she threatened China unless these demands were granted?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes. She had soldiers on Chinese soil—quite a large army—at the time she issued her ultimatum.

Mr. GRONNA. Now, as I understand the situation, in the first place, during 1897 and 1898 Germany stole this territory from China. Now Japan makes a raid upon the Germans who are in this territory and upon the people of China and demands the same territory that Germany demanded. Am I correct?

Mr. NORRIS. That is right.

Mr. GRONNA. And the United States must justify its position and say that, although we realize that Germany stole this territory from the people of China upon the pretext of having some one or two of her people murdered, we must now condone that theft and hand that stolen territory over to Japan?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that is what this treaty provides.

Mr. President, on the 3d day of July, 1916—and these dates are somewhat important, Senators, because I am going to couple them together in a few minutes to show the whole scheme, just what Japan was doing, and how our own country, in my judgment, was included in the scheme—this treaty between Russia and Japan, parts of which I am about to read, was negotiated and signed. I think it was the same day on which Japan and Russia made another treaty. They made two treaties. The other one was made public. This was kept secret.

Article 1 of that treaty reads as follows:

The two high contracting parties acknowledge that the vital interests of both require the safeguarding of China against the political domination by any third power entertaining hostile designs against Russia or Japan and therefore mutually pledge themselves, each time when circumstances demand it, to enter into frank relations based on complete mutual trust with one another with a view to taking joint measures for the prevention of the possibility of the advent of such a state of affairs (in China).

That article is important, Mr. President, as showing that the object of this treaty was to prevent anybody else interfering in China. I have already shown that at the very time this treaty was made Japan was keeping China out of the war. The other allies were trying to get her in. She then commenced to make it known that she wanted an agreement about the German possessions in Shantung at the peace table. Krupensky, in the secret correspondence that I read yesterday, showed up that proposition. A little later she entered into direct negotiations with England, with France, with Italy, and with Russia and agreed with every one of them what should be done with Shantung when the war was over.

It had begun to dawn on Japan that America was coming in, and she not only went so far as to make these secret agreements with other powers but she entered into at least one secret agreement, which I am about to read, by which, in my judgment, she showed that she had taken into consideration the fact that America might object to her actions in China, and she was making a combination with Russia against our own country.

ART. 2. If as a result of the measures taken by mutual agreement by Russia and Japan, in virtue of the preceding article, war should be declared by the third power referred to in article 1 of the present convention—

That is, any power that undertook to interfere—

on either of the contracting parties—

That is, either Japan or Russia—

the other party shall on the first demand of its ally come to its assistance, and each of the high contracting parties pledges itself hereby, in case such a situation should arise, not to conclude peace with the common enemy without the previous consent of its ally.

ART. 3. The terms on which each high contracting party is to render armed assistance to the other in accordance with the preceding article, as well as the form in which this assistance is to be rendered, shall be determined jointly by the respective competent authorities of the two contracting parties.

ART. 4. Provided that neither high contracting party shall regard itself bound by article 2—

Article 2 is the one in which they say they will go to war—of the present convention in respect of rendering armed assistance to its ally so long as it has not been given guaranties by its allies that they, too, will render such assistance to it as would correspond to the seriousness of the impending conflict.

Mr. President, everybody knows that Japan has a treaty alliance with Great Britain, and did have it when they entered into this treaty. That proviso, article 4, is put into this treaty to save Japan from going to war in case Great Britain should interfere in China. That is what that means. She would not have to go to war then unless her ally, after being informed, would consent to come in. What other power is left? Of course there are a good many other powers left, but what other power has any probability on earth of making any objection? Mr. President, there is only one, and that is the United States of America. This was at a time when we were not in the war. It could not mean France, it could not mean Italy, it could not mean any of the countries at war. It could mean only the United States. They put in the proviso so as to make it perfectly plain that it could not mean England. That construction is emphasized when you read the next article, which tells how long this convention shall last.

ART. 5. The present convention enters into force from the moment of its signature and shall remain in force until July, 1921.

Assuming that we did not go into the war, but stayed out, and when Japan made those demands on China we had said, "We can not stand for that; that is cruel and inhuman; that is the same as Germany did with Belgium," they had it fixed, not only if China went into the war, by the agreement with England and the other powers in those secret treaties, but they had it fixed so that if America did not go into the war and did not, therefore, come to the peace table and demand something for China, but, on the other hand, did object to this high-handed course of Japan in China, Japan would have an ally ready to go to war with her to fight the United States.

Mr. President, this is only one secret treaty. I am indebted to the Bolsheviks for this one. When they got possession of Russia they gave publicity to it. I do not know what other secret treaties Japan has up her sleeves with other countries to the same effect.

Article 5 continues:

Should one of the high contracting parties not deem it necessary 12 months before the expiry of this term to give notice of its unwillingness to prolong the validity of the present convention, the latter shall remain in force for a period of 1 year after it has been denounced by one or other of the high contracting parties.

ART. 6. The present convention shall be kept in complete secrecy from everybody except the two high contracting parties.

There you have it, Mr. President. While the war was on Japan wanted to guard against two contingencies. America at that time was not in the war. Japan had succeeded in keeping China out of the war to the extent, as I said before, in my judgment, of demonstrating that she was not loyal to the Allies' cause. But the Allies were trying to get China in, and trying to get Japan to consent that she should come in, to get the ships China had. Then she went into the secret agreements with the other powers, so that if China went in she had them all tied up with those agreements, so that when China came to the peace table she would be carved up just the same as though she stayed out.

But to meet any possibility that America might not go into the war, she made this secret treaty of July, 1916, so that when she was raping and outraging China while the balance of the world were fighting, if America said anything at least the Russian Government, and I do not know how many others, was bound by that secret treaty to declare war against America and come to Japan's relief.

Think of it, Senators, in connection with the question of the loyalty of Japan to the allied cause. What does that mean? Suppose we had not gone into the war. Suppose the American Government had in some way found out and protested against this rape of China and Japan had refused to pay any attention; and suppose it had resulted in war with the United States of America while that other great war was on. Then Japan would have declared war against America, there would have been war against China, and Russia, according to that secret compact, would have declared war against America. Then where would America have been in this World War? Whether she liked it or not she would have been fighting the Allies and in favor of Germany. That does not look to me very much as though Japan had the cause of the Allies at heart.

Mr. President, I want to offer some evidence to the Senate and to the country of what Japan is doing in China now, what Japan is doing in this country that she says she is so anxious to give to China. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] interrupted me and read a translation of an article printed in a Japanese paper, and my colleague the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] made some remark to the effect that we ought not to pay any attention to irresponsible newspaper publications, because, just as in this country, there are a great many such in Japan. That is true, and I would not pretend to offer a newspaper article as proof of a condition existing in a country. But, Mr. President, I can pile up that Senate desk with propaganda and newspaper articles from Japan so high that the President can not see a Senator, carrying out the very ideas contained in the editorial read by the Senator from New Hampshire. We can get an idea of what the Japanese people are thinking if we take a broad view of their country and consider what appears in their newspapers.

I will not take the time of the Senate or burden the RECORD with a production of such records. But I can produce them; I have them—illustrations, posters, newspapers of all kinds—that go to show that the Japanese people believe that Japan is destined to rule the world. This is one of the steps. There is not any question but what hidden in the breast of Japan is an idea that the Mikado some day will rule over the world; that the Christian religion will be destroyed and the pagan religion of the Mikado established everywhere on God's footstool. That is what they talk to their people. Again, there is a similarity to Germany, who for 50 years inculcated into the breasts of all her people, including the little school children, that Germany was supreme, that Germany was second to none, that she was destined to be the great power of all the world, that she was invincible. That is the doctrine that is taught to the Japanese by the Japanese. That is their propaganda. It is sacred to them. It is part of their religion.

Now, I want to read, as bearing out what I have said, part of an article that appeared in a Japanese paper at Tsinan, called Jih Pao, referring to Christians. Mr. President, some of these papers that Japan is printing are printed in the Chinese language and are circulated among Chinese in the way of a propaganda to make the Chinese believe particularly that missionaries of the English tongue, and more particularly that American missionaries of the English tongue, are frauds and that their religion is no account. It is a wide propaganda that she is spreading through China right now while we are here. In this article it is said:

Christians have assumed that civilization is a monopoly of Christian States, and look down on non-Christian States as uncivilized heathens and heretics. But this disastrous European war originated with Germany, the most important of all the Christian States and the home of Martin Luther, the author of the Reformation. All intelligent people in Europe realize that this strife has shaken the belief in Christianity to its very foundations; that unless some new mainspring of action be found it will lose all influence in the spiritual world. Disciples of Christianity are very anxious and worried about this, for since belief in Christianity has been shaken in the spiritual world of Europe the missionaries sent out to the East by Europe and America must also be profoundly affected, and this is in a very special degree a source of anxiety to preachers of Christianity in China.

Unfortunately the Tsingtau question gave rise to the boycott and a violent anti-Japanese movement spread with great rapidity.

These missionaries seized upon this as an opportunity for bolstering up the waning fortunes of Christianity, and they therefore expressed sympathy with the student agitation in order to purchase their support for Christianity. Truly they are cunning foxes, with ever an eye for the main chance.

Although church and state are separate, the question whether priests should be allowed to take part in political movements is evidently not one that can be hastily decided. Up to now the problem of Shantung has been a purely political question, and the present attempt to make it into a spiritual question is obviously with the object of producing a spiritual reaction. There is certainly not much righteousness to be discerned in the actions of the missionaries in this regard.

The forcible seizure of Kiaochow by Germany had for its pretext the murder of two missionaries, and China has ceded territory and paid indemnities in many similar cases. Thus may the church become an instrument of national destruction.

That is the sort of propaganda they are feeding to the Chinese and sending out printed in Chinese language.

In fact, all the calamities from which China has suffered down to the present day have sprung from the Christian Church, and that is why intelligent people object to the political activities of Christian missionaries.

I read that, only one out of hundreds that I have, to show the insidious propaganda that Japan is circulating through China. She has obtained control of newspapers and established others; she prints them in the Chinese language, as that was, and circulates them all over China to prejudice China against the missionary, against the church, and to try to make her believe that a continuation of activities upon the part of the church and the missionaries will mean the destruction of China, just as she argues in that article.

When this war broke out——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, in view of what the Senator has said with reference to the Christian churches and the Christian missionaries in China and in Japan, and I assume that all these newspapers are printed either in the Japanese or in the Chinese languages, is it not fair to presume that some of these Christian missionaries are able to read both the Japanese and the Chinese languages, or at least one of them?

Mr. NORRIS. Most of them are able to read both languages.

Mr. GRONNA. What surprises me is this: How does the Senator from Nebraska account for the fact that many of those who profess to preach the gospel of Christ, as laid down by Him in the Sermon on the Mount, are advocating this treaty and are advocating the very same thing the Japanese are advocating—the destruction of the Christian religion in the world?

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator from North Dakota for asking the question. It is an extremely important one. I have quite a number of documents that I want to produce on the subject, but I am not quite ready to do it now. I will promise the Senator, however, that before I get through I am going into that question.

Mr. GRONNA. I am very glad to know it.

Mr. NORRIS. I think any honest believer in the religion of Jesus Christ, when he understands what we are asked to do, would suffer death before he would advise us to give our official sanction to the treaty as it stands.

Mr. GRONNA. I apologize for interrupting the Senator at this time, and I am glad to know that he is going into that matter.

While I am on my feet, if I may be permitted, I will propound another inquiry. The Senator called attention to the fact that some time in July, 1916, a secret treaty was entered into between Japan and Russia. The Senator, I am sure, will remember as well as I do the brilliant speech delivered in this Chamber shortly after the United States had declared war against the Imperial German Government. Viscount Ishii at that time, I believe, spoke, and I remember distinctly some of his language. In substance at least it was that Japan entered this war in the interest of humanity and in the interest of democracy.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I referred to that briefly yesterday, and I want to say to the Senator, since he has asked the question now, that when Viscount Ishii made that beautiful speech it made a great impression upon the mind of the Senator from North Dakota, as it did upon me and all the other Senators, believing, as I did and as I believe all other Senators believed, that he was in earnest and was conscientious. We did not know that he had his pockets filled with secret treaties by which he was going to carve up China when the war was over, in violation of the very doctrine which he proclaimed and that we said we were in the war to vindicate.

As I started to say, when this war broke out there was an American school—there are quite a number, but here is one in particular—that got into difficulty over in Shantung. It got into difficulty when the Japanese got control. I have three accounts of it. One is a Japanese account, one is a Chinese account, and the other is an American account from an American missionary. I want to read parts of those or the substance of them. First I will take up the Japanese account. Here is what it says:

The pastors are sneakingly hidden within these institutions—

Referring to missionary schools—and hypocritically take on the name of the church, pretending to preach. They go everywhere making the acquaintance and winning the friendship of all classes of people, pretending to preach the Gospel to distant lands, while their real work is to use all their efforts to extend the influence and power of their country. And Japan is now exposing their real purpose, namely, not to save and help China but to swallow her up and annex her. Now they are using every foul means to destroy the good relations between Japan and China and the friendship of Japanese and Chinese which everyone well knows is so beautiful.

Oh, it is beautiful, Mr. President! That is a beauty that no man as yet has been able to comprehend except through the devious ways and dark alleys of Japanese diplomacy.

But now a newly fomented enmity has suddenly appeared. The whole body of missionaries has stirred up and set aflame an angry Korean revolt; they have compelled the Peking students to revolt and boycott Japanese in business and social intercourse; they have spread their poison throughout China.

For many years a good relationship has existed between America and Japan, and upon first hearing of this affair we thought it only a rumor. But now we know that this relation is in every way broken up, and we are compelled to hate them with a deep hatred.

Mr. President, there was over there, when the action of the peace conference became known in China, a boycott against Japanese goods. They resorted to all kinds of things, and I will read some evidence of it, to compel the Chinese to buy Japanese goods. There was a movement on foot over there to hold the Chinese Government responsible wherever the Chinese people did not buy Japanese goods. Now, let me read the Chinese report of this mission school. This is from Tsinan, May 30:

The Japanese papers this morning published that the principal and two teachers of the American Presbyterian Mission School and two American pastors of that mission have been tried before the civil governor of Tsingtao, the American consul having been summoned to be present, on the charge of "disturbing the public peace."

This took place in China. If Japan has not interfered with the Chinese Republic and is not destroying her capacity as a nation, it would seem funny that a trial of this kind should be had before Japanese officials, would it not? But that is what happened.

The principal of the school has been expelled from Tsingtao for a term of three years and the school closed and sealed.

The charge remains unexplained. The day the summons was received the missionary in charge of the Presbyterian work in Tsingtao stated that the students of the mission school there were exercising no part in the boycott or patriotic demonstrations. Indeed, they are but children, as the school only runs to the middle school grades. Personal inquiry among Chinese shop keepers in Tsingtao elicits the fact that these Chinese population of Tsingtao have been kept in ignorance by their overlords of the patriotic movement elsewhere, and their ignorance demonstrates the fact that the mission school could have done extremely little publicity campaigning, if any at all.

The missionaries state that they have been subjected to continued difficulties since the Japanese are certain that they have attained their will at the conference.

Ever since Japan won at the peace conference, the missionaries have felt the effect of it in China.

The Japanese Tsingtao Daily News to-day publishes an editorial page half filled with polemics against the Christian Church and religion, and over all this a grandiose article on the proper relationship of church and state and religious liberty.

That is what I read.

A common expression in Tsingtao and, indeed, entire Shantung is "the peace conference has devoted us to become a second Korea"—

That is the way the Chinamen feel, and no wonder they refuse to patronize Japanese merchants or to buy Japanese goods. Would you? Would we? Would we refuse to buy under those circumstances? Just ask yourselves the question—but this exhibition of militarist lordship is convincing many that the occupational authorities here are prepared to go even one step further in their Prussianistic policies than their colleagues in Japan and Chosen.

Now, listen to this. While they are destroying American missionary schools, listen to this account of the German schools—Japan, supposed to be an enemy of Germany and fighting her, supposed to be an ally of America, is abolishing American schools and permitting German schools to continue.

GERMAN MISSION UNTOUCHED.

An interesting feature of the case is that, although the American mission in Tsingtao is thus being hindered, the German mission there is still allowed freedom to operate to the extent of its limited funds, and was allowed this freedom during the entire war, although the German missionaries never ceased to press in the most forceful language their pro-German sentiments. It is the old psychological principle that fear is the greatest breeder of hate, and that the worst-hated enemy is the one which is unconquered.

It is being speculated here whether or not Japan's haste in showing her authority and opposition to Christianity and Americans in Tsingtao will jar the Paris peace conference into a reconsideration of the question. Opinion is that if Japan has the matter finally closed beyond reopening, such actions will at least cost her the good will and congratulations of the nations subscribing to her success.

The American Presbyterian mission expects to be forced to dispose of its beautiful Tsingtao site and the costly buildings thereon at great sacrifice, and to give up its work of many years standing there.

Here is an American version:

THE AMERICAN VERSION OF THE TSINGTAO AFFAIR.

MAY 31, 1919.

Word has been received that Hugh O'Neill Boys' High School of the Presbyterian Mission in Tsingtao has been closed by order of the Japanese Tsingtao military government.

This action was taken after several weeks of continuous interference on the part of the police. While a single woman only was in the station a campaign of investigation was conducted by the gendarmerie, who insisted that a spy from Peking was being harbored in the school.

This campaign began Sunday, May 20, and was continued until Sunday, May 27, when a posse of eight men came and searched the home of the principal, Wang Shou-ching, and the school office. The gendarme have also persistently interrupted the work of the station by visiting and interrogating the missionaries in their homes.

On May 28 the entire teaching staff, American and Chinese, were summoned to appear at the courthouse and threatened with punishment if they failed to appear. This left the school with no overseer, and immediately after the staff had left a force of seven soldiers appeared and took possession of the school. They took pictures of the building and posted a military guard inside the schoolhouse.

At the courthouse the teachers, foreign and Chinese, were arraigned before the civil administrator and his staff and two police officers. An order from the commanding general was read in Japanese, Chinese, and English demanding that, because of disturbances and crimes—the nature of the crimes were not mentioned—and for the sake of peace, the school must be closed at once and all teachers and pupils sent home within 10 days.

A second order was read and delivered to Mr. Wang Shou-ching, the principal, banishing him from Tsingtau for three years, emphasizing the heinousness of his crime, but giving no hint as to what his crime was except that his presence in Tsingtau threatened the peace. Mr. Wang has been in the service of the mission for many years and has a good reputation and a clear record. He is a peaceable man, taking no part in politics, and has shown every sign of being scrupulously careful at this time. Thus without trial or conviction he has been condemned and banished in disgrace as a dangerous criminal.

On May 28 and 29, a day and night military guard was maintained in the schoolhouse, forbidding any classes, and watching every movement of teachers and pupils. And now even though the school is dispersed, and the schoolhouse empty, the military guard still holds possession of the school building.

Also on May 13, five Japanese soldiers carrying their guns visited the mission girls' school at Ta Sin Tan, a village eight li from the Lan-Tswen railroad station. The principal demurred at their entrance, but they demanded admission, so the principal finally took them to a classroom. They, however, insisted upon wandering off in ones and twos, going wherever they pleased. The girls fled to their rooms and locked their doors, and the soldiers still peeped in the windows.

There is being conducted a persistent campaign of villifying and reviling Europeans and Americans, especially missionaries, by the local Japanese papers, which are printed both in Japanese and Chinese.

Mr. President, I have here a news item printed in the North China Star, a Chinese publication, which I think shows what is going on. It shows the propaganda which I have briefly outlined. I read from the paper mentioned of August 4, 1919:

Considerable irritation is felt by Chinese here—

That is at Peking—

at a series of resolutions recently passed by the Japanese residents at Fangtze, a town in Shantung along the Shantung Railway, which resolutions it is believed have been officially instigated and are to be passed by all Japanese communities in Shantung, and possibly in China.

The irritation is felt not at the mere passing of resolutions, which it is admitted even the three tailors of Tooley Street have a right to pass if they be so minded, but at the believed official instigation and at the extreme demands embodied in the resolutions, which are roughly as follows:

(1) That all agreements between China and Japan concerning Shantung must be upheld to the letter.

(2) That all important points along the Shantung Railway should be opened to international trade.

I will show you a little later on what a camouflage that is, though it sounds rather good.

(3) That Japanese troops should be maintained along the line of the Shantung Railway.

(4) That the Japanese gendarmery along the railway should be at least doubled in strength.

(5) That Japanese currency should be legal tender in Shantung.

(6) That the boycott directed against Japanese goods should be terminated.

(7) That China should indemnify Japan for all losses sustained in consequence of the boycott.

(8) That a zone within 20 kilometers of the railway should be administered by Japanese police.

(9) That the privileges formerly enjoyed by Germany with respect to mining within 30 kilometers of the railway and within a certain radius of Poshan, Chichuan, and other districts should be granted to Japan.

With respect to the second demand—

Now, let us see what that was. The second demand was "that all important points along the Shantung Railway should be opened to international trade."

With respect to the second demand it is pointed out that at practically all the places that it is suggested should be opened to foreign trade, Japanese trade has, during the period of the war, strongly entrenched itself, and by compulsory sales of property made by the Chinese all the best business sites have been acquired by Japanese, so that to open these places to foreign trade would be a farce, except for the Japanese.

Mr. President, later on I shall show you that the same thing happened in Korea. The Japanese are able to buy any piece of property in China they want. As they did in the case of Korea, they manipulate the finances of the country until it is impossible for a native to have any money; they call it all in. They compel them to take paper money and to pay their taxes in a kind of money which they do not possess and can not get unless they get it from the Japanese. In order to get it from the Japanese they must sell their property, and they must sell it at the price that the Japanese put on it. That was worked to a finish in Korea; it is being worked right now in the territory that Japan is so anxious to give up to China.

Mr. President, missionaries of the various Christian churches of America, who have spent the best part of their lives in China and in Korea, have given me their personal testimony of cases of which they had personal knowledge of hundreds and thousands of Koreans who were in this way compelled to leave the country. They could not pay the taxes; they could not get any money that would be received with which to pay the taxes. They had to go to the Japanese to get such money. There was a man there who was ready to give it to them, but he had to have a deed to the property before they could get the money. If they would not give the deed, the Japanese would sell the property for taxes and get it in that way. That is what is going on there. This article continues:

With respect to the fifth demand, it is pointed out that a beginning has been made with the introduction of Japanese currency by the refusal of the railway to accept anything but Japanese bank notes for the payment of freight or of passenger tickets, and even when large sums are paid by check, they have to be paid by checks on Japanese banks.

How long would America live if some other Government came into our midst and ousted the justices of the peace, ousted the county clerk and the county judge and the district judge and the supreme judge, put their officials in their places, then took our railroads and said, "When you want to pay freight on your goods, if you are permitted to do business at all, you must give a check, and if you give a check it must be on one of my banks"? How long would our banks last under that method of doing business? How long will the Chinese banker live when the Japanese will not accept checks on any other than a Japanese bank? The article says further:

Moreover, it is pointed out, the Japanese have prepared the way for the introduction of their own currency by buying out of the Province all the copper cash, a transaction that it is estimated has brought millions of yen profit to the Japanese.

With respect to the mining rights along the railway, it is pointed out that although originally Germany had exclusive mining rights in a zone of 30 kilometers on each side of the railway, these rights were absolutely canceled in July 1911, and the exclusive mining rights at many points not in the railway zone were also canceled, so that what the Japanese resolutions demand is something a great deal more than what Germany enjoyed when she was ousted from the Peninsula.

There is, of course, general criticism of the other demands, as indicative of Japanese militaristic ideas, but the main specific criticism is directed against the foregoing points, and the fact that they are evidently officially indorsed, and thus reveal the hollowness of Japanese alleged promises in Paris and Washington.

W. S. R.

Mr. President, let us suppose that, although living, as we supposed, under the laws of America, we were weak and unarmed and Great Britain came over here and took our railways, ousted all of our officials and put Britishers in their place, so that we had to go before them in our own country to get justice, and then she should say, "You can not do business with American banks; you have got to do business with British banks; you have got to pay your taxes in British money; we will not accept American money." How long would we live, and what would we think? Mr. President, is it any worse to practice that kind of oppression upon weak China than it would be upon America? I want every American citizen to take home with him the thought of the Golden Rule and ask himself, "How would I like it if I were weak and some greater power worked its will upon me in this kind of a fashion?"

I desire now to quote from a Japanese paper, published in the Chinese language, attacking the school and the church. I am going to read only a small part of it to indicate the character of the propaganda which is going on:

From the beginning the Christian church in China has been unreasonable and guilty of violence. History proves this. All of China's troubles and the loss of national sovereignty are due to the church. It is not necessary to specify these troubles, for all the Chinese know about them. Originally Christianity was an important religion, but to-day it is extremely corrupt. The intellectual leaders of Europe realize that the Great War was due to the decline of the church.

I wish the ministers about whom the Senator from North Dakota was talking would read the Japanese propaganda now going on in China, in which the central fire always is directed against the Christian religion and the Christian church. They could not then escape the truth of my statement that it is a part of the Japanese propaganda; it is a part of the religious belief of the Japanese that paganism under the jurisdiction of the Mikado will eventually rule this earth and that everything standing in the way will be sacrificed and destroyed.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator to say that the statement was made by the Japanese publication from which he has read that originally the Christian religion was sound and good?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator must understand that what I have read is from a Japanese publication in the Chinese language intended to be circulated amongst the Chinese. It is propaganda.

Mr. GRONNA. But, at any rate, it is a confession that originally the Christian religion was good?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. Does it, then, say that the practice of the Christian religion has become corrupt?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; it says, for instance—I only read a part of it; it all runs along the same line—

The intellectual leaders of Europe realize that the Great War was due to the decline of the church—

Blaming the war on the church.

Mr. GRONNA. Not on religion, but on the church.

Mr. NORRIS. On the church.

Mr. President, I have here an exceedingly interesting letter from an American Presbyterian missionary. It is a lengthy letter, and I do not want to take up the time of the Senate in reading all of it; but, in the hope that some student of this question will want to get to the bottom of it and get his information from first-hand, I am going to print it in the RECORD. It goes on to show just what Japan has been doing and what she is doing now. It comes from a Christian man whose name I am not at liberty to divulge, but as to whom I have the best of evidence that he is in every way trustworthy. I can not divulge his name, because, as has been said to me in many a letter, and personally by many an individual who expects to go back, their usefulness would be absolutely ended if it were known that they had given information as to conditions over there.

It is not true, Mr. President, that these missionaries in Korea or in Japan have incited rebellion. It is not true; but they all believe in education. That is part of the Christian religion. That is part of their work. They are spreading the English language, in addition to other things. They are having schools educating the people as well as giving religious instruction; and that, in addition to their religious preaching, is very objectionable to the Japanese.

This missionary has been over there a good deal of his life. I am going to to read a few extracts from his letter. One of them is as follows:

The Japs hate American missions in China with a special virulence. They—the missions—interfere with Koreanizing China.

And I would not have any respect for a religion that would not do that. These missionaries, when they see some one suffering, go to their relief, whether they are heathen or Christian, whether they are Japanese or Chinese or American or what not; and whenever they do that for one of the victims of the Japanese, they immediately get into trouble.

They—

Meaning the Japs—

have recently kicked one station's educational work out of Tsingtau, arresting the missionaries, clerical and ladies, leading them before their inquisitors, banishing the Chinese principal and Chinese teachers, and sealed up the boys' high school, an expensive brick and stone plant, the gift of Mr. Hugh O'Neill, of New York City—all this without any justification, on a false charge and with no chance of defense. By their soldiers terrorizing our girls' high school, they have also broken that up. It is many miles west, outside of the German "Gebiet," which alone was supposed to be taken over by the Japs.

This man tells us that these things have been done away beyond anything that the Germans have ever had, as far as territory is concerned.

Here is another quotation:

In every important city they have an inspired newspaper in the vernacular, each of which continually reiterates two lies in every conceivable variation. First, America is the sly enemy of China; and, second, China ought to walk into the friendly embrace of Japan to escape the insidious plans and spoliation that America plans. At the same time, just as Germany tried by "frightfulness" to break the morale of the people whose land she coveted, so her apt pupil here, by immense quantities of illicitly used opium, morphine, cocaine, and other dopes, peddled all through this Province and China, and by thousands of Jap prostitutes brought into the cities and market towns and villages of this Province and outside, is systematically and with an immense accrument of wealth breaking up the spirit of these people to resist by the tens of thousands. It is my business to itinerate through the villages among the people. I know. The German railroad is used for these "economic privileges," and China is helpless to resist, just as she is to resist the use of that railroad to rush Chinese grains and salt and produce out of the country to Japan, via Tsingtau and other ports, north and south, that Japan dominates. This same "prostitute" weapon was recently used by the Jap Government to drive the educational work of our mission out of its fine compound in Tsingtau, by ringing it around with an extensive Government-run red-light district.

Listen to that, Mr. President. Are we going to give our approval, by the ratification of this treaty, to the imposition of such things upon an innocent people? Are we going to take a step that will make it possible for Japan to continue this conduct through all time?

The writer of this letter says, in substance, that to drive out the educational work of the missionaries from its fine home, from its churches and its schools, they practically put around it a ring of prostitutes, so as to make it untenable by respectable people. I might stop here to say that Japan has done a big business along this line. She takes the prostitutes into China. She will do like this man says she did with the mission. She will establish a house of prostitution in the very center of the city, probably, if she can accomplish something by doing so, and she does it for money. She charges each one of the inmates of those houses of ill fame and gets taxation from it. She makes a large amount of money, besides the effect that it will have upon the people where these things are pushed and forced; yet we are practically asked to approve it, not for a month or a day, but forever.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I assume that the missionaries from whom the Senator from Nebraska is quoting are citizens of the United States?

Mr. NORRIS. This letter is written by an American citizen; yes, sir.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print the entire letter of this missionary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

A PARISH IN EAST SHANTUNG WITH 5,000,000 SOULS.

SHANTUNG PROVINCE, NORTH CHINA.

Senators NORRIS and BORAH,
Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIRS: I am a member of the American Presbyterian Mission, located * * * have been there longer than any other foreigner, and know, sub rosa, conditions in the Province—political and economic—well. Like many other foreigners, before I came to the Orient, I was enamored of the Japs; but the longer I live here the more, like other foreigners, I see their cunning, duplicity, brutality, arrogance, and utter untrustworthiness in China. All nationalities resident in the Far East are practically a unit in condemnation of their aims, methods, and policies in China. This unique unanimity is not caused by German propaganda but by the mean, detestable things that the Japanese Government and its creatures are daily doing here in carrying out its policy of unjustifiable aggression. Japan has tried to blame many revelations of her dirty deals off on "German propaganda."

Since Japan's recent diplomatic triumph at Paris she has thrown off the mask here as to her carefully worked out, sinister policy in China; she is turning heaven and earth in a skillful world propaganda of lies to fool her western allies and cover up her intent to continue to make her "economic privileges" mean political domination. They do in Shantung, as Americans can furnish you many detailed accounts in proof. Jap press reports and smooth, smiling, titled Jap after-dinner speakers and magazine writers and diplomatic and consular agents are staking everything on trying to befuddle the American public and make it think that "economic privileges" and "political domination" are two different things. But, for Japan, in Manchuria, Mongolia, Chihli, Fukien, Formosa, Korea, and Shantung they are one and the same. If you hang to this point (using some of the many available facts of history, which are being made every day in these provinces and which American missionaries and business men can furnish you) and if you drive this sinister fact into the consciousness of America—not letting the Japs switch you off by any of their many specious, lying arguments—you may help to avert and save another world war that is arising from the Orient, due to the conscienceless ambition and militaristic power of the Asiatic Prussian. Experience proves that no word of Japan in China can be trusted.

Even the Germans allowed the Chinese, according to treaty, to have responsible officials at Tsingtau in the customs, post office, and telegraph administrations; and to police all the stations of the great railroad. The Japs (in contravention of the "rights" they claim to have inherited from the Germans) have kicked out the Chinese. The Germans, by their "economic concessions," dominated the Province politically; but the Japs—by numberless political usurpations all over the Province; by a process of frightfulness; by land seized and business squeezes; by forced purchases or seizures of natural resources; by persecution of Christians (both leaders and peasants); by the break-up of American mission educational work—have far transcended any aggressions of which the Germans were guilty; and thereby strengthened a Jap strangle hold on Shantung far exceeding the one Germany had.

The Japs hate American missions in China with a special virulence. They—the missions—interfere with Koreanizing China. They have recently kicked one station's educational work out of Tsingtau, arresting the missionaries, clerical and ladies, leading them before their inquisitors, banishing the Chinese principal and Chinese teachers, and sealed up the boys' high school, an expensive brick and stone plant, the gift of Mr. Hugh O'Neill, of New York City—all this without any justification, on a false charge, and with no chance of defense. By their soldiers terrorizing our girls' high school, they have also broken that up. It is many miles west, outside of the German "Gebiet," which alone was supposed to be taken over by the Japs.

The Japs have a great wireless plant, big brick and stone barracks full of soldiers, and a compound like a fort in this and many other centers of China—each gripping the throat of a strategic section.

In every important city they have an inspired newspaper in the vernacular, each of which continually reiterates two lies in every conceivable variation. First, America is the sly enemy of China; and, second, China ought to walk into the friendly embrace of Japan to escape the insidious plans and spoliation that America plans. At the same time, just as Germany tried by "frightfulness" to break the morale of the peoples whose lands she coveted, so her apt pupil here, by immense quantities of illicitly used opium, morphine, cocaine, and other dopes, peddled all through this Province and China, and by thousands of Japanese prostitutes brought into the cities and market towns and villages of this Province and outside, is systematically and with an immense accrument of wealth breaking the spirit of these people to resist by the tens of thousands. It is my business to itinerate through the villages among the people. I know. The German railroad is used for these "economic privileges," and China is helpless to resist, just as she is to resist the use of that railroad to rush Chinese grains and salt and produce out of the country to Japan, via Tsingtau and other ports, north and south, that Japan dominates. This same "prostitute" weapon was recently used by the Japanese Government to drive the educational work of our mission out of its fine compound in Tsingtau, by ringing it around with an extensive Government-run red light district.

Inclosed is Document "A," a sample of the daily program of vituperation of the Japanese Government inspired press in China against Americans and their legitimate institutions in China, which institutions are welcomed by the Chinese. No lies are too absurd and blatant to be hashed up for the Chinese, as, e. g., "American missionaries conceal large quantities of opium on their compounds and sell it illegally to Chinese"—"they offer large monetary rewards to Chinese to assassinate Japs and promise them immunity from punishment"—"they furnish them money for anti-Japanese propaganda," etc.

Japan, by her cunning propaganda, has succeeded in impressing the world that she "made a sacrifice in the interest of peace and harmony on the race equality issue." Japan has sacrificed nothing. We, in the Far East, know that was a successful smoke screen thrown out to cover her steal of Shantung. Japan has gotten everything that she has thus far gotten by riding rough-shod over other Oriental races and states and governments. She more completely ignores race equality and the rights of other peoples than any other State except Germany. Whenever she gets in the claws of her "economic privileges" she crowds all other nationalities to the wall. Wherever she has conquered alien territory the business of other nationalities is sniffed out, e. g., in Korea and Formosa.

Japan is fast drawing the net to possess herself of all Manchuria, Outer Mongolia, Chihli, Shantung, and Fukien Provinces—2,000,000 square miles; one-half the area of the United States. And, increasingly in these areas, she crowds all other nationals to the wall, despite her treaty promises.

Another foreign firm at Tsingtau, almost the last one, has just been knocked out by Japan's observance (?) of the "open door" economic policy. See news item "B."

A matter that is maddening to all non-Japs in the Far East is for Japan to talk blandly on to the world about the "Concessions Japan is making to China in Shantung." It is as if all the New England States and New York had been given by the Big Five to Canada, our ally in the war, for Canada's services, plus nearly one-third the population of the United States, plus vast natural resources, and then as if Canada made vague verbal statements (never in writing) as to the future possibility of giving back this colossal plunder, and designating her action as gracious "concessions to United States." See "C."

If Japan were cornered into making a statement (written) as to when she would return "Kraochon," it would have no worth in the eyes of all dwellers in China, for they know from China's experience with Japan that Japan always demands, never concedes; Japan would give only a shell (to keep pace with the uninitiated outside world) and keep the meat.

If you could visit Tsingtau, you would see that attached statement "D," by Japanese representatives in Washington, is one tissue of lies. Japs have so remapped the city and environs and so removed the business, so seized Chinese premises and so occupied foreign business sites, even moving the railroad and station centers, that no business is possible outside of the "Jap settlement." They have even put the water supply off in the mountains, in their settlement.

(1) The "gains" of China in any settlement with Japan are a farce.

(2) Note the definiteness (?) of Jap official declaration "as soon as possible." China presses Japan for a definite answer. Why does Japan wait? "As soon as possible" means until Japan can slip another of her planned nooses around China's neck.

(3) The "German" railroad had many Chinese stockholders in it, was run by thousands of Chinese, from top to bottom, except a few German administrators. The Japs have kicked out all the Chinese.

(4) Tsingtau as a German "fortified port" had very few cannon, mostly old guns of the style of, and relics from, the Franco-Prussian War—no chance against the bigger guns and united power of Jap army and navy. In a few years Tsingtau, under joint German-Chinese customs management, had leaped from twenty-second place (in the annual revenue it turned over to China—after Germany took out 20 per cent) to fifth place, being exceeded only by Shanghai, Tientsin, Canton, and Foochow. Under Japan's "open trade to the world" "without discrimination," the business of the Japs is very unsatisfactory and non-Jap business has been driven out by the mean, cunning tactics of the paternal Jap Government.

Everybody who knows the local conditions knows that no "internation settlement" could exist under conditions cooked up by the Japs. Foreign business men say they would not risk it.

(5) The Germans, after the Russo-Jap War, did not "exercise the right of stationing troops in Kraochow" (which is a walled city some distance westward outside the "Gebiet"). But the Jap troops have overrun and terrorized the whole Province, every day committing fresh outrages in a Province as large as France, where they have no more right to exercise authority than in Pennsylvania.

(6) No one of any nationality in China has any faith in Japan's suggestion or pledge to administer anything "jointly" with China. The principal departments of the Chinese Government are now nominally administered by Chinese, but really by high officials of the Jap Government. That Government has subsidized and made into its agents many apparently innocuous Jap companies to buy up something like two-fifths of the natural resources of China—just as Germany had such companies to despoil Belgium and France. Nobody out here imagines that Japan will administer these illegal holdings "jointly" with China. Japan gets these concessions without the consent or even knowledge of the cabinet or the parliament.

Document "E" means that Japan will agree to negotiate with China in re Shantung's restitution to China if, or when, China will first agree to be bound hand and foot, for the 18 Provinces and the outlying dependencies. What use then to talk about Shantung? If China fulfills the terms of the 21 demands of 1915 as the condition of Japan's "restitution of Shantung," then China will have lost her independence. Yet this is what Japan demands in "E."

In the eyes of the Chinese and foreign residents of the Far East the reason advanced for America's delegation yielding at Paris to the threats of Japan and to the recent agreements of European powers with Japan amounts to this: "They did China a great wrong, therefore America must do a wrong also to a sincere and innocent and weak ally." If the price of keeping Japan in the "big five"—a militaristic, imperialistic Government that plans, by the power of the mailed fist, only outrage upon peaceable-minded neighbors—is China as her spoil, then Japan had better have left the peace conference. See document "F."

In reality of control Japan possesses Shantung; but in justice, according to international law, Germany forfeited her "rights" in Shantung by virtue of China's declaration of war. The Chinese, therefore, ask how Japan can legally give Shantung to China. See document "G."

In every instance when it has been necessary in the interests of justice for China to be heard abroad, the Japs who control the Far East news service get in their false report first to the world, holding back the Chinese account. Even if it be a difficulty with foreigners, the foreigners on Chinese soil, using Chinese news service, get left, as the Japs, through their spy system, suppress or garble the telegraphic and cable accounts. Remember the Jap account of the "Tientsin incident." They garbled the entire story and held back the American account. See document "H" in re preceding point.

The Japs have succeeded in ousting the civil governor from Shantung and getting one of their henchmen put in his place, as well as many country magistrates. One of the first results of that is the proclamation of martial law here, in order to suppress anti-Jap agitation. See document "I."

The inclosed document "J" is a typical illustration of how the Japanese Government uses its native pastors, religious sects, and Y. M. C. A. to meddle in Chinese affairs in China, seeking to intimidate the young Chinese, as well as the older, militaristic officials.

The Japanese Government is behind all these "spontaneous" movements of its subjects in China in the same way that Germany was behind the same fake movements of its subjects in places coveted. Note in documents "K" and "L" that a Jap "counselor of the Japanese foreign office" has been visiting the Jap colonies all along the Shantung Railroad, 280 miles in length, and stirring up the Jap subjects to petition the Japanese Government for a "few items" in Shantung. Fantze (L) is about six hours by railroad west of Tsingtau. Here the Japs, as at many other places, have great stone and brick barracks full of troops, have seized the coal mines that Germany re-ceded to China; have an extensive colony, many of whom are Jap prostitutes, who have forced the British Government to move its emigration bureau and the British-American Tobacco Co. its plant; also forcing many Chinese to clear out of that region. Please return "K" and "L" to me.

Document "M" shows to what extreme the Japanese consul generalate in the capital of Shantung has gone in high-handed action to intimidate and frighten the people. Gen. Ma Leang, the new dictator there, is a Jap tool, has a Jap wife, is supplied by the Japs with Korean opium and Jap geisha girls. Note the tortures, executions, and what Ma Leang says about our American university in this city.

As per inclosed document "N," Viscount Uchida, Japanese minister of foreign affairs, has a three-plank platform outlined to deceive the American Senate. It can fool no one who knows the local situation.

Keep your eye on this new "Japanese Oriental Colonization Corporation," a Japanese Government subsidized company of large capital to exploit Siberia, Manchuria, Chile, Shantung, Kiangsu, and the Philippines. An earlier one, organized by the Japanese Government, prepared Formosa and Korea for the later "coups de main." And Fulsien Province, opposite Formosa, is a plum about ripe to be shaken down into the capacious loot lap of Japan, already ripened by this O. C. C. See document "O."

Your esteemed colleague, Senator LODGE, has earlier had considerable collateral information on Japan's doings in Shantung sent him.

Please do not quote me in public, as the Japanese Government will use that fact to harm our American mission in China.

Hoping to receive a reply, assuring you that many men of all nationalities in China are with you in your efforts for justice to the weak ally.

Respectfully, yours,

_____.

I am 100 per cent American, father a northern officer in Civil War, grandfather a captain in War of 1812. I have helped to enlist many Chinese in the allied cause.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it will be interesting to the business men of the United States to know what is going to happen over there also. To my mind, that is a secondary consideration, not nearly so important as the other that I have mentioned; but if the American business man thinks this treaty is going to bring business to America from China he is going to be woefully disappointed. He has got to go through the Japanese to get it.

I have here a letter written by the secretary of an American business organization in an important Chinese city. I commend it to those who want to consider this question from the business aspect. I will read an extract from it:

It is difficult for the American people to realize the feeling that this decision—

He is speaking of the decision in Paris giving Shantung to Japan—has provoked in the minds of the Chinese people. It has had about the same effect that the giving of the State of California or of New York State to a foreign power would provoke among the people of the United States.

And, Mr. President, is it not just the same? Is it not just as bad? Again, ask yourselves what you would do if the State of New York were given to some foreign Government by this treaty. You might not have any particular love for New York, but you would die by inches, you would be in favor of going to war until the last man and the last dollar were gone, before you would surrender a thing of that kind. And yet the same thing is being demanded of China, and we wonder why she boycotts Japanese goods.

Germany's control in Shantung Province, while irksome, had nothing of the present effect, because Germany was on the other side of the world, and the weight of the iron hand in China was light.

Japan is an Asiatic power, and with her control established in Shantung Province, on the China mainland, Chinese people see the fate of Korea, Formosa, and Manchuria before them. When Japan first intervened in Korea she announced that it was for the purpose of establishing the independence of the country. Now, after 20 years, the Korean people are engaged in a life-and-death struggle to gain their liberty from Japan.

Let me read another extract from this letter:

The adoption of the efficient German system in Japan had its advantages in the past, but now, in the light of new understanding, it has its distinct disadvantages. Japan is now dominated by a militarism that is potentially just as dangerous as was the German militarism that America helped to crush. The Korean Peninsula furnished the first stepping stone, and then followed Manchuria, Shantung Province, and Fukien Province of China, are now to follow unless something is done by America to prevent it. Japan is now working to fix her control on the Asiatic mainland. With China's unlimited resources of minerals, foodstuffs, and man power under the control of Japanese militarists the next war is bound to be in the Pacific, and America is certain to be drawn into it. With the great distance involved, and with the almost certain racial element involved, it doesn't require much imagination to foresee the future.

In the archives of the State Department at Washington is to be found a complete record of Japanese underhand intrigue in China since the beginning of the war. In the correspondence of the American Legation at Peking and the American consulate at Tsing-tau is all the information that America needs for "proof" as to Japan's real purposes in China.

It is to the future vital interests of the American people that these matters be made public.

Mr. President, we know what happens to us when we want information. We know that we are not given the information by the President and by the Secretary of State. We know a great deal of it is there. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], I believe, called attention to one particular instance this morning of great importance, where even the Senate had asked for information bearing directly on this particular question, and we were refused by the President, after he stood on yonder platform and so solemnly and eloquently said that everything he had in his possession, and all the information that he could get, would be at the disposal of the Senate in the consideration of this treaty.

Here is just a little newspaper item calling attention to what the Japanese are doing:

Mr. Wang Na and a number of other parliamentarians have addressed an interpellation to the Government regarding Japanese high handedness in Shantung.

The Government's attention is called to the recent outrageous actions on the part of the Japanese bad characters in the Province and along the Kiaochow-Tsinan Railway, such as the attack on the Chinese Canning Co. in Tsinanfu; arrest of Wang Chi-chien, a student of the Shantung Christian University; arrest and torture of two villagers, etc. The Japanese authorities concerned are giving a deaf ear to all appeals regarding these matters. The Government is asked to make known what measures it has decided to take to appease the indignant people and avoid further trouble.

Mr. President, I simply read that as a matter of news, calling attention to the fact that in China, where we are led to believe by the Japanese, at least, and by those who advocate this treaty, that China still rules as a nation, when all through it the laws are administered and are made by Japanese, even now people are punished and laws enforced as they may see fit, and punishments inflicted often that are inhuman.

Now, I am going to read a letter from a missionary that was published in the North China Star last July. He says:

WEIHSIEN, SHANTUNG, July 21.

EDITOR OF NORTH CHINA STAR,
Tientsin, China.

DEAR SIR: Our usual summer Bible school for evangelists finished a profitable session a week ago. An incident connected with its closing may have some general interest.

Just get in your minds what this is. There was a summer Bible school where the missionaries came in from their various fields of activity to spend a few weeks in study and getting Christian instruction. They close their operations, like a teachers' institute, and here are three of those men starting back to their parishes, you might say, where their work demands their attention.

The letter continues:

Three evangelists, departing from the mission for their several fields of work, at a small railway station to the east of this decided to take a train for a part of their journey. Arrived at the station, they were at once challenged as to what their business was. They replied, "Christian preachers." At once all their belongings were searched. Upon one of them was found one small leaflet on the love of country.

Now, think of that. That is all they found on these men. They searched them, as they used to do, and are doing yet, in Korea, with those who have not been driven out. At the slightest pretense they will search a missionary to see what they can find. They searched these men, their clothing, their baggage, and everything they had, and the only thing they could find upon which to base a charge was a small leaflet on "The love of country." That is a crime there. Japan does not want the Chinese to love their country. She expects to take them over, and anybody who is advocating patriotism is an enemy of Japan, the same as in Korea. This continues:

Upon one of them was found one small leaflet on the love of country which some one had given him (for the mission does not circulate any political literature). It was nothing more than a hymn or poem urging all Chinese to love their country, and in it was no other mention of Japan than the sentence that every effort should be made by China to save Tsingtao to China. But this was a grave crime in the eyes of the gendarmes. The possessor was at once seized. He was so unfortunate as to ask the others to tell his family, when they, too, were seized, and the three taken to the Japanese court at Fangtzi and put into small, hot, dark prison cell, where they were confined for three days. They were compelled to pay for their own food, $1 apiece being charged them for that time. They had neither bed nor chair, and were allowed no communication with the outside world, though they managed to rip off a pocket from a garment and write me a note, apprising me of their predicament—which was gotten out to me by stealth. At the second appearance before the examining officer they were treated to a tirade against Christianity. He told them that the Japanese were the ones who really loved China, and they were the dupes of the American missionaries. It can be imagined how convincing these professions of love would be, reinforced as they were by three days of unjust confinement in a hot, dark prison cell.

You must remember this letter is written by a missionary—

Mr. President, I spoke a while ago of the boycott of Japanese goods instituted by the Chinese. When the news got into China that the peace conference in Paris had given Shantung to Japan it created an excitement in China that I presume has never been equaled in the history of that country. As it percolated through the country, and the people found it out, there was an intense excitement that had never before been equaled. That is natural. Every citizen of the Chinese Republic fears Japan. They know what Japan has done in the past. They know what she did in Korea. They knew about these demands. They knew about the treaty forced on them. They knew that Japan had covetous eyes on them, and that she was going to take China unless she was restrained at the peace conference. And so, when the word came that Shantung had been given to Japan, and that even the President of our country, representing the great American Republic that she loved more than any other country, had acquiesced in it, the excitement in China could not be overestimated.

The Chinese refused to buy Japanese goods. Part of the propaganda of Japan is that the missionaries are to blame for that. I deny that, on the testimony of every missionary with whom I have talked. It would not be necessary. What would happen to us under those circumstances? Think again of ourselves. Take it again to our own home, our own country, and to our own firesides. Would we buy Japanese goods under those circumstances?

So a boycott naturally spread against Japanese goods. Now, these people are being arrested. Missionaries have been arrested, and other people have been arrested, with a charge made against them of having instituted the boycott. Japanese citizens in these places are now demanding that the Chinese Government shall pay the loss sustained by the merchants who can not sell their goods. Mark you, that is the next step. That will be part of the "negotiations," if we approve this treaty. When Japan "negotiates" with China about taking Shantung over one of the claims will be that the Chinese will have to pay these Japanese merchants for every sale that they claim they lost on account of the boycott, and it will be decided by the Japanese; the price will be fixed by them, the consideration will be fixed by them, without consideration for China.

Here is a newspaper account of some of the arrests and the punishment of men charged with inciting the people to boycott Japanese goods. This was printed at Tsinan on August 5:

Three business men who had been leaders of 10-men teams organized for the promotion of the Japanese boycotts were executed at 5 o'clock this morning.

These men did boycott Japanese goods; they helped to organize the boycott, that is true. But they killed them because they did it. That is the punishment the Japanese are inflicting on the Chinese for that kind of a crime.

Two of these men, Dju Chuin-Hsiang and Dju Hsiu-liu, were brothers, a third brother being in Gen. Ma's body guard. The other man, Ma Yuin-ting, was a prominent man among the Mohammedans.

So it is not always, of course, Christians. All Chinamen entertained this intense feeling against Japan on this unjust decision in regard to Shantung, regardless of religion.

The other man, Ma Yuin-ting, was a prominent man among the Mohammedans, a doctor, 68 years old, who had formerly professionally attended both Gen. Ma and his wife.

Their activities in the Japanese boycott was the only charge against these men.

Though there was no accusation of crime, these three men were cruelly tortured, their bodies being burned with red-hot irons and their heads and chests slashed with swords in an attempt to make them confess to being traitors and robbers. When the tortures became unbearable the men were taken outside the city and shot.

Intimations have now been sent to the foreigners that they should keep off the streets in case further disturbances arise, and no one dares predict what the next few days may bring forth.

MA IS DICTATOR.

Gen. Ma Liang, who because of increased authority given him by the establishment of martial law in Tsinan, has assumed the rôle of a practical dictator, and is gaining an unenviable reputation.

Two days ago 300 students, including nearly 100 girls, were arrested and confined for several hours in the grounds of the First Normal School.

Gen. Ma appeared in person before them and accused them of being guilty, because of their disobedience to their own officials and threatened them with severe punishment and even with execution. He boasted of his "heavy sword of slaughter," saying that he was not afraid of anybody—merchants, students, officials, or the "white devils." He has formerly been very friendly to the Shantung Christian University, but in his address he stigmatized the university as being composed of "second devils," and said the foreign professors were only western propagandists and admonished the students to beware of trusting in the name of the institution, as it could in no wise protect them.

SHOTS FIRED INTO SCHOOL.

Presumably to further intimidate the students, on Monday, August 4, soldiers were sent for rifle practice to a gulley only about 200 yards from the dormitories of the university. The place is not a regular rifle range and target shooting has never been done there before. During the practice several bullets struck in the dormitories and might easily have resulted in fatalities. (North China Star.)

Here is another item of news that I want to commend to the business men who expect to get some share for our country and our merchants of the trade of the Far East. This is a dispatch from Peking to the North China Star, dated August 6:

The Japanese authorities at Tsingtau have given the Asiatic Petroleum Co.—

Which is an American company, I understand—

notice to quit their present site, on the ground that the presence of tanks and pipe lines to the wharf is detrimental to the public interest. Considering the great care that the Germans took in laying out the place, and the first consideration given to public interest in sanctioning buildings and other works, the excuse that the Asiatic Petroleum installation is detrimental to the public interest is considered farcical.

Here is a corporation, the Asiatic Petroleum Co., doing business in a city that was under the dominion of Germany, erecting its plant and its building at great expense at places designated by the German Government after careful examination and survey of the situation.

Now comes Japan and compels them to tear down the buildings, to remove the tanks, and to take everything away, giving as a reason that it is not the proper place. Consider two things, that whatever else may be said about the Germans, they were careful in their business relations, and no doubt when they designated this site to be used by this oil company, they did it after full consideration and after a full consideration of all the facts, and undoubtedly selected the proper place. Consider, second, that Japan is claiming that she is only going to hold this place temporarily. She is, oh, so anxious to give it back to China. She is just tumbling over herself to turn this over to China. Only in temporary possession, yet she makes this corporation remove their property, tear down their buildings, and practically go out of business. It is absolutely inconceivable that she should take this course if the pretensions she makes are halfway fair or halfway honest.

Mr. President, I have a letter written by an American missionary who has spent more than 12 years in Shantung. He has traveled all over that district. He has devoted all his time to the advancement of Christianity. I want to read some extracts from that letter. He is a man who knows. He is testifying from his personal knowledge. He is vouched for by the Far Eastern Bureau of New York, an organization that in my judgment would not, under any consideration, do anything that was dishonest or unfair in the consideration of this question. I do not know the man personally; I have never had any personal communication with him, and, for obvious reasons, since he is still there in that country and often in Japan, I will not disclose his identity. He says:

It seriously threatens the peace of the world now that Japan has practically drawn the net to possess herself of some 2,000,000 square miles of China's domain (Manchuria, Outer Mongolia, Chihli, Shantung, and Fukien); and that she now possesses two-fifths of China's natural resources.

Think of that, two-fifths of her natural resources.

Despite Japan's fair reiterations, daily given to the great powers, she has settled into the policy of getting possession of China's land and railroads and resources, at any cost, by any and every means, fair or foul; and keen students of many nationalities on the field can prove these means are mostly foul.

* * * * * * *

Shangtung is much more the keystone of China than Pennsylvania is of the United States. Because of its strategic location and because of its unique religious hold on one-fourth of all humans, its possession by one of two rivals North or South has repeatedly carried the other Provinces with it.

At present Shantung with its railroads forms the southern handle of a political nut-cracker; the northern handle is Manchuria with its railroads. The nut is the metropolitan Province of Chihli with its connecting railroads. Japan now possesses both handles, and practically controls the nut it is about to crack. That means all of North China, which has always controlled the rest of the land, gone to Japan.

The methods used by Japan in China as well as in Korea to gain her trade and political ascendancy are tricky, mean, and unfair, filling those who know these methods with indignation at the outrages perpetrated, and with contempt and detestation for the perpetrators. Following the example of their Prussian teachers, they systematically work to break the spirit of the people, whose land and possessions they covet, by destroying their monuments and terrorizing them by a policy of "frightfulness," which makes them give up their lands, stores, fisheries, orchards, gardens, and whatever else these Prussians of the Orient covet. They are past masters in taxing people (e. g., in Shantung) out of existence, and in hounding them into submission or flight, and then the Japanese squatters, got ready by the Japanese Government, are rushed into Shangtung by the tens of thousands to take possession of their ill-gotten gains.

I can not here take space to detail the sharp tricks, their regular practices, to get possession of crops in Shantung and the north and market them (e. g., contracting with peasants at a fair price and finally forcing them to sell at a fraction of that price); the practices used to drive non-Japanese foreign business out of the competition (e. g., by unfair cuts and secret rebates on the Shantung Railroad); the sly opening by steaming of business correspondence, extracting checks, bills of lading, drafts, etc., therefrom; delay of orders; nondelivery of mail; many kinds of artificial hindrance on transit of goods competing with Japanese.

A Japanese administration has been set up for many villages along the line of the railway in the Province outside the German concession; the Chinese guards, allowed the policing of the entire length of the railroad from east to west by the Germans, have been driven away; the actual boundary of the "Gebiet," established by treaty with Germany, has been illegally set over still farther into Chinese territory, though kept secret by the Japanese; the magistrates of many eastern counties of the 108 of Shantung have been terrorized and made to do what amounts to surrender of their authority; bogus revolutions are frequently worked up and led by Japanese and financed and equipped with Japanese money and arms, and these have systematically ruined a number of Shantung's most prosperous market towns and walled cities; the gentry under systematic harassment by Japanese bands have been blackmailed, robbed, and tortured, and some killed (when their relatives on short notice could not find the large sums demanded). These sums have ranged from $9,000 to $30,000. Many peasants have also been blackmailed for their small land holdings. New and unheard-of and extortionate taxes and licenses have been charged against the peasants in many sections. The peasants have been badly fooled and stirred up to rebel against the tax collectors of salt (almost the only source of Chinese Government revenue on which the Japanese have not got a hold), arms and ammunition being promptly furnished them. The peasants have been and are continually hauled to the county yamens newly established by the Japanese, and there blackmailed and tortured in a variety of ways, e. g., walking barefooted on hot sheet iron, oil jammed down their throats with force pumps, bambooing, thumb stringing, etc. The Province has been largely cleared of copper cash (the real money of the peasants, and of intrinsic merit, has been everywhere bought up at a slight advance over its market value) and shipped to Japan—this business carried on openly by Japanese collectors against the proclamations of Chinese officials forbidding it, and worthless paper money of Japanese banks forced on the people across the length of the Province (as was earlier done at a like great profit by the Japanese Government in Formosa, Korea, Manchuria, and Fukien, and is now being done in Siberia's economic subjection to Japan). Japanese troops, fully accoutered, ostentatiously march through Chinese villages and cities far outside Japan's "Gebiet" and drag machine guns after them to overawe the people. Their spies, dressed as Chinese, fill the Province and continually stir up fights which result in "commissions" of Japanese and Chinese (being appointed to make settlement for loss of Japanese dignity). (These square-ups are sub rosa; Chinese officials are too ashamed to publish these episodes, and the Japanese don't want them to leak out, because revealing their aggression.)

Many false causes or reasons for fining and punishing and torturing and blackmailing the many villages along the railroad are cunningly worked up by the Japanese; e. g., their section hands cutting wires and accusing the simple-minded, terror-stricken peasants of the same; then many villages along the railroad are fined heavily for this bogus offense. I know of a case where they were fined two years in succession for the offense for which Japan forced prompt and costly settlement the year it was committed—though the offense was committed by the Japanese section hands. This creates a facile excuse for Japanese military governing reterrorization of the villages outside their jurisdiction throughout the Province.

Every railroad station the entire length of this long peninsular east and west lying Province has a Japanese garrison of greater or less size. At some of them immense permanent barracks of brick and stone have been erected and are occupied. Artificial excuses are constantly manufactured as to why more Japanese soldiers should dribble in to new centers.

That is only carrying out the news item that I read a while ago, of Japanese men meeting and passing resolutions demanding that additional soldiers be sent there.

There is no limit to their contemptible methods of bullying a humble, inoffensive peasantry, like placing their rifle range across a great trunk cart road in the middle of the Province (hundreds of li west of Tsingtao), and thereby causing the peasants and their carts, loaded, to go some distance out of their way to avoid being shot; taxing peasants who cross the railroad on big, intersecting wagon roads; commandeering food and supplies, and at markets taking things without pay or setting their own price, and wantonly destroying goods under their boots.

They took the railroads, and then, where there is a railroad crossing, they charged the Chinese for driving across the railroad. That is one way, this man says, that they have of raising funds.

Their stolen railroad is a hateful imperium in imperio that causes them to dominate this Province, as will others (for which they have forced secret concessions), give them paramountcy in other strategic sections of China. Under the treaty with Germany the Chinese Government had post-office and telegraph and customs inspectors and employees of authority stationed at Tsingtau. The Japanese have kicked these all out. They buy salt for almost nothing at the east end of the Province and smuggle it on their railroad across the Province to the capital at the west end, and there sell it at great profit. They ship immense quantities of arms and ammunition, of opium and morphine and cocaine and liquors to Tsingtau, and their spy peddlers distribute these all through the Province. And the Chinese Government dare not touch them, for fort, goods, trains, land, agents, procurers—all are sacredly "Japanese."

Many thousands of peasants and of city dwellers in the Province have been already ruined in property and broken in body and morale by the illicit sellings of these forbidden "dopes," as itinerating and medical missionaries and business men here can give you abundant evidence.

The Japanese begin with free "dopes" and charge increasingly for each succeeding dope. Against treaty, their dope shops have been established in many of the walled cities and market towns and even in the villages of this Province.

But worst of all is the systematic establishment of their Government-run prostitution houses all over the Province, not to speak of the principal cities of China. These girls are specially trained to serve Japanese interests politically and have enslaved a great company of officials, high and low, to Japan.

Mr. President, comment on that is necessary. The most despicable means that any human being could resort to would be such as is described by this missionary of 12 years' experience in Shantung. This instance given by this writer is not an isolated case. It is a common practice. It is one of the most disgraceful methods to obtain control of a people or country that has ever been resorted to any time in the history of the world. The business of prostitution is almost a governmental function with the Japanese, and, as this man says, they establish houses of prostitution, the inmates of which are exclusively Japanese, and then by enticing Chinese officials and other important personages into their web these Japanese prostitutes, who are in reality political agents of Japan, are thus enabled to intimidate and to control the activities of public officials and leading men who have fallen victims to their machinations.

In every Province they are trying to stir up every class of people against one another so as to render China still weaker against aggression; not only playing the northern generals off against those of the south, supplying both with Japanese gold and munitions, but inciting the Buddhists against the Taoists, stirring up Mohammedans in this and other Provinces, and leading the Mongol princes to revolt. Against the helpless protest of Chinese students, Japanese military engineers have openly surveyed and mapped Mongolia, Fukien, Shantung, and many other great sections; established in the last-named great domain the Japanese military stud farms as well as cattle and sheep ranches for Japanese Government military purposes, thus preparing mounts and beef and pelts for future military operations there.

